At its meeting of November 30, 1972, the Faculty Senate voted to extend the deadline for all changes in undergraduate registration (drop, add with the permission of the instructor, and exercise of the pass/fail option) to four weeks from the first day of classes. After consultations with the Registrar, Academic Deans, and the Academic Matters Committee, it has been decided that this new regulation would go into effect for this semester. The date in the Master Calendar pertaining to this deadline is hereby being changed to:

February 22, 1973: Last day for undergraduate students to add and/or drop a course without record.

February 23, 1973: Last day for students to exercise their pass/fail option.

Off-Broadway Review

NEW YORK (AP)—Off-Broadway openings monopolized first-nighter attention this week, and this is how reviewers rated the arrivals:

An adaptation of Ferenc Molnar's "The Play's the Thing," by P. S. Wodehouse, was approved by three of four examiners at the Roundabout Theater.

"Lemmings," a satiric revue at the Village Gate, collected four yes and two mixed notices; "Siamese Connections," at the Public Theater Annex, got one mixed and four adverse reports.

Footlight footnotes: "No, No, Nanette," closes on Broadway Sunday 4 after 861 performances . . . "The Last of Mrs. Lincoln" folded after 63 . . . opening of "Seesaw" has been postponed at least until March 7 as Michele Lee replaces Lainie Kazan in the femme lead and Michael Bennett takes over as director- choreographer . . . "Butley" starring Alan Bates travels to San Francisco and Los Angeles after the local run ends Feb. 24.

Chorale Needs Singers For Boston Philharmonia

This semester the University Chorale will provide an unusual opportunity for talented singers to perform with a professional orchestra. The Chorale will perform Schubert's Mass in E-flat with the Boston Philharmonia in April, both on their concert here as part of the Fine Arts Concert Series, and in Boston as part of the Philharmonia's regular concert season.

The Boston Philharmonia, an outstanding and widely acclaimed professional ensemble, is directed by John Nelson who, in addition to his duties with the Philharmonia, was recently appointed conductor at the Metropolitan Opera in New York.

The Chorale needs additional singers for this performance. The rehearsal schedule has been arranged so that one rehearsal per week--on Wednesday night from 6:00 to 8:00 will be devoted to the Schubert. Singers who join and attend this one weekly rehearsal will be able to participate in the Chorale's performance with the Philharmonia, which promises to be an unusually exciting and rewarding musical experience.

All interested singers are urged to come to Cottage C (the large white building on the hill behind Worcester Dining Commons) before or after Chorale rehearsals (Mon., Tues., and Thurs. from 4:40 to 6:00, and Wed. from 6:00 to 8:00 P.M.) for an audition.

Swimmers Edged, 60-53

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

Excitement and close, keen competition were present Wednesday when the UMass varsity swim team really shocked a confident Coast Guard team with their strength before yielding 60-53. Coast Guard was slated as a sure winner, but they weren't anticipating the depth of the young Minutemen team who are on their way up.

Everyone on the UMass team equaled or bettered his best time. They would have won too if one of their key men, Loomas, hadn't been sick and not able to give it all he had.

As usual high point of the meet was in the Diving Competition. Jeff Crouse placed first in both the one and three meter events. Paul Lelito won second in the one meter.

Minutemen dominated the 50 Freestyle. Dagnese placed first in 23.8 and Dick Blaisdell second. Dagnese again placed first in the 200 Backstroke time 2:18.7 and George Kwiecien second (his best time).

The Freestyle Relay Team of Boucher, Blaisdell, Ouellette, and Dagnese also overcame Coast Guard.

In almost all the events Minutemen were just touched out from gaining the high point places. An example of this was Boucher's third in the 200 Freestyle. His time was 2:38 against the winning time of 2:36.

Coast Guard's strength was in their Freestylers Speeding and Hull. The 200 Breaststroke clinched the meet for them, though co-captain Bob Okolita gave an outstanding effort, and was just edged out for place third.

Additional second place points were by co-captain Jack Tyler–100, Freestyle and Zulich—200 Butterfly.

Valuable third place points were grabbed by Bruce Taulor—100, Freestyle, Loomas 200 Individual Medley and 500 Freestyle, Jim Cinnamon—200 Butterfly, and Blaisdell—100 Freestyle.

This was the best meet of the season for the Minutemen swimmers who have shown a lot of progress in the past few weeks. Saturday they travel to M.I.T. for competition against a tough team. They hope to score between 30 and 40 points. Coming soon are the Yankee Conference Championships and dual meets with Tufts and U.R.I.

Hayes Inks Contract In Pro Track League

NEW YORK (AP)-Bob Hayes of the Dallas Cowboys, 1964 Olympic gold medal winner in the 100-meter dash, has signed a professional contract with the fledgling International Track Association, it was announced Thursday.

Michael O'Hara, president of the new group which plans to start competition in late March, said Hayes' contract covers 16 meets. Terms were not revealed.

Hayes, who set the current world record of 9.1 seconds for the 100-yard dash in 1963, will take part in special "Celebrity Challenge" events against other pro football athletes, as well as those from baseball, basketball and hockey, according to O'Hara.

O'Hara also announced the signing of Leon Coleman, a former Olympic high hurdler, Karl Salb, who won six NCAA shotput championships while at the University of Kansas, and John Doborth, who reaches 7 feet in the high jump consistently.

They join other ITA signees who include miler Jim Ryun, pole vaulter Bob Seagren and sprinters Jimmy Hines and Lee Evans.

Hayes, a standout wide receiver with the Cowboys, has been named three times to play in the National Football League's Pro Bowl.

In Dallas, Cowboys Coach Tom Landry said "I would rather have it not happen, but we're not going to hold Bob back. He has been out of track a long time and there always is apprehension he might pull a muscle. He's taking a risk because he hasn't prepared for a track meet in a long time.

Duarte Breaks Record Again As JVs Romp

By DOUG FIDLER

Greg Duarte scored a record-setting 39 points and added 18 rebounds to lead the UMass JV's to a 94-63 victory over the Rockwood Academy Stags last night in the Cage.

Duarte, hitting on 17 of 28 shots from the field and five of eight from the free throw line, broke the single game scoring record of 37 which he set last week against Dartmouth.

Mike Stokes pitched in with 20 points and 10 assists and Rick Boron hit on seven of nine attempts from the field and added a free throw for 15 markers.

After leading 37-24 at half, the JV's hit on 19 of their first 23 shots in the second stanza to break the game wide open.

Butch Anderson was high man for Rockwood with 18 points, and was followed closely by Sundance Rand with 17 and Fred McRae with 14.

The Minutemen are now 4-4 and will play St. Thomas More in the Cage Saturday afternoon at 5:30.

Track Team Takes On Huskies In Boston

By WALT POWERS

The UMass winter track team will find itself in hostile territory tomorrow when it finally returns to action after a six week layoff. In Northeastern, they'll face a talented, well-balanced team, possibly the best in New England, and they'll be running on N.U.'s short, narrow home track. Because of this, and glaring Minutemen weaknesses in the field events, Irwin Cohen's Huskies are heavily favored.

Most of the UMass scoring will come in the running events. The sprints should produce some tight "photo finish" matches. Marshall Pendleton has won his first two races in the sixty-yard dash; and Tony Pendleton, Tom Beland, and Dennis Busa are not far behind. In Butch Milton and Pete Sabia, though, they'll be facing some of the toughest competition of the season.

Jim Hennessey and John Mounger have done well in the hurdles this season. Hennessey has won both his starts thus far, but the huskies boast two hurdlers who've beaten his best time.

Steve Levine holds the UMass school record in the 600-yard dash. He'll be running against Paul Horrigan, one of the top 600' men in New England, and this race could produce the highlight of the meet. Barron Littlefield and Al Sawicki, who holds the freshman record in this event, give the minutemen added depth.

The distance races will extend the rivalry of the cross-country teams and should produce some tight, competitive duels. John Maloney makes his first start of the season in the 1,000'. He'll be pushed by teammate Devin Croft, who won his last outing at Yale, and freshman Peter Byron. The Huskies will probably send out Dave Goldsmith and Mike Hickey, both strong, formidable competitors.

Bill Gillin and Randy Thomas, the powerful one-two punch from last seasons cross-country team, will battle Joe Crowley and probably Dave Goldsmith in the mile.

Doug O'Connell, an experienced and consistent junior, will make his first track season start in the two-mile. He'll be joined by teammates Tom Maguire, the "experienced" freshman, and Paul Catano. Catano, a transfer student from Georgetown, could surprise. His 4:12'7 mile at Yale is the best UMass performance in that event so far this season.

UMass will have difficulty in the field events. John Osborne "Fosberry flopped" his way to victory in the high jump at Yale, but he and Mark Hughes will be facing stiffer competition this time out. In the long and triple jumps UMass will be hurt by the loss of Mike Geraghty. Ken Banda has been jumping consistently well in his first season of collegiate track, but after him, the ranks thin out. In the weight events and the pole vault, the Minutemen lack the depth and experience necessary to compete successfully against Northeastern.

It won't be an easy meet.

Wrestlers Set For Meet With Coast Guard Tomorrow

By JOHN BOCK

After a heartbreaking loss to Springfield the UMass matmen are off on the first of three away trips. This one will take them to New London, Connecticut, tomorrow for a duel with the U.S. Coast Guard Academy.

The Bears have sometimes been a problem for the Minutemen but this year haven't really shown the potential to do much harm. If nothing else they will be ready for an eight-minute bout. Last year UMass triumphed in the duel, held in the Cage, 28-5, winning all but one bout and tying one.

Coast Guard has a habit of wrestling their freshmen varsity for a good part of the year and then turning them loose to win the Freshmen New Englands, as they have for the past two years.

As it is not a real pressure meet, Coach Barr has done some juggling in order to let some of the team rest up and gain some strength for the Yankee Conference Meet, to be held a week from now at Rhode Island. Dave Amato will remain at 118 pounds and Mike McGlaughlin stays at 134.

Changes come, though, at 126 where Frosh Paul Rodriguez will fill in for Larry Reynolds to let him give those cartilage an extra chance to heal. Steve Rome will hang on to 142 but 150 will see Freshman Jim Jordan make his varsity debut.

Chris Cadwallader will move up to 158, Cliff Blom to 167, and Steve Benson to 177. John Connolly will take a break in cutting weight and stand in at 190 as Carl Dambman assumes the heavyweight position.

Metallo Drafted; Schubert Waits

Runningback Goes To Chiefs In 13th Round

By EARLE BARROLL

Dick MacPherson was addressing the Varsity M Club early in December when he took a letter from his jacket pocket and exclaimed, "This letter is from Paul Metallo. It's signed number 44 on your program, number one in your heart."

Immediately this became a jocular slogan around the football team. And yesterday afternoon at the Boyden football offices Mark Tripucka, who by trade is a quarterback, by personality a jester snuggled up to Metallo and said, "You may be number 44 on the program, but you're now number 13 in their hearts."

Paul Metallo's jump from one to 13 is without protest for the fleet halfback who set an array of UMass land records was picked in the 13th round of the National Football League Draft by the former Super Bowl champions and perennial league power Kansas City Chiefs.

MacPherson was a bit surprised by this late round selection. "I thought he'd go sooner," he said. "From the phone calls I received from the Chiefs, San Diego, Philadelphia and a few more teams I figured he'd go in rounds eight through ten. But I also understand that two area scouts rejected Paul and Steve (Schubert) and this hurt them when the draft came."

Metallo will be going to the Chiefs as a defensive back and return specialist. "His attraction to the Chiefs," explains MacPherson, "centers around Ed Podolak who not only carries the ball 25 times a game but also returns on the specialty teams which doesn't result in too long a life span in the pros."

MacPherson also feels that Metallo's best bet would be as a back up corner-safety for the Chiefs' who already have the excellent duo of Jim Marsallis and Emmit Thomas. It is without question that defending against the likes of an Otis Taylor or an Elmo Wright in practice has to make a Metallo a better cornerback in time.

Number 44 had an opportunity to speak with the Chiefs' dynamic leader Hank Stram yesterday. "He explained what I'd be doing," he relates. "I'll be reporting to the Chiefs' for three days of tests during the months of March, April and May."

Did he mention contract? "Yes, but not the exact terms. I'll be holding off until March to sign. Until then I'll be working on my speed (9.4) and strength, getting myself ready for the chance I've always be waiting for."

Metallo is finished with his education at UMass. He graduated in January, something that MacPherson points to with a great deal of pride. "This is what we're in the business for," he said. "Sure, Paul's selection helps the program, but when I can show the parents and the high school students that we can not only play football but also graduate our young men, then this has to be a major plus for what we're after."

Of course, Metallo (5'10, 185) now has a chance of going from UMass in one season to a Super Bowl the next. He's also going to a team that has specialized in the "mini-backs", such as Mike Garret (now with San Diego), Warren McVea, Robert Holmes and Podolak.

"It's just great," he says. "I'm really looking forward to going to a good football team. I've always idolized Hank Stram for his ideas on football."

Will he make it? Says his coach, "I'd hate to bet against him."

Steve Schubert

Pats Show Interest In Wide Receiver

By MARTY KELLEY

Outside the Stadium Gate-Sleep for No. 19 became irregular, his days were longer and the nights uncomfortably shorter. And when his expectations dwindled to a mere sign, Steve Schubert was glad the Pro Draft was finally over. His dream was lost...But the end for Steve Schubert is hardly in sight.

For reasons mostly unknown, Schubert, the brilliant wide receiver and kick return specialist for the Minutemen, was passed up by the pro pickers in the annual collefe draft held Tuesday and Wednesday in New York. But the Kodak Small-College All-American has hope for the future.

"I'm very, very, very disappointed," said Steve at the football office yesterday afternoon. "They may have thought that I was too small. But I think Paul (Metallo, 13th pick by Kansas City) should have gone higher...And myself".

Schubert noted that many of the early wide receiver picks were over six feet tall. The names included Daryl Stingley of the New England Patriots and Barry Smith of Florida. Smith was nabbed in the first round by Green Bay. But Steve added another inference that made a helluva lot of sense.

"I guess not being able to play in the East-West game in San Francisco really hurt my chances." Schubert was an alternate for the game but didn't get a chance to suit up. It's a near axiom that most players selected for the post season showcases in front of pro scouts do get drafted.

Not only was Schubert rightfully upset about the draft, but so was head coach Dick MacPherson. For a second, Mac put on the gloves.

"I'm very surprised and hurt, and I think it's an indictment to New England football," said MacPherson. The New England Coach-of-the-Year went on to add that the pros just don't seem to have the faith they should in New England football talent. "And then they get all excited when they find that Bruce Laird, a sixth round pick out of American International can do what he did in the pros."

An interesting example in Schubert's fight for recognition is the saga from plaudit to popcorn sales for Randy Vataha of the New England Patsies. Once a novelty now a hasbeen with the hapless Pats, Vataha's height forced the Foxboro Follies to actually draft in his position. But there's quite a difference between Vataha and Schubert and something tangible should parallel both careers-determination.

And of all Steve's records, and we've all read them, there's one that he as well as MacPherson are proud of. MacPherson explains: "I want you to know that Steve will graduate in eight semesters from the University. That's what young men and their parents should be proud of. That's what our football program is all about...That our kids get that degree...".

Actually Schubert's position isn't bleak at all. Not in the long run. Already the Patriots have expressed interest in the 9.8 flash out of Manchester N.H.

Whether in New England or in Canada, Steve Schubert will have a story to tell and a debt to repay...And I'll be damned if a stuffy pro scout will have the final say into whose record book No. 19 runs through next...

Orr, Esposito Spark Bruins

BOSTON (AP)-Phil Esposito and Bobby Orr went on scoring sprees, figuring in all Boston goals Thursday night in leading the Bruins to a 5-2 National Hockey League victory over the Toronto Maple Leafs.

Esposito, the NHL's scoring leader, broke out of a slump with three goals for his third hat trick of the year and 19th of his career and helped set up two other goals.

Orr, replying to criticism that he has slowed down and possibly may be having new knee trouble, scored one goal and assisted on three others while putting on a dazzling skating show on occasions.

The Bruins, who had won only two of seven previous starts, jumped into a quick lead as Esposito fed Orr, whose long slap shot was deflected into the net by Wayne Cashman just 31 seconds after the opening faceoff.

Esposito scored his 31st goal of the season on a power play at 14:56 and then struck again at 19:35 for a 3-0 first period lead.

Toronto's Rick Kehoe scored early in the second period. Then Esposito, who had scored only once in seven previous games, tallied on a power play to complete his hat trick.

Orr scored his 13th goal on a backhander of his own rebound from close up at 13:11 of the third period before Toronto's Mike Pelyk got his first goal by jamming the puck through a pileup at the crease 41 seconds later.

Cagers Blast Maine; UNH Here Tomorrow

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

Returning back to Yankee Conference action, the Minutemen (like the Mississippi River) just flowed over the Black Bears from Maine, 90-57.

2500 was once again given as the final attendance, but what a difference from the Civic Center crowd (rather than comfortable, it was home). The pep band, spurred by last Saturday's performance of the Syracuse music makers, added a drum and an overwhelming brassy sound to make this clearly a student game and their performance was matched by the team-play of the Minutemen.

The game progressed slowly at first and the only player really doing anything was Peter Gavett (the leading scorer in New England, averaging 25 points/game) and he accumulated four fouls in the first ten minutes.

As Gavett was going out, Tom McLaughlin was checking in for the Minutemen. A 14-12 lead spurted upward. McLaughlin combined with sophs, John Murphy and Jim Burke to force the young Bears into mistakes. Coach Jack Leaman said afterwards, "The press got us going and McLaughlin started it all."

The full court press took its effect on the young Black Bears (Gavett was the only Senior and two freshmen were in the starting line-up. Burke contributed two quick steals, while Murphy chipped in with 4 blocked shots (a fifth was called goal-tending).

The cagers outscored the Bears, 24-9 the rest of the half to put the halftime tally at 40-21 and the rest was like practice.

Gavett came back to play 10 more careful minutes before he left for good with foul five and only 12 points. Nobody played for more than 25 minutes for UMass and an easy rolling not-so-pressing time emerged for the cagers to show their good moves and unselfishness by feeding their mates.

Al Skinner only had 12 points and 11 rebounds, playing not his usual 39-40 minutes, but rather a rather relaxing 25. His replacement, Tom Gilliams made the most of the opportunity to impress his coach by smoothly collecting 10 points and 11 rebounds. Afterwards, Leaman said, "Gilliams needs more playing time. He played well as this gave him a chance to play."

The instigator of the surge, McLaughlin with his underneath reverse hook shot, tied Murphy for team scoring honors with 14.

Even Chuck Olsen entered the scoring parade to include all members of the squad in the box score.

A relaxed coach asked the YanCon question, afterwards saying "How can they be so easy in Amherst, but so tough in Maine."

UMass is now 3-2 in the conference and 9-6 overall. The next Cage opponent will be New Hampshire this Saturday. The Wildcats boast a quick backcourt of Erie Feragne and Wayne Morrison, with a front line averaging 6'6. Gametime is 7:30. Box score on page 27.

UMass Geology Prof. Allegedly Shot By Son

By MARK VOGLER

A UMass professor remained in serious condition in Holyoke Hospital's intensive care unit Sunday night, with injuries allegedly sustained in a Thursday evening attempted rifle slaying by his son.

Myron Smith, 30, of Arnold Road, Pelham, son of Dr. Harold T. U. Smith, 64, is being charged by the District Attorney's Office with assault with attempt to murder and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon. This is following an investigation of the incident by State Police Trooper David Baker and Pelham Police Chief Curtis Knight.

The younger Smith allegedly shot his father in the face with a 22 caliber rifle in the living room of his parents' home District Attorney John Callahan said.

The bullet reportedly entered beneath Dr. Smith's chin and went to his throat. Hospital officials refused to confirm reports that the bullet was still lodged in his throat.

Dr. Smith's son was committed to Northampton State Hospital for observation Thursday night. Authorities say he was suffering from an overdose of drugs.

A spokesman for Northampton District Court said Smith probably will not be arraigned on the two charges until his ten-day commitment ends.

Court officials explained that a person may be committed for a ten-day period prior to arraignment, on the recommendation of a psychiatrist, a legal physician, on any police officer, with just cause. After that time, he must be brought before a judge.

Complaints, were sought by the District Attorney's Office late Friday afternoon, on the recommendation of Trooper Baker along with District Attorney Callahan.

Chief Knight was the first to arrive at the scene about 10:30 p.m. Thursday night. He arrest Myron Smith at that time.

Both the father and son were taken by Amherst fire ambulance to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, where it was determined that the son should be committed to Northampton State Hospital for observation and the father transferred to Holyoke Hospital.

Chief Knight said that when he arrived, he found both father and son in the living room, along with Mrs. Althea Smith, wife of the professor.

The father and son were reportedly alone in the room, and Mrs. Smith upstairs at the time of the incident, according to investigative sources.

Dr. Smith came to UMass in 1946 as a full professor and head of the Geology Department, the latter of which he held for thirteen years.

In 1959 he relinquished the title to Dr. Randolph W. Bromery. Dr. Smith is currently doing research.

He is a world reknowned expert on wind action desert phenomena. He is currently working on a contract from the National Space and Aeronautics Administration.

Before coming to the University, he taught at the University of Kansas. He also has worked for the U.S. and Kansas Geological surveys, as well as several industrial concerns.

The Smiths have two other sons: Conrad, 32, and Roger, 29.

Tobin Lab Fire Sets Research Back Months

Professors Joseph Donahue and Neil Carlson stand in front of some equipment damaged in the Tobin fire. Carlson and Donahue agreed that some of their graduate students might have to go through another year because of the fire. (Photo by Kevin Mack)

By MARK VOGLER

A massive clean-up effort continues at recently completed Tobin Hall in the aftermath of a late Tuesday evening fire which caused extensive damage on the fifth floor of the building—including the destruction of an $80,000-computer.

While several UMass Psychology staff members are in agreement that the damaged area will eventually be restored to its original state, the fire brought losses to some which cannot be replaced.

Professors Joseph W. Donahue Jr. and Niel R. Carlson, both members of the UMass Psychology Department faculty who are staffed in Tobin Hall, were two people most effected by the blaze which caused an estimated $100-150,000 amount of damage—said to be uninsured.

Donahue, 40, of 17 Juniper Lane, Amherst, had been doing research in operant conditioning with an application to the area of behavioral disorders. His projects had been supported by the National Institute of Mental Health.

Carlson, 30, of 11 Hickory Lane, Amherst, had received a grant from the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development to do research on the way various parts of the brain control maternal behavior in animals.

Both professors were using the ModComp III modular computing system which was lost in the blaze. Two smaller computers are located in the building which need the use of the large one in order to remain maximumly useful.

Dr. Carlson said Saturday that the fire has greatly hindered his research and "the setback, at best, is many months providing everything gets renovated and we get a new computer."

Carlson has three graduate students under his direction working on their dissertations and thesis, and seven other students doing undergraduate work.

According to Carlson, "We were just hitting our stride, we had a lot of experiments done and were just getting use to the computer.

"I was so happy before all this came about. We had good rooms, good facilities, and the students were working hard with interesting projects on this great computer. That's what really makes it bad."

He said that it would take about five months to catch up if another computer was acquired. "This computer just came in April, and the time hasn't profited me. If we don't receive a new computer, all that time goes down the drain," Carlson said.

Donahue said that it would take time to get another computer, "since the delay is sometimes a year." "You just can't get a computer off the shelf."

He said that certain types of research work could not be done without the use of a multi-programming computer, "which is more reliable while performing simultaneously in many different events."

"The people who get hurt the most in this instance are the students," Donahue said. He had been working with four graduate students and one undergraduate.

Two of his graduate students were completing their doctorate degree while working with pigeons and rats as control animals. In one instance, the pigeons apparently escaped harm while 25% of the experimental apparatus was destroyed.

The experiments conducted with the rats were cancelled after several dozen died because of the intense heat and smoke produced by Tuesday night's fire. However, the equipment set up for studying the rats remained in tack. The computer had played a vital role in these experiments.

Carlson and Donahue said that it was likely that some of their graduate students might have to go through another year of graduate school because of the major hold-up.

A few dozen rats and over 200 mice were lost in the fire. Any data compiled from the observation of these laboratory animals is worthless since they were being run in control experiments.

Donahue said he just couldn't believe the circumstances surrounding the fire. "The janitor had just mopped the floor at 10:30 that night, and he confirmed the fact that everything in the computer room was turned off. I just can't think of anything that could have caused that fire," he said.

"In the space of five to 10 minutes, it went from nearly nothing to inferno."

Carlson said that it was a good thing that nobody was working in one of the offices on the corridor at the time that the fire was nearing its peak.

The doors of all the rooms are airtight—like a vault. If someone would have been up there, it would have killed him. He wouldn't have gotten out alive. That's frightening to think about."

Legality Of Town Election To Be Determined In 2 Weeks

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

BOSTON--Pending a ruling within two weeks on the legality of its town caucus, Amherst will know whether its town election, scheduled for Feb. 20th, will be legal.

A decision was promised before the election by U.S. District Court Judge Frank H. Freedman after the second hearing in the case of Walgren vs. the town of Amherst in Federal court in Boston yesterday.

Eric Walgren, an unsuccessful candidate in Amherst's caucus, or primary, asked Freedman to rule the Jan. 19 caucus illegal and issue a preliminary injunction to stop the town election.

Walgren, 33, claimed in court that because the University of Massachusetts was not in session, and its students not in Amherst, the 1,600 registered students residing in the University's dormitories were in effect disenfranchised.

Walgren also claimed that a town law providing for 31 days between the caucus and the election was not adhered to, and that Amherst violated the notice law which requires publication of the dates to file for candidacy in a local newspaper.

The town, represented by Thomas G. Jones of the Newton law firm Tyler and Reynolds, contended that the issue was not whether the University dorms were open, but rather whether or not the students registered in Amherst could vote. Jones claimed they could through the use of absentee ballots.

Jones also claimed that notice of the filing was published in a local newspaper.

Jones added that Walgren's class action suit should first be heard in state court to determine its legality and the "size" of the class. Jones said that the notice, requirement, a state law, should also be disputed in state court.

The Amherst town selectmen, which heard a request from Walgren on December 11 to have the caucus while the University was in session, had origianlly agreed, at a Dec. 18 meeting, to have the caucus Jan. 19 and the election March 1, pending an opinion on the legaity of a change in the dates by special counsel for the selectmen Winthrop Dakin. Dakin, at an emergency selectmen's meeting Dec. 19, said the new dates were illegal because there were not 31 days between the election and caucus. The selectmen then reverted to the original dates of Jan. 19 and Feb. 20.

At that point Walgren decided to take the town to court. At the first hearing, Jan. 17, Judge Freedman refused Walgren's request for a halt to the caucus which was held Friday, Jan. 19.

Scat Rat!

CLEVELAND HEIGHTS, Ohio (AP) — Frank E. Porath says he has invented a device that drives rats right out of their mind—and your garage or basement as well.

Porath, 35, said his "Rat Scat" is an ultrasonic device that produces the equivalent of "an acid rock band, a baby crying and a woman screaming, all at the same threshold of pain and all at the same time."

The high-pitched sound isn't audible to humans, but rats have no trouble picking it up. And Porath said that if they can't find a way to escape they run around in a frenzy, fight among themselves or go into a catatonic state.

Ex-Harvard Prof. May Teach Here

By BILL DENSMORE

Indications are that UMass may want derailed Harvard University economics professor Samuel S. Bowles in a teaching position on this campus.

But Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Robert L. Gluckstern claims that this is normal and that "there are many people teaching here who were denied tenure at Harvard and other excellent schools."

Dean Alfange, Jr., the Acting Head of the UMass economics department, and the man who could hire Bowles, said Friday that "we are considering making an offer" of a faculty position to Bowles. And one source predicts that the offer could include a tenured position for Bowles and several other non-traditional economists.

Bowles was denied tenure on the Harvard economics faculty last December allegedly because of his "radical" interpretation in the field. He is a member of the Union of Radical Political Economists (URPE), a group which split from the American Economists Association nearly five years ago and includes many young experts in the field. He is the son of Chester Bowles, former Governor and Congressman from Connecticut, and Ambassador to India. His grandfather was the liberal editor of the Springfield Republican.

While Harvard did not "fire" Bowles when it refused to extend tenure, the move is interpreted in academic circles as an invitation to seek employment elsewhere. Bowles is presently an associate professor at Harvard, but his contract will expire in one more academic year. Tenured professors at universities cannot lose their jobs except under extreme circumstances and are accorded certain benefits at retirement.

The Harvard Crimson has characterized Bowles as a popular lecturer at that University, but in December the paper reported Harvard economics head James S. Duesenberry as saying that Bowles doesn't meet the test of being "the best possible appointment from a whole universe of people who are theoretically available."

UMass Vice Chancellor Gluckstern says that Bowles' untenured position at Harvard has no bearing on his availability to UMass, and that members of the Economics department here have "had interest in Bowles starting a year ago" (before he was denied tenure at Harvard). Bowles' radicalness was blown out of proportion during the Harvard affair, according to the Vice Chancellor.

"Lots of people who are denied tenure at Harvard go on to have exciting careers elsewhere," Gluckstern added.

Alfange said Friday that Bowles "has a reputation as being an outstanding economist" particularly in economics of education and that he would be an addition to the UMass faculty not only because of his demonstrated excellence in teaching but because he could provide the department with a new perspective.

Bowles taught several seminars in labor relations and economics at UMass last semester as part of a visiting appointment to the Labor Center on this campus. Student reaction to his courses was positive according to sources in the economics department. Bowles has a house in Ashfield, a small community near Amherst, and apparently is well known among colleagues in this area.

Dean Alfange, in his position as temporary head of the economics department, would initiate any UMass teaching offer–but would have to be approved by the office of Vice Chancellor Gluckstern. If his office receives a request to offer Bowles an appointment, "I think we will be receptive," Gluckstern said Friday.

The Vice Chancellor pointed out that until he has received such a request he cannot judge Bowles' competency. But he added that Bowles' participation in the labor seminars last semester should indicate that at one point "we considered his qualifications acceptable."

Most economists agree that a "radical" interpretation involves a Marx-oriented rather than neo-classical market structure and encompasses related disciplines such as political science and sociology.

Bowles is on a leave of absence from Harvard this semester so that he may write a book, and is currently speaking and interviewing at major U.S. universities such as Yale, Princeton, Stanford, and Berkeley. He is not expected back in Massachusetts for at least a week.

Tenure for a "radical" economist was involved in a decision by UMass to reappoint economics professor Michael Best last spring. And Charles Zachary and Mark Aldridge, two allegedly radical economists, have both been recently denied tenure on Smith College's economics faculty. All are members of URPE.

Best was reappointed after a lengthy debate with the former head of the UMass economics department involving whether politics should be a part of an economics curriculum. He received his PhD. from Harvard and is a personal friend of Bowles.

On Friday he said that he thinks "there's a very good chance the University's going to make an offer" to the Harvard professor. And he asserted that "Sam's very much in demand" all over the country.

Because he has already taught here and because of his house in Ashfield, it is thought that UMass would be particularly appealing to Bowles. And Bowles, along with other young radical economists, is interested in teaching at a public university rather than a private one, according to a UMass economics professor.

The UMass economics faculty presently has eleven tenured and fourteen non-tenured positions. Sources indicate that most of the present faculty would support the hiring of Bowles, in contrast to its position a year ago.

UMass is expecting to have between 10 and 20 teaching positions open in economics and social sciences next year, depending on the size and use of the University's proposed budget now before the Legislature. Which department gets how many positions filled is up to Dean Alfange. But economics could receive at least three new positions next year according to Vice Chancellor Gluckstern.

Student Alcoholism Growing

By KATHY FRASER

The growing recognition of alcoholism on campus prompted the Health Services to hold a workshop January 17 on student drinking for the purpose of educating the professional staff and counsellors on campus.

Dr. Brent Spears, of the Health Services, defined the problem stating "Alcoholism is a spectrum of an illness which is occurring among students who drink." He went on to say that drinking has been a college tradition for so long that it has been ignored, although heads of residence have seen drinking become a greater problem than drugs in the past two years.

During the discussion among the 50 staff members present, Dr. Spears stressed that one must differentiate the student alcoholic from the student who drinks.

John Barbaro, from Room to Move, cited examples of students who had come to him after having been to psychologists thinking they had complexes or are insane. After counselling they discover they are doctors have indicated that they showing the early signs of alcoholism.

Dr. Ray Chittum added that some students have long records of injuries suffered while they were drunk, yet not one of the staff has suggested that the student might have an alcohol problem and attempted to counsel the student. He stressed the need to educate the staff, the campus police, as well as the students themselves in recognizing the symptoms of pre-alcoholism.

A change in the professional attitude was stressed for some already put in a full eight hour day and alcoholism will always be a social problem. Only three of the 15 doctors on the staff attended the workshop.

The workshop ended with suggestions from the staff on methods of educating the public. Some of these were: greater cooperation and information exchange between the Health Services, the Campus police, Mental Health Services and the Blue Wall; alcoholism education during freshmen orientation; workshops by Room to Move for any dorm.

In The Nation And The World

Cease-Fire Supervision Begins Today

SAIGON (AP) — Rapid progress was reported Sunday in executing the provisions of the Vietnam peace agreement and the South Vietnamese said cease-fire violations dropped off even further.

Field teams of the International Commission for Control and Supervision prepared to fan out across South Vietnam on Monday and begin operations to observe the cease-fire after nearly a week's delay.

Seven prisoner recovery teams were standing by at Saigon's Tan Son Nhut Air Base ready to move anywhere in Indochina to supervise the start of the repatriation of POWs, including 562 American servicemen and 23 American civilians held in North and South Vietnam and Laos.

In Honolulu, the Pacific Military Command said the first U.S.-North Vietnamese meeting on mine clearance operations would be held Monday in the North Vietnamese port city of Haiphong. The U.S. Navy's Task Force 78 will clear the mines from North Vietnamese waters.

The head of the control commission, which is the international peacekeeping body, said the first prisoner releases could be expected aroud mid-week.

Representatives of the United States, North and South Vietnam, and the Viet Cong met for three hours for the second consecutive day to work out details of the prisoner exchanges.

While this prisoner subcommission of the four-party Joint Military Commission was meeting, the chief delegates met for an hour with the control commission and later for four hours among themselves.

Five U.S. C130 transports flew more than 220 North Vietnamese support personnel and their equipment from Hanoi to Saigon to join the North Vietnamese delegation to the Joint Military Commission, headquartered at Tan Son Nhut.

Summing up these developments, one U.S. official said, "It's encouraging. Hopefully, things will keep going rapidly."

Fighting across South Vietnam continued to ebb. The Saigon military command claimed 102 cease-fire violations during the 24-hour period ending at 6 a.m. Sunday, the lowest number reported since the truce officially began Jan. 28.

Reporting on prisoner exchanges, Ambassador Michel Gauvin of Canada, acting chairman of the control commission, told newsmen: "I believe arrangements are being made for the release of prisoners of war within the next week, probably by the middle of the week."

He described the one-hour meeting between his commission and the Joint Military Commission as "one of the most constructive steps that have been taken this week."

In a prepared statement read at the meeting, Gauvin told the senior military representatives of the United States, North and South Vietnam, and the Viet Cong that "this first contact at the level of heads of delegation is an important occasion."

He formally informed the military commission that the control commission would deploy its field teams to seven regional headquarters and urged the military commission to join them.

The 20-man control teams will be setting up in Hue and Da Nang in the northern quarter, Pleiku in the central highlands, Phan Thiet on the central coast, Bien Hoa in the Saigon region and My Tho and Can Tho in the Mekong Delta. Each team is composed of five representatives each from Canada, Poland, Hungary and Indonesia.

Gauvin told newsmen after the meeting he understood the Communist Vietnam members of the military commission planned to move to the regional sites within the next few days. The large influx of support personnel and equipment Sunday seemed to indicate the move was imminent.

U.S. and South Vietnamese members members of the military commission already are in place. The American members were drawn from U.S. advisory teams already in the regions.

The Saigon military command claimed that 299 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops were killed in fighting during the 24-hour period ending at dawn Sunday. The command said 33 South Vietnamese troops were killed, 142 wounded and 201 missing.

Lt. Col. Le Trung Hien, chief spokesman for the command, claimed that the Communists had violated the cease-fire 1,585 times since it officially went into effect. He said total casualties were 3,705 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops killed and 590 South Vietnamese troops killed, 2,382 wounded and 292 missing.

In Brief...

Jungle POWs To Be Released

SAIGON (AP)—U.S. officials indicated Monday the first group of American prisoners of war held in jungles along the South Vietnam-Cambodia border would be released this week in the An Loc area, 60 miles north of Saigon and 10 miles from the nearest point on the Cambodian border.

Jackson: Sino-Soviet Attitudes Important

WASHINGTON (AP)—The attitudes of China and the Soviet Union toward peace in Vietnam are more important than the peace agreement itself, Sen. Henry M. Jackson said Sunday.

The Washington Democrat, interviewed on the CBS broadcast "Face the Nation," told a panel of newsmen the next step for the United States to take—and one "essential for peace in Southeast Asia"—is to recognize the People's Republic of China.

Unlikely Triad Named "Best Dressed"

NEW YORK (AP)—The unlikely trio of defeated presidential candidate George McGovern, President Nixon's son-in-law, Edward Finch Cox, and radical lawyer William Kunstler were among the "best-dressed" men of 1973 named Sunday by the Fashion Foundation of America.

Israel Develops Gunboat

TEL AVIV (AP)—Israel has developed a high-speed, long-range missile boat with heavy fire power as a step toward bolstering this country's military protection while minimizing its dependence on foreign military aid.

Completion of the 400-ton steel and aluminum "Reshef," or flame gunboat, was announced at a news conference Sunday by the commander of the Israeli navy, Rear Adm. Benjamin Telem, and Israel Libertovsky, director of the Israel Shipyards, which designed and constructed the vessel.

Telem, who called the gunboat the "best of its kind," said the Reshef carries two 76mm deck guns, several heavy caliber machine guns, four depth charges and seven Israeli-produced Gabriel ship-to-ship missiles.

Telem said the 190-foot Reshef is 42 feet longer than the French Cherbourg ship and that the Israeli craft weighed 185 tons more than the Cherbourg type.

"He placed the range and endurance of the Reshef at three times that of the French craft. He would not give figures, but noted the five Cherbourg gunboats spirited by the Israelis from Cherbourg to Haifa in 1969 took five days to complete the 2,900-nautical-mile journey. The new vessel has a speed of 32 knots, he added.

The admiral said the Israeli boat had a greater capability to operate and fight in high seas than other gunships but would not say if the Reshef was better than any beat in say if the Reshef was better than any boat in Arab navies.

The boat, designed by Israeli and foreign experts, was almost totally manufactured in Israel, except for the engines—four 2,670 horse power Maybach diesels—which were made in West Germany, Telem reported.

Libertovsky said the vessel cost $10 million to build and would be sold to foreign governments with the approval of the Israeli government. He said the sale price depends on the size of the order and the buyer, but emphasized the prices would be 30 to 40 per cent less than comparable American or French craft.

U.S. Pressures For Shake Up In Cambodian Government

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — The United States has put pressure on the one-party government of President Lon Nol to broaden its policitcal base by including members of the opposition, it was learned Sunday.

Among the names proposed for possible inclusion were those of Sisowath Sirik Matak, leader of the Republican party, and In Tam, head of the Democratic party.

The message was brought to Marshal Lon Nol by Vice President Spiro T. Agnew during his five-hour visit here, a well-informed Western diplomat said.

The proposed shakeup apparently is intended to make Lon Nol's Social Republican party regime appear more representative and therefore more acceptable to the Cambodian Communist insurgents - the Khmer Rouge - as a partner discussions to end their three-year-old war.

It also was seen as a move to mute the widespread discontent with the party's monopoly on power and prevent any possible outbreak of public outcries at a sensitive time.

According to the informant, Agnew "strongly suggested" to Lon Nol that he bring in some former government leaders.

The report was the first evidence that Agnew's visit here went deeper than its announced purpose of reassuring the regime of President Nixon's continued economic and military support.

It also ran counter to what the U.S. Embassy maintains is Washington's policy of "complete and unwavering" support of the Lon Nol regime and non-interference in its politics.

The source said Agneew mentioned by name both Sirik Matak and In Tam as possible choices.

Prince Sirik Matak, a retired lieutenant-general and distant cousin of deposed Prince Norodom Sihanouk, had served in Sihanouk's cabinets as minister of defense, foreign affairs and information, and also as ambassador to mainland China, Japan and the Philippines from 1952 through 1969.

In March 1970 he helped Lon Nol, then Sihanouk's defense minister and president of the Council of Ministers, to overthrow Sihanouk. He served as Lon Nol's No. 2 man for the next two years. A talented administrator, he was forced to resign last spring after student disturbances fermented largely by Lon Nol's younger brother, Brig. Gen. Lon Non, in one of the 'little marshal's' numerous power plays.

Sirik Matak, 59, has been touted for a long time as a possibility for the vice presidency.

BU Coed Found Murdered

BILLERICA, Mass. (AP)—A nude, decomposed body found near a remote woods road was identified Sunday as that of Damaris Synge Gillispie of Boston University—the eighth young woman to die in the Boston area under similar circumstances since last summer.

Seven other young women have died, all of strangling or suffocation, and authorities have said they suspect a single killer may be responsible for several of the deaths. All of the victims were in their late teens or 20s, and four were students.

Operation Homecoming To Begin In Midweek

CLARK AIR BASE, Philippines (AP) — The men expected to fly the first planes into Hanoi to pick up U.S. prisoners of war were introduced here Sunday while official sources in Saigon indicated POW releases would begin around midweek.

The wall of secrecy that has surrounded Operation Homecoming appeared to be slowly crumbling as the Air Force showed newsmen two C141 Starlifter cargo planes especially rigged for the mission and introduced a basic four-man flight crew for each plane.

A red-haired pilot from Provo, Utah, Maj. James E. Marrott, was named the man most likely to fly the initial run into Hanoi when Homecoming finally gets underway.

Marrott, 38, who has a total of 7,000 hours experience as a pilot, arrived here Friday from Norton Air Force Base in California along with navigator Lt. Col. James E. Warren, 49, of Chicago, Ill.; flight engineer Senior M. Sgt. Albert J. Alston, 41, of Richland, Ga.; and leadmaster M. Sgt. Robert S. McElvoy, 40, of Pascagoula, Miss.

Col. Ralph I. Leslie, 54, of St. Albans, N.Y., commander of the 604th Military Airlift Support Squadron here at Clark, said it was likely the C141s would be used to make the initial pickup in Hanoi because they can carry up to 83 returnees at a time and can easily make the 1,800-mile round trip to Hanoi on a single load of fuel.

Earlier, the Air Force had said the pickups in Hanoi probably would be made by smaller C9A Nightingale flying hospitals, which have a shorter flying range and can carry only 40 passengers.

Leslie also introduced a second four man crew, which he said would make one of the initial trips into Hanoi. Led by the flight commander, Maj. Donald G. Roszman, 47, of Columbus, Ohio, the crew includes the navigator, Maj. Bruce Harrel, 36, of Liberal, Kan.; the flight engineer, Senior M. Sgt. Joe K. Pennington, 36, of Texarkana, Ark.1 and the leadmaster, M. Sgt. William Mendes, 40, of Honolulu. The four arrived at Clark on Friday from McChord Air Force Base in Washington.

Marrott said he had been studying general maps and other information about the Hanoi area, but did not expect to see his final flight plan until about three hours before takeoff.

"It's the most important mission I've seen in the years I've been flying," said Marrott, a 17-year veteran. Now a flight examiner pilot with the 15th Military Airlift Squadron at Norton, Marrott served a year at Takhli Air Force Base in Thailand, flying combat missions over South Vietnam in an EB66 electronic warfare plane.

Marrott said that while on the ground in Hanoi, he expected to stay in his aircraft most of the time except when he must get out to file a flight plan with North Vietnamese authorities.

Congress To Look At Taxes

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Democratic-controlled Congress on Monday begins formal consideration of tax reform, which the party's candidates used as a major issue in the 1972 campaign.

The House Ways and Means Committee opens hearings that are expected to last about eight weeks and cover every aspect of the Internal Revenue Code. The last major review was in 1969.

There was no advance outline of the kind of bill the committee may eventually produce, but Chairman Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark., has put a damper on hopes for a general tax cut. He has also belittled some reformers' estimates that the government could pick up large revenue increases by closing what they call loopholes.

Tax changes made to treat taxpayers equitably, Mills has said, generally tend to balance each other out.

Mills has indicated he would consider changes in capital gains taxation. These could include lengthening the period, now six months, for which an asset must be held before profit from its sale qualifies for the favorable capital gains treatment. He is also interested in the possibility of a sliding scale of taxation, so that the levy would decline on assets held many years.

Another likely candidate for changes is the minimum tax, enacted in 1969 to provide that large incomes should not entirely escape taxation regardless of the legal preferences they enjoy. Most reform proposals include plans to tighten the tax, and some would increase the rate.

Estate and gift taxation, not changed in 1969, is certain to be reviewed.

Mills also has said a proposal to offer states and local governments an alternative to the exemption of may be considered. Instead of issuing tax-free bonds, largely bought by banks and wealthy individuals, they could issue taxable-interest bonds at competitive interest rates, with the government providing an interest supplement.

Acupuncture Theory To Be Tested

BOSTON (AP) — Two doctors and a psychologist at Massachusetts General Hospital plan to take a lot of pains, literally, to see how — and whether — acupuncture works.

The researchers plan to submit to experimentally induced pain to test their reactions to the ancient Chinese pain reliever in which needles are inserted into the body.

In China, acupuncture thereapy is said to counteract severe pain, but no one is sure how it works.

Some theories say acupuncture uses a little pain to block a larger pain sensation traveling up the nervous system to the brain. Other theories say hypnosis or other psychological reactions in the patient may reduce the pain.

As outlined in the current issue of MGH News, the researchers will use themselves as the guinea pigs. Psychologist Gene M. Smith and Drs. James G. Wepsic and William D. Owens will endure pain induced by a method developed in earlier pain studies at the hospital and carried on by Smith.

Dr. Han Chiang, an anesthesiologist, will then use acupuncture in an attempt to relieve the pain. The results will be compared with more conventional pain relief methods such as drug therapy.

A hospital spokesman cautioned that it will take many months before even preliminary results are available. He stressed that acupuncture would not be used on patients unless it is proved both effective and safe, and that would not be in the near future.

The 5,000-year-old medical art has met with both enthusiasm and skepticism in U.S. medical circles since President Nixon's visit to China sparked interest in it.

To measure the pain for the acupuncture experiment, the Boston researchers will use a method called submaximum effort tourniquet technique. A tourniquet on the subject's arm cuts off circulation as he methodically squeezes a device with his hand.

The cut-off circulation prevents normal removal of body wastes, and concentrations of these wastes produce pain in the arm. "The pain is a deep, aching, throbbing thing that is quite severe," Dr. Smith said. "It's certainly something that you want to stop when it reaches that stage."

Researchers will determine a pain scale for each subject and plot on a graph the degrees of pain over a period of time. Since people tolerate pain in differing degrees, the graph for one person will differ from that of another.

In the acupuncture test, the researchers will measure the amount of pain relief, if any, from inserting the needles into the arm.

Mrs. Boggs Succeeds Hale

NEW ORLEANS, La. (AP) — Mrs. Lindy Boggs said Sunday her victory in a special Democratic primary to nominate a successor to her husband's House seat was a sign that voters still offered "all of the support that Hale had always had."

In an interview after her resounding — and expected — win in Saturday's election, Mrs. Boggs, who campaigned on the slogan of "Let Her Continue," said, "We wanted to make the people feel confident that someone would still be there to give the personalized, concerned service that Hale and his office had always rendered."

Mrs. Boggs announced her candicacy after Congress declared Hale Boggs' seat empty. The former House majority leader disappeared nearly four months ago during an airplane flight in Alaska.

Task Force Set Up To Halt Rape Wave

DANVER, Mass. (AP) — Police in communities north of Boston have set up a task force aimed at halting a wave of rapes reported in the past several weeks.

The task force was set up after two attempted rapes at the Liberty Tree Mall in Danvers Friday night. police say they think those incidents may be related to 11 rapes or attempted rapes since November in communities ranging from Stoneham to Portsmouth, N.H.

And police say there may be many more assaults that they don't know about.

"We can't even begin to imagine how many are going unreported, and therefore undetected, because of the embarrassment and hassle involved in this type of case," said a spokesman for the Danvers police department.

A state policeman said the task force is "doing an awful lot of checking around," but it would not elaborate. "We don't want to tip our hand and have this guy find out what we're doing."

In nearly every case, police said, the attacker's approach and description have been similar, leading them to believe the crimes may have been committed by the same person.

Cowin: Moonlighting May Detract From Primary Job

BOSTON (AP) — State Secretary of Administration and Finance William I. Cowin said Sunday conflict of interest and time taken away from the "primary job" are the main issues involved in the controversy over "moonlighters" by state employes.

"The problem isn't in the two jobs," Cowin told a radio interviewer.

"The real problem is in whether some people are spending overtime on oth..r jobs which they ought to be devoting to their primary jobs and, secondarily, whether there are any dual positions which represent a conflict of interest," he said.

"These are the two categories we are eliminating," he said.

State employes are required to report sources of income from second jo.. but Cowin said the rule is not intended to eliminate all moonlighting.

Cowin said there would be restrictions on moonlighting by state employes but no "blanket" rule against it for all employes.

"We considered the possibility of a single blanket restriction whereby anybody who is already a state employe could not do outside work for the state government, but we decided that this would be terribly unfair," Cowin said.

"To do this," he said, "would be hitting very much the wrong areas, areas we cannot afford to discourage."

"Much of the so-called moonlighting is done by teachers, by educators in public higher education institutions who moonlight by teaching special education courses," he said. "And a lot of our medical people do the same thing."

Cowin was interviewed on WEEI's "Bay State Forum" program.

Sen. Margaret Chase Smith Not Bitter About Defeat

PORTLAND, Maine (AP)-"The first thing to clear up," says former Sen. Margaret Chase Smith, "is that I am not a hermit, hiding away in a hovel, licking my wounds..."

"My defeat was a shock to me," the 74-year-old Republican said in an interview with the Main Sunday Telegram at her home in Washington. "But I am not bitter as uninformed, speculative news stories have said."

Mrs. Smith has been inaccessible to the press since being defeated for a fifth term last November by U.S. Rep. William D. Hathaway, a Democrat. The interview appeared in Sunday editions of the paper.

The former senator said she had refused interviews not out of bitterness about an election she had "fully expected to win," but because at the time "I had nothing to say except that I was disappointed to have lost and surely that wasn't news."

She added that another reason she refused interviews was that she "had a fixation" about getting out of her Senate office on time and couldn't do that while talking to newsmen.

She said her age and the national mood contributed to her defeat: "People wanted a change. The national feeling was anti-establishment. They wanted somebody younger." Hathaway is 48.

Looking back on her defeat, Mrs. Smith said she was sure of being re-elected until returns began coming in from Augusta, where she showed badly.

"Only one thing really hurts," Mrs. Smith continued. "I still think about my own hometown, Skowhegan, where I was born, worked and grew up, voting against me. That hurts. And it's no use pretending it doesn't."

Mrs. Smith said she received a slew of tributes from both sides of the political aisle after her loss to Hathaway. She said there were enough "to show it is a calumny on my colleagues to say they did not acknowledge my departure."

She said President Nixon wrote: "The most disappointing aspect of the whole election is your defeat...As one who has known defeats, I know how you feel. At such times you find who are your real friends. And count me as one of them..."

Mrs. Smith said Nixon has made no overtures to her regarding a place in the administration. She said she'd have reservations about taking a post because "I am inclined to be pretty independent."

Her major criticism of Nixon's present administration, Mrs. Smith said, is the President's appointments. "The appointment of Ray Ash from Litton Industries to head the Office of Budget and Management is a disgrace," she said.

Ash was sworn in Friday as senators still were considering a bill to require confirmation of White House budget directors. Some Democrats wanted to question Ash about his acitivities as head of Litton, a corporation involved in multimillion-dollar defense contracts.

As to her future, the former senator said once her papers are in order, she'll be making a number of national speeches. She said her next major engagement is Feb. 24 in Atlantic City where she'll receive the American Education Award.

Mrs. Smith said she has yet to act on a number of offers to do such things as lecture, write a critique on Congress and discuss a contract to become a television commentator.

"Of course I hope to come back to Maine," she said, "but not right away. I think it would be hard for me to live in Skowhegan right now and it would be hard for many people in Skowhegan."

Blues Band Bursts Ballroom's Back

By DON BISHOP

An overflow crowd of people jammed the Student Union Saturday night, attempting to get into an 8:30 showing of the James Montgomery Blues Band.

Approximately 2000 people filled the Union lobby during the peak of around 8:15 p.m., forcing the Concert Committee to schedule a second show at 11:30 p.m.

Concert Committee Chairman Lee Trousdale called the turnout a complete surprise, which far exceeded his pre-concert maximum estimate of 1300.

Trousdale stated that 2200 tickets were sold for both shows, making this concert a good deal more financially successful than the Concert Committee's last venture featuring Swallow, which lost $600.

All of the profits coming from Concert committee concerts are put into their budget for the free concert in the spring.

Trousdale regreted the inconvenience placed on those who could not get into the early concert. Apparently many who could not get into the early show, waited for the later one. That show did not start until approximately 12:30 a.m., an hour later than originally scheduled.

Indications were that many of those crowding the Union last night were not UMass students, but from the surrounding area.

Trousdale stated that the committee had decided against selling advanced tickets due to the poor response to advanced sales for the Swallow concert.

He also said that the committee would schedule at least one more concert to be held before the spring "freebie."

Dishonorable Retreat

The Nixon Administration is making a unilateral retreat from the war on poverty. In doing so, it is losing not only its honor, but the support of millions of its citizens who are under the tyrannical rule of neglect, self-righteous individualism, and arrogance.

Mr. Nixon proposes to scrap or reduce the budgets of 70 different social welfare programs. This, in itself, would be of no concern to us, except that Mr. Nixon has not proposed anything to replace the programs.

Perhaps our localities can manage tax money more efficiently through revenue sharing. But we are fearful that without foresighted planning of the Federal government, tax money may be spent in a helter-skelter manner.

We are also fearful that without the controls imposed by the Federal government-controls that existed with the programs Nixon plans to eliminate-discrimination by local authorities against the poor, against the innovative, and against racial and ethnic minorities will burgeon.

We urge readers to write to their Senators and Congressmen protesting the proposed Nixon cuts.

Godspeed, My New Editor

Dear Steve,

I'd like to contratulate you again for your election as Collegian Editor-in-Chief. I know you have the intelligence and determination to do a good job.

As you know, I've had quite a few thoughts of my own about the paper, and as a sort of senior year "Last Supper", I'd like to share them with you in public, for the public.

I don't have to tell you that if human beings don't change and adapt themselves to new conditions, they will die. Likewise, I am sure your watchword for the Collegian will be change; not for change's sake alone, but for survival.

The fact that the Collegian is a community newspaper, financed by students–white and black–through fees and advertisements, means that you must make the paper more open and responsive than it has ever been before.

Not only must the Collegian change when it encounters new circumstances; it must engage in pure research and experimentation, juxtaposing ideas merely to see what happens, to see if what happens is better than what was.

Allow me to make a plea for compassion; not a patronizing, pitying compassion, but a self-motivated one that will lead to a stronger paper:

You must consciously, deliberately, purposefully seek diversity.

You must not be content to tell black students and Hispanic ones and women and all others who have been unrepresented and neglected to "join the Collegian."

You must actively recruit minorities and synthesize their perspectives into the paper, negotiating, not dictating.

And there is no such thing as a partial commitment to the destruction of institutionalized,unintentional racism and sexism.

There is only total commitment.

Anything less will fail.

Do not delude yourself into believing that "sticking to principle" justifies the continuation of noxious wrong.

No Nixon, no Thermidor period, no apathy, no blindfold will permanently stop the aspirations of powerless people.

I hope that when we recall your term as editor-in-chief, we will recall that it was a time of exploration and growth and sensitivity.

Good luck.

In Peace,
Don

Some Gripes, Some Info

Item #1-Snow Removal

What happened around here last week? Snow was all over, and nobody moved it. I woke up on Monday morning and walked to school, realizing it would be best to let the storm die out before putting snow removal operations into effect. Nothing happened after the storm! "Ah," I thought, "the University and the town of Amherst will wait until tonight to clear the streets. There will be no cars on the road then; the job will be easy." Tuesday morning came and still the streets were jammed with snow. So what's the reason? If it wasn't for the rain, the snow might still be here. Someone suggested that the snow packed so fast it could not be removed. Well, what about all the unpacked snow on the street? One would think Amherst had no Public Works Department. I wish someone could tell us why snow removal was so bad.

Item #2-Long Lines

A Letter To The Editor last week complained about long lines in Worcester Dining Commons. At first I thought the complaint was very mundane. Who cares about long lines in the dining commons? This isn't an important issue. However, on second thought I conceded to myself the outrageous delay was nothing anyone had to take for granted. I know Worcester Commons serves Orchard Hill, the Quad, and the Northeast Dorms. On special-meal night the situation can get quite ridiculous. Maybe a new dining hall should be built.

Item #3-Bush Leagues

A friend of mine attended the UMass-UNH game on Saturday night. Apparently, UNH had a very spirited coach who irritated some of our partisan watchers. It seems these fans heckled the coach with an array of colorful innuendos. I hope you can imagine what it sounded like. If the UNH people felt like they were playing in the bush leagues, it's because that's exactly where they were.

Item #4-Bad Relations

There is a restaurant above the Drake. I don't recall the name of it, but the management-employee relations are interesting. All waitresses are made to pay the cashiers in advance for the food and drinks which the customers receive. If the customers walk out without paying, the amount of the check is paid out of the waitress's pocket. The management doesn't lose profit no matter what happens. They also do not need security guards, because every waitress is forced to police her customers anyhow. Every customer could run the bill, but the only one who loses is the waitress. She could work all night and end up losing money. The waitress is not only a policeman but a human insurance policy for the owners.

Furthermore, the waitress's constant vigilance on her customers, to prevent them from running the bill, is the least conducive relation from which to procure tips by. Those customers who are not aware of the tyranny of the owners very easily mistake the waitress's vigil as harassment, and consequently tend to get irritated. Tips just don't come in those situations.

It might be wise to contact a local Labor Relations Board to look into this matter. It stinks to high hell, as far as I can see.

Charley Bummer's Crisis Shop

WASHINGTON–It is not generally known, but whenever newspapermen in Washington run out of things to write about they go to a small store a few blocks from the White House known as "Charley's Crisis Shop."

The owner, Charley Bummer, has been peddling crises in the nation's capital for nearly 50 years. I went to visit him the other day, as I usually do when things get quiet.

"Having a close-out sale on Vietnam crises," Charley said. "You can grab any one on the table for $1.95. As soon as the POWs have returned home, you're not going to be able to give away a Vietnam crisis."

"Then why should I buy one?" I asked.

"Anything on Vietnam could be a collector's item."

"Frankly, Charley, I'm not looking for bargains. I'd like a real 18-carat crisis for my column," I said.

"Well, why didn't you say so?" Charley replied. "I've got something in the window that's been one of the hottest sellers in moths. It's an Energy Crisis. Everyone has bought it--the New York Times, The Washington Post, CBS News, Time, Newsweek. I can't keep it in stock."

"It looks pretty good," I said, inspecting it. "How long do you think it will last?"

"It's guaranteed for six months, and we'll replace any parts if it doesn't fly."

"That's the big crisis of the month?" I asked.

"It's the best I've got. The next most popular item is the Constitutional Crisis." Charley took one out of a glass case and hld it up to the light. "This crisis is between Congress and the President. As you can see, the executive branch keeps whittling away at congressional powers."

"It doesn't look very new," I observed.

"Of course it isn't new," Charley said indignantly. "It's an antique. But there's a big demand now for this kind of crisis. It had been sitting on the shelf and I hadn't had a single call for one in 25 years. But in less than two months I've had orders for 30, and they don't care what it costs."

"Who's 'they'?"

"Political columnists and editorial writers. Now that the United States is getting out of Vietnam, the columnists and editorial people find themselves desperately short on crises which they have to supply their readers every day."

"Would you say newspapermen are having a 'Crisis Crisis'?" I asked.

"I don't know if it's reached crisis proportions," Charley said. "Don't forget, we still have the Middle East, air and water pollution, the flu and the government credibility crises. These keep selling no matter what happens.

"But where people in my business have been hurt," Charley continued, "is when some unscrupulous dealers have been pushing phony crises that don't hold up, so now the consumer is becoming wary of anything called a crisis."

An editorial writer came into the store. "Charley," he said, "I need a crisis for my next Sunday's piece. You have anything that's a little different?"

"I've got a Supreme Court Crisis on Obscenity," Charley said. "I just got it fresh in this morning."

"Okay, I'll take it with me," the editorial writer said.

"You want it gift wrapped?" Charley asked.

"No, just give it to me in a plain brown wrapper."

They Who Have Lived Not In Vain

To The Editor:

As a Christian, as a human being, and as a veteran of the war in Southeast Asia, I was appalled to learn that Mr. Nixon will not grant amnesty to those young patriots of draft-age who fled the country to bear witness to the immorality of America's involvement in an illegal war. With the same degree of vindictiveness and lack of compassion which he displayed during the pre-Christmas bombing of Hanoi and Haiphong, Mr. Nixon declared, "We cannot provide forgiveness for them. Those who deserted must pay their price, and the price is not a junket in the Peace Corps...The price is a criminal penalty for disobeying the laws of the United States."

In contrast to Mr. Nixon's stone age morality I would like to quote from Bishop Caroll Dozier of Memphis on amnesty. "If these men were truly conscientious, why should they be punished? Rather we should make reparations to them for all we have done to them in the past. I want to say that conscientious objectors, of all people, have had to suffer, and suffer very drastically for their conscientious opinions. And this in itself ought to say something about the tenor of the times in which we live. Here are young men who conscientiously feel that they cannot participate in war. And so many of our fellow citizens will grant them no appreciation of that, will concede them no honesty in their stand, insist on calling them cowards and draft-dodgers and, really, have run them out of the country. But I think that war hysteria made many of these judgements in the past. The atmosphere is different now-or it should be-so that the country has a chance of making a saner judgment on what these men are doing."

I know how frustrating it is to write letters to our national leaders. Their response to the moral judgments of the people has been deplorable but we can't stop. In addition to your Senators and Congressman, a letter to those church leaders who might have an influence on the moral consciouness of our nation might also help.

A Bit Snowy

To The Editor:

At a time when policemen, especially university policemen, are often judged harshly by students, I'm writing a note of appreciation for the help two policemen gave me. On Monday night, after the snowstorm, my car was stuck in then-unplowed 10-Lot. Two University policemen spent well over half an hour in the bitter cold helping another motorist and me in our efforts to get out of 10-Lot. They deserve public thanks for that help.

'Taint A Fit Nite

To The Editor:

I would like to use this brief moment of warmth to commend the Physical Plant personnel in charge of plowing for a brilliant display of preparation and planning for this latest storm which has set upon us. I'm serious about this! For a while there I thought that the plows on the trucks were pre-set for a specific height (one foot above the ground level) per order of the local union. Or some other such eternal verity.

But I was wrong and I hereby publicly admit it. The reasoning for the large amount of snow remaining from last Monday's "snow removal" should now be as obvious as a cow flap on your front porch. "It's easier to walk on slush and snow than it is to walk on ice", was Grandpappy Lewicke's old verity. And for evoking that late Great I bow down upon my knees to those Even Greaters at the PP.

NoDeposit,NoReturn

To The Editor:

If you are concerned with the way we are beginning to choke in our solid wastes and pollution and using the Earth's finite resources at a rate which will prove disasterously short sighted; then an article in the Town Meeting warrant should be of interest to you.

It is a proposed by-law requiring all beer and soft drink containers to carry a minimum $.05 refund value-similar in principle to laws passed already in Vermont, Oregon, Bowie, Md., and Oberlin, Ohio. The mechanisms of the by-law work to encourage more use of the reusable bottles which prevailed until the last decade when container manufacturers managed to sell the throwaway concept to America.

The effects of the change are now being felt in overburdened dumps and landfills; increased litter.

The effects of the change are now being felt in overburdened dumps and landfills, increased litter, depletion of energy and mineral resources. Definite social costs, as well as the higher product costs, create a situation we really can't afford and can now work to rectify. Grass roots activity and passage of town by-laws are the important first step towards reversing the one use trend.

A lot of work needs to be done to get this by-law through Town Meeting. The process of working towards its passage is an excellent opportunity to bring out the necessity of increasing our rate of resource reuse even if the law is eventually defeated. To capitalize on this chance many, many people are needed to help. If you can offer some time or are interested in more information contact me at Box 80, Hampshire College or phone 542-5862.

Orchard Hill-NE Music

To The Editor:

To the residents of Orchard Hill and Northeast Areas, and all other interested folks:

Last semester the Orchard Hill Music series joined forces with the Northeast Area to present two of the best concerts on this campus in all of last year—Gary Burton with the J. R. Mitchell-Byard Lancaster Quartet and Larry Coryell with the Art Ensemble of Boston. This semester the potential is even greater.

The music series is now officially the Orchard Hill-Northeast Music Series. Both areas have decided to unite for the goal of bringing people's music to this campus. We hope to experience gospel, blues, Latin, and other types of music that is a pure response to peoples' existence.

The first and perhaps most important meeting to plan the schedule for this semester will be tonight (Monday) at 9:30 p.m. in the main lounge of Webster dormitory on Orchard Hill. There is a good sum of money to work with this semester, so it will be much easier to make ideas come into reality. But we need ideas and we need people who are willing to work, whether it be setting up a hall, booking an act, or putting up posters. We urge all people who are interested to attend this meeting.

Last semester the Orchard Hill Music Series was one of the most important music promoting agencies on campus. This semester our potential is that much greater. As they say in late night movies, "We can make beautiful music together," with that hope I remain . . .

Joseph Baron
Chairperson, Orchard Hill
Northeast Music Series.

Proposed Law Center Stirs Political Battle

A major political power struggle is shaping up over the proposed establishment of an ambitious "center" for legal studies here.

The principal antagonists are the UMass administration and the Massachusetts Bar Assn.

UMass officials see the center as essential to the development of the university into a leading intellectual and social force in the state.

The bar association, on the other hand, feels there is already an oversupply of legal practitioners here and many lawyers are suffering from the effects of the general economic slowdown and the new no-fault auto insurance system, which has substantially reduced the volume of accident litigation.

Ranged on the side of UMass are such political notables as Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn, US Sen. Edward W. Brooke, and US Rep. Robert F. Drinan, former dean of the Boston College Law School.

A cost-minded Gov. Sargent leads the political opposition to the UMass law center plan.

As proposed last May by a study committee headed by Atty. Gen. Quinn, the law center would include not only a variety of degree programs in law-related liberal arts subjects, but a law school turning out 200 lawyers a year and operating at an estimated cost of $2.1 million annually.

The Quinn Report, so-called, cited five main reasons for creating the center and its law school.

.A scarcity of places in law schools in Massachusetts as compared with student demand. (The five accredited private law schools in the state — Harvard, Boston College, Boston University, Suffolk and Northeastern — were forced to reject 15,961 applications for 1995 places for the 1971-1972 academic year. "Even assuming that each applicant, on the average, applied to two Massachusetts law schools," the report said, "this means that 8,000 individuals were turned away."

.An inability of qualified students from low-income families in Massachusetts to afford the cost of a private law school, and gaps in admitting other groups such as ethnic minorities and women. (Currently, the report said, blacks make up only 4.5 percent of the total enrollment at the five accredited law schools, and women make up only 12.8 percent.)

.The importance of a law school to the enrichment of the university through contacts between law professors and faculty members from other academic disciplines.

.A need for innovative programs in legal education "to satisfy fundamental changes in student interest and legal practice while maintaining the high standards of the legal profession."

The need of the public in western Massachusetts for a pattern of legal services that a publicly-supported law school at Amherst could effectively provide.

The Quinn Report drew widespread criticism from within the legal profession in Massachusetts. In apparent response to this criticism, late last fall the UMass administration backed away somewhat from the idea of including a law school in the proposed center.

In a Nov. 3 letter to an official of the bar association, UMass Vice President Peter B. Edelman, a lawyer and former aide to Sen. Robert Kennedy, said the Quinn Report was only a basis for future planning and had no official status in the university.

"Everyone at the university who is associated with the issue," wrote Edelman, "believes the entity should be a law center, and not just a law school, an entity which treats the law not just as a subject to be taught to prospective lawyers but as an organizing discipline for the teaching and study of a variety of law-related fields...We intend to examine the issue of the (law) degree carefully as the planning process proceeds, leaving that decision to be made as time passes, but clearly not as matter for immediate action."

Edelman stressed that the university was deeply interested in developing courses which would lead to law-related careers in such fields as law enforcement, criminal justice, environmental protection and consumer protection. "These programs might operate at both the undergraduate and post-baccalaureate levels," he wrote.

The letter did little to assauge the fears of the bar association. On Dec. 13, its governing body, the House of Delegates, voted to oppose the creation of a law school at UMass "at this time." The vote overturned the majority report of a bar association subcommittee established to look into the law school issue, and in effect adopted the dissenting view of subcommittee member Hiller B. Zobel, a professor at the Boston College Law School.

"The evidence," said Zobel, "does not compel the conclusion that Massachusetts lacks sufficient practitioners to meet the legal needs of the entire community. (It) fails to show that any shortage of spaces at presently-existing law schools within and without the Commonwealth has prevented any substantial number of Massachusetts residents from obtaining a legal education. Lack of demonstrated need for a law school, combined with the abundantly proven needs for additional expenditures (for salaries of judges and supporting personnel) convinces me that...school with public money is a luxury that the Commonwealth cannot presently afford."

The overturned majority report was signed by attorneys George R. Desmond, Peter B. Hay, Charles H. Lewis, Jr., Leonard Louison and J.F. Ogozalek, Jr. It made the following arguments:

.A "vast" increase in state and Federal laws and regulations, the creation of new administrative and quasi-governmental agencies, and the growth of government in general will expand the opportunities for law practice in Massachusetts.

.Tuition charges at the seven private law schools in Massachusetts have risen so high that some qualified college graduates cannot even afford to apply for admission.

.Creation of a law school at Amherst "would give more geographical balance to legal education in Massachusetts" and provide the people of western Massachusetts the same sort of legal services now being made available in the eastern part of the state by private law schools.

.Students from the Amherst school could do clinical legal facilities in the area, to the mutual benefit of the students and the state.

.The law school could be used "as a research and review tool" to aid members of the Legislature and its study commissions.

The proposed law center has drawn support from the four private colleges which, with UMass, make up the Five College Consortium in the Pioneer Valley — Amherst, Smith, Mt. Holyoke, and Hampshire.

Smith College President Thomas C. Mendenhall, who heads the Consortium, wrote UMass President Robert C. Wood last November that all four private colleges were interested in the center "because we believe that our students could benefit from it and a number of our faculty members could contribute to it."

Mendenhall added: "The growing interests of faculty members in legal studies on the undergraduate level is paralleled by student interest. Hampshire College has a formal law program which is attracing increasing numbers of students from all five colleges (of the Consortium). The number of law-related courses in a variety of disciplines is also increasing at all our institutions."

The need for a law center at UMass is great, even if the center never includes a law school, according to Adam Yarmolinski, former professor at Harvard Law School and now Ralph Waldo Emerson University Professor at UMass.

Yarmolinski says the center would have five basic functions other than the training of prospective lawyers:

To provide education on law as a liberal arts subject for undergraduates; to expose persons preparing for professions other than law to the legal implications of those professions; to train lawyers' assistants, lay advocates and other "para-legal" personnel; to provide continuing education for lawyers; and to sponsor and support research in the general field of law.

Gov. Sargent's opposition to the law center was expressed last fall in answer to a letter from Sen. Brooke urging his approval of it.

"Frankly," Sargent said, "calling it a 'center' instead of a 'school' doesn't change much. We have a great many law schools in the state right now (and) a relative surplus of lawyers...In the final analysis, of course, it's up to the UMass trustees. But I have not yet seen evidence to persuade me that in a time of scarce resources this would be the best use of the available funds."

Carl Modecki, executive secretary of the Massachusetts Bar Assn., also stresses the surplus lawyers argument.

"Massachusetts," says Modecki, "has a little over two percent of the population in the United States but a little over four percent of the lawyers. We also have a little over six percent of the law students. Moreover, if UMass is interested in developing a nationally-known law school, as they presumably are, they will have to take in a fairly high percentage of out-of-state students, just as Harvard, Yale, Columbia, the University of Chicago, and the like, now do.

"So I don't see how the school could help very much in giving Massachusetts residents a chance at legal training. Besides, I'm not aware of any other state that approaches us in sheer numbers of law schools available — in addition to the big five we have the New England School of Law in Boston and Western New England College in Springfield."

Modecki says the association has "absolutely no objection to a law center, as such, but there is no proposal for a law center, minus a law school before us. Of course, we might be unhappy with a law center if it developed that they were training non-lawyers to do the work of attorneys. But we have no indication that they intend to do this, and certainly we'd applaud any effort, either at UMass or elsewhere in Massachusetts, to educate the public about the law and the way the law operates and its importance in our society."

Meanwhile, UMass intends to press forward with planning for the center even though the state Board of Higher Education declined to recommend planning funds in its budget for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

UMass Vice President Peter Edelman says efforts are now underway to get private foundation money for the planning, and that the money may be available by next spring.

As for the bar association, Edelman says, "It's understandable but regrettable that they are so guild oriented."

UMass and the association, it seems plain, have just begun to fight

For The Man Who Wishes He Had More

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Rick "The Freshman" Carley was a little suspicious Saturday when he returned from a week-long tour with the Massachusetts Institute of Technology concert band and found a sign on his door which said, "Best Wishes, The Hall."

Smiling suspiciously at the fellow students hovering and snickering outside his door, he opened it.

Right smack in the middle of his room was a brick wishing well-complete with roof, a bucket and a foot of water.

"My, that's impressive," Carley said, above the roar of laughter.

After a shower of coins-mostly pennies, noted a friend-Carley answered a jibe about his plans for the well with, "Why, every room should have a wishing well."

One of the "builders" said the well took 10 fellows 100 manhours to build. It was made of some 200 bricks from a building being torn down across the street from the dormitory.

Profs. Condemn Sargent Plan

The Massachusetts Society of Professors has sent telegrams to Governor Francis Sargent and Secretary of Education, Joseph Cronin, to protest the proposed plan for reorganizing higher education in the Commonwealth.

The telegram stated that the plan would destroy the concept of providing quality education through a public university, and urged that no action be taken to implement it.

The Society also denounced the way in which the plan had been drawn up without the involvement of the people most concerned by it, and advised that participation by all segments of the academic community be sought in drawing up any new plan.

The full test of the telegram reads:

"The Massachusetts Society of Professors condemns the plan for reorganizing education in the Commonwealth. We consider the plan to be destructive to the concept of a quality public university and therefore totally unacceptable. We urge you to refrain from proposing any legislative action to implement this plan.

"We deplore also the avoidance of consultation with faculty, students, and administration in formulating re-organization policy, and advise you to seek full participation of the academic community in state institutions of higher learning before any further consideration of this matter."

'Support Group' Meets Tonight

Everywoman's Center at UMass and the Valley Women's Center of Northampton have rescheduled an introductory meeting for a support group. The meeting was cancelled by last Monday's storm and is rescheduled for tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Everywoman's Center, Munson Hall.

The meeting is being held in response to inquiries by many women in the community about joining a support group. Support groups offer women the opportunity to share common experiences. Some of these are marriage, divorce, separation, going back to school, academic projects (such as comprehensive examinations and dissertations), management of family and career, being a single woman, being a single parent, parent of adopted children, deciding not to have children and alternative life styles.

The purpose of the meeting will be to explain how support groups work and the ways in which they can effect the lives of women, and to give interested women an opportunity to form support groups around common interests and schedules.

Agnew In Singapore; Promises Support

SINGAPORE (AP)-Vice President Spiro T. Agnew arrived in Singapore on Sunday for his fifth Southeast Asian stopover in six days as hundreds of tourists watched a colorful four-mile long Chinese New Year procession.

Agnew is reassuring the region's leadership that the United States intends to play a positive role in the area even after military withdrawal from Vietnam.

Agnew was met at Singapore airport by Rahim Ishak, minister of state for foreign affairs.

The American vice president has already visited South Vietnam, Cambodia, Thailand and Laos. From Simgapore he will fly to Jakarta and Kuala Lumpur before visiting Manila, which was added to his itinerary after the Philippines complained it was being bypassed.

In Bangkok, a Thai general commented after seeing Agnew off at the airport:

"We Thais strongly believe the Nixon administration will continue supporting us and other nations in this region in fighting against armed aggression."

The vice president said, in a prepared departure statement, that the Nixon administration will continue to stand by its commitments even after the cease-fire in Vietnam.

Environmental Film Series Offered On Monday Nights

By DON GLICKSTEIN

A series of films about war and peace, population growth and control, the environment, distribution of resources, and communication will be offered on Monday nights at 7:15 p.m. at the Hampden Student Center in Southwest.

Sponsored by the Global Survival Studies Program--an interdisciplinary curriculum offered through several UMass departments--the film series is aimed at increasing the "Global literacy" of students by exposing them to the issues that will pose the greatest challenge to human existence.

According to Stephen Mosher, coordinator of the films and a graduate student in the School of Physical Education, our "exploding population's misuse of the environment, even if zero population growth were achieved by the year 2000--which is highly unlikely--is going to get much worse before it can possibly get better."

The schedule of films follows:

--February 5-POPULATION-Tragedy of the Commons and India: Writings on the Sand

--February 12-POPULATION-The Banquet of Life and Brazil: The Gathering Millions

--February 26-ENVIRONMENTAL DETERIORATION-Poisoned Air and Noise: The New Pollutant

--March 5-ENVIRONMENTAL DETERIORATION-Chain of Life, The Run Around and Tom Lehrer Sings: Pollution

--March 12-RESOURCES-Mekong and The River

--March 19-RESOURCES-Multiply and Subdue the Earth

--April 9-CROSS-CULTURAL COMMUNICATIONS-Where is Prejudice, Is it Right Always to be Right, Neighbors, and A Chairy Tale

--April 23-CROSS-CULTURAL COMMUNICATIONS-Lord of the Flies

--April 30-WAR AND PEACE-Night and Fog

--May 7-WAR AND PEACE-War Games, The Hat and Only the Strong

Women's Careers Workshop Tonight

WHAT CAN WE DO: Alternative Careers for Women, a workshop for one evening, will be held tonight at 7, in room 163 of the Campus Center.

Billed as an informal exchange with working women, this workshop was designed to expose undergraduate women to different professionallike fields that may interest them. There will be half a dozen speakers who will briefly explain what it is they do and why women should be encouraged to enter these fields.

For the greater part of the evening the women will talk together informally. The idea is for the students directly to contact the women whose career they are especially interested in, ask questions, receive personal attention. Some of the careers represented will be writer-editor, doctor, lawyer, journalist, agency administrator, women's center director.

All women who have something to contribute to the discussions are welcome; any women with questions about careers are urged to attend. The workshop is sponsored by the Student Government Association and is organized by Janet Pearlman. Anyone with any specific questions can contact her at 549-6795. Please come, and bring a friend.

Draft Counseling Services Offers Two 3-Credit Courses

Draft Counseling Services will offer two 3-credit courses for draft counselors this semester. One will be a basic course in draft counseling which will cover the structure of the Selective Service System, classifications, appeals, lottery, resistance, and counseling techniques. For the first four weeks, the course will meet on Wednesday evenings from 7-10. Following the four weeks of classroom instruction, the rest of the semester will be devoted to applying the counseling skills in supervised counseling situations.

The second course will be an advanced course for those who have already had some counselor training. It will include training of counselors with supervision, and refinement of advanced counseling techniques.

Those interested in taking either course should obtain a course change sheet and contact Gil Salk in 430 SU no later than 2:30 Friday, Feb. 9.

These courses are being offered with the reminder that the Draft is still with us. Inductions can resume at any time; even without them, the Selective Service System will continue to function. The lottery will be held this month, physicals will be given, classifications will be issued, and people will want to file appeals and request classification as conscientious objectors.

Enrollment in each course is limited to 15, so those interested should register as soon as possible. The courses are sponsored by Project 10.

At its meeting of November 30, 1972, the Faculty Senate voted to extend the deadline for all changes in undergraduate registration (drop, add with the permission of the instructor, and exercise of the pass/fail option) to four weeks from the first day of classes. After consultations with the Registrar, Academic Deans, and the Academic Matters Committee, it has been decided that this new regulation would go into effect for the Spring. The date in the Master Calendar pertaining to this deadline is hereby being changed to:

February 22, 1973: Last day for undergraduate students to add and/or drop a course without record.

February 23, 1973: Last day for students to exercise their pass/fail option.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Gemini and Virgo persons have much in common: both are associated with the planet Mercury—both are restless, inquisitive and can be flirtatious. Virgo helps Gemini to settle affairs. Gemini aids Virgo in achieving goals, fulfilling ambitions. Together, the two signs could have problems—both would want to set pace. Of all the zodiacal signs, these two represent perhaps the most challenges, can be tantalizing, puzzling and certainly are seldom, if ever, satisfied with the status quo.

ARIES (March-April 19): Forces are scattered and it is necessary now for you to utilize alternatives. Be flexible. Nothing is apt to be permanently settled. Friends, associates change their minds—intentions may be good but confusion reigns.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Not wise now to mix friendship and finances. Trust your own hunch. Don't become inextricably involved. Avoid one who constantly tells sob story. Look out for yourself without being selfish. You will understand.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Obtain hint from Aries message. Move around—see and be seen. Sagittarian could play prominent role. One who seems to oppose you may actually be getting to know you. Look ahead—make yourself aware of potential.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Tread lightly. Don't insist, chide or cajole. Be aware of fine points. Check details in thorough manner. Withhold final decisions, conclusions. Aquarius and Leo persons figure prominently. Read between the lines.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Change of scenery is apt to be featured. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Means ask questions, obtain answers. Gemini person could show you the way. Member of opposite sex may appear cool. But such appearances now are a facade.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Lie low. Time is on your side. Play waiting game. Be diplomatic without being subservient. Don't fool yourself about property, home. Face facts as they exist. You will be given additional responsibility.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Study Virgo message now for valuable hints. Take nothing for granted. One who promises much may have little to back up intentions. Relative could be living in dream world. Know it and base decisions on personal investigation.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Emotional responses are featured. Utilize past experience. Wishing will not necessarily make it so, especially where finances are concerned. Key now is to get organized. Build on solid base. Capricorn person can aid.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You tend now to fall prey to illusion. Key is to combine what you desire with actual requirements. If mature, you succeed. Otherwise, you retrace steps. Finish what you start. Strive to reach more persons with your views.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Hold off on trips. Co-operate with Scorpio. Maintain moderate pace. Check diet. Avoid extremes. Don't promise more than you can deliver. Rectify recent error. Do what is right for you, not what others expect or want you to do.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Get an accounting. Be aware of assets, deficits. Plug financial loophole. Protect your own interests. Someone apparently is trying to sell you proverbial bill of goods. Know it and respond accordingly.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Break away from situation which restricts, depresses. Encourage new social contacts. You do have life of your own to live. Let others know it. More important, know it yourself—and act like it. You will comprehend.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are attractive, have plenty of curiosity and an abundance of charm. You could succeed in the arts, especially in writing. August stands out as your most significant month in 1973.

Women Gymnasts Stop Trenton

By MDC STAFF

In what turned out to be more of an educational endeavor rather than an athletic competition the women's gymnastics team easily handed Trenton State College a defeat. The final score was UM 95.6 and Trenton 85.9 points. It was the team's first meet and served as a source of feedback, as well as setting the pace for things to come.

Just about every team member competed and there was little attention given to the unexciting, disorganized format of the meet.

The four events were competed in Olympic order with each team having six representatives per event. The first event was vaulting and UMass got off to a strong start as Candy Gross, finishing fourth, handspringed herself to her best performance ever.

Marion Kulick contributed a decent vault while Co-Capt. Margie Combs launched herself into second place. Jeannine Burger blasted a solid vault that nailed down first place.

The next event was the uneven bars where freshman Gail McCarthy got things rolling with a fine performance. Co-Capt. Betsy East excited the crowd with a spectacular full twisting hecht dismount and finished an underscored fifth. Although shaky in spots, Jeannine Burger fought her way to a second place finish. Margie Combs performed a smooth routine and wrapped an unbelievable hecht dismount to capture first place honors.

The balance beam event showed a marked improvement as Gail Hannan, Heidi Armstrong, and Thanne Poth all performed impressively. Candy Gross earned herself fourth place and Anne Vexler leaped onward to finish second. First place went to Jeannine Burger who threw a 1-1/2 twisting front somi dismount. The final event was floor exercise and UMass finished very strongly.

Gail Hannan turned in a fine effort to get the team off to a good start. Freshman Alicia Goode, and sophomore Thanne Poth followed suit. Anne Vexler (underscored at third place) and Jeannine Burger (first place) showed the New Jersey crowd why UMass had the number one floor exercise team in the country last year.

In the all-around competition coach "Bunky" Evans entered Ms. Burger and Ms. Poth giving Margie Combs a rest from beam and floor. Jeannine had her best meet, leading all scorers with a 33.05 total. Evans plans to submit her strongest lineup for the next varsity competition against Penn State and Clarion. The meet will be held this coming Saturday in State College, Pa.

Tomorrow night in the Boyden auxiliary gym the junior varsity squares off against a very powerful Springfield J.V. team. The meet begins at 7 p.m. and the campus community is invited to come out and support their team.

Soph Jeannine Burger shows her form in win over Trenton State this weekend . . .

'76 Winter Games Go To Innsbruck

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AP) — Olympic officials gave the 1975 Winter Games to Innsbruck yesterday and hoped that Austrians have forgotten the bitter affair of Karl Schranz.

The executive body of the International Olympic Committee chose the Austrian city over three other applicants--Chamonix, France; Lake Placid, N.Y., and Tampere, Finland.

The name of Schranz--the Austrian skier barred from the 1972 Olympics at Sapporo because of professionalism, figured in the four-hour parley at the Palais de Beaulieu in Lausanne.

Lord Killanin, IOC president, asked the Innsbruck delegation whether the Schranz affair still rankled the Austrian people.

Innsbruck Mayor Alois Luger, who led the delegation, said:

"I assured the executive body that the explusion of Schranz was all forgotten."

Sunday's decision ended the crisis caused by the withdrawal of Denver, which gave up the Games after a Colorado voters last November refused use of state funds to help stage them.

Levine Captures Record; Northeastern The Meet

By WALT POWERS

"This has to be one of the happiest days of my life," said a smiling Steve Levine, after his record setting victory in the 600-yard run against Northeastern. Levine, who also anchored the victorious UMass mile relay team, was one of the few bright spots for UMass on what was otherwise a dismal afternoon.

UMass could never overcome the effects of a six-week layoff, lack of practice and experience in the field events, and the absence of a number of key performers in falling to the Northeastern trackmen by a score of 85-24.

As expected, Northeastern dominated the field events, sweeping the pole vault and the no. 35 weight throw. Sophomore Carmen Letizia scored the first UMass weight event points of the season in the shotput, garnering third place with a heave of 43'7. In the long jump, Pete Ryan edged out teammate Ken Banda for second place with a jump fo 21'8-3/4". Banda's third place leap covered 21'6-1/2".

Mark Hughes and John Osborne both reached six feet in the high jump, but it was only good enough for third place as N.U.'s Ron Judge reached 6'4", and sophomore Mike Brennan established new school and meet records with a jump of 6'7".

Northeastern exhibited talent and depth in the sprints and hurdles, sweeping both events. In the fifty-yard dash, N.U.'s Bill Milton edged teammates Fred Freelow and Pete Sabia in a photo finish, with Minutemen Tony Pendleton, Dennis Busa, and Tom Beland only a tenth of a second behind. Milton's winning time of 5.5 tied his own meet record.

The highlight of the meet came in the 600-yard run. Steve Levine, the UMass recordhilder and team co-captain, and third in New England last year, was running against Paul Horrigan, the Northeastern recordholder, team captain, and no. 1 in New England last year. Also running for Northeastern was John Wooten, a sophomore ranked fourth in New England.

Levine was apprehensive at the start, afraid that if Wooten and Horrigan grabbed an early lead, they would hold the inside two lanes, making it difficult to pass on the narrow Northeastern track.

Horrigan and Wooten went out hard. After 2-1/2 laps, Horrigan, with Wooten close behind, led Levine by as much as thirty yards, and appeared headed for a big victory. But Levine made a furious kick on the gun lap, sprinting past Wooten thirty yards from the finish, and catching Horrigan near the tape. His 1:13.8 clocking clipped four-tenths of a second off the old meet record.

Freshman Ken Graham led a young trio of Huskies to a surprising 1-2-3 sweep of the thousand-yard run. Graham's time of 2:15.3 set a new meet record.

Bill Gillin of UMass came from behind in the gun lap to earn his first victory of the season in the mile. Gillin ran conservatively and it paid off. Two Northeastern freshmen, Bernie Lancaster and Mike Buckley, charged crazily into the lead at the start. Buckley set a withering pace, covering the first half mile in 2:05. Near the three-quarter mark, the pace slowed, Buckley faded, and Gillin advanced. Gillin's smooth, hard stride on the gun lap, carried him to victory past Kenny Flanders and Charley Jaynes of Northeastern.

Freshman Tom Maguire hung on for fifteen laps, moved strongly toward the end, and then fell short in his bid to win the two mile. In that race, a trio of Huskies forged into an early lead, and set a steady, monotonous pace. Maguire lay back in fourth place for twelve laps, then moved gradually into contention. On the eighteenth lap, he moved past N.U.'s Dave Goldsmith, and went after Joe Crowley, also from N.U. At times he came close, but Crowley hung on to win in 9:14.6, less than four seconds ahead of Maguire.

Finally, in the relays, UMass came within a tenth of a second of a sweep. Both races were extremely close. The UMass mile relay team of Tom Beland, John Mounger, Dennis Busa, and Steve Levine needed a hard, come from behind kick on the anchor leg by Levine to win it, Bill Gillin was unable to outkick his N.U. opponent on the anchor of the two-mile relay, and the team of Randy Thomas, Pete Byron, Devin Croft, and Gillin lost by a tenth of a second.

The winter track team, lacking an adequate home facility, will meet Dartmouth on Tuesday in Hanover, N.H.

Divers Show Poise But Mermen Continue Slide

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

In the home territory the Engineers of M.I.T. downed the Minutemen Swimmers 72/40 in Saturday's competition. UMass did as well as they expected against a strong team who swam their best performance of the year.

As usual, highlight of the meet for the Minutemen was the Diving Competition in which they completely dominated the one and the three meter events. Paul Lelito won first places accumulating over 230 points in each event. Jeff Crouse scored second. These divers have really been doing fine jobs in all the meets so far and show much future potential.

In the swimming events Ron Boucher scored the only first for UMass in the 500 Freestyle (his best time of the year) 5:56. Also he placed second in the 200 Freestyle.

Much of M.I.T.'s strength was in distance Freestyler Schultz, who won the 1,000 Freestyle in 11 minutes. Minuteman Spencer Sullivan placed third (he just started swimming this event and cut 30 seconds off his time).

Just touched out of first places for UMass were Dagnese in the 500 Freestyle, and Duncan Loomas 200 Individual Medley.

Also grabbing second place points for the Minutemen were Dick Blaisdell, 500 Freestyle, Zulich 200 Butterfly, and George Kweicien 200 Backstroke.

Strong for the Engineers were Breaststrokers Sheffield (200 Breaststroke in 2:29) and Schloerb.

Third places were won by Kevin McGinn 200 Backstroke and Dagnese 200 Breaststroke (first time swimming the event this season).

The Engineers won both Relay events just touching out the Minutemen in the 400 Medley Relay.

UMass swimmers have been working extremely hard these past few weeks and have shown steady progress. Wednesday they travel to Tufts, a very flexible team that always does well in its own pool. Up and coming are the Yankee Conference Championships this weekend and dual meets with U.R.I. and Central Conn.

However the swim team has had some rather unexpected problems this season. Head swim coach Joe Rodgers has been ill and the team has beer split between coaches with Coach MaCafferey having to assume the duties in his absence. But the mermen are young and although the record hasn't really shown the progress made this season, for the first time since the Korean War, I guess you could say there's hope for the future.

Wolfpack On Prowl

The "UCLA of the East" isn't located at Maryland after all, it seems.

Instead, it appears to be just a little to the south, in North Carolina.

Coach Lefty Driesell often has referred to his Maryland basketball team as the East's answer to UCLA's strongboys, but the Terps haven't been living up to their billing.

The claim as No. 1 in the East, though, might belong to an Atlantic Coast Conference colleague of Maryland--North Carolina State.

The second-ranked Wolfpack, who already have beaten Maryland twice this year and also turned back northern neighbor North Carolina, found another ACC mark in Virginia Saturday. The undefeated Wolfpack beat the Cavaliers 64-59 for their 15th straight victory.

...Wrestlers Win

"I don't know what happened out there, but I can say it was like wrestling Gumby," said Benson after coming off the mat.

Coast Guard's 190 pounder decked Bob Konowicz after Bob came back to tie up the score, and that brought the team score up to 19-18 UMass.

Then the best bet in a heavyweight uniform appeared on the mat. Carl Dambman made it two for two in the Captain's get-pins-department as he pinned his man right off in the second period. That brings Carl's career pins to 31, and made the final score 25-18.

Cagers Tame Tactless Cats

By EARL BARROLL

Zzzzzzzzzz. No, not the movie and even that at times was worth a few. But yes, the basketball game Saturday night at Curry Hicks Cage between UMass and New Hampshire.

The final was 74-59, the Minutemen won and to be sure it wasn't in its entirety the product of the Cage. To put this game in its proper perspective would border on the ridiculous for in lieu of UNH coach Jerry Friel's attempt at a caffiene-free upset, his slow down tactics kept the margin from the 30-40 point range.

It was clearly apparent that Friel was content with a 2-0 win. And this typewriter would have still been somewhere in a sleeping bag under E section at this moment. His Wildcats stalled the ball on offense (it took two minutes before they got the first shot of the game off). They zoned the Minutemen on defense. And they perpetrated a lull that took the edge off the Cage crowd a good portion of the game.

"You can't blame him for this strategy", said Jack Leaman. "Actually he did the right thing. It gets to be a bit frustrating, resulting a lot of the time in hurried shots and bad passes by the team that wants to move the ball. But our guys were very disciplined and I was very pleased with how they handled this situation. It does get pretty difficult to be patient and play your own game when you don't have the ball."

As the final indicates this didn't last too long. Still it was strange that even when the Minutemen busted this insomnia scenario open, UNH was pleased as punch to keep the tempo anywheres from neutral to reverse. That's basketball for you.

This was the type of game that play-by-play and discription are almost as bad as what took place itself. So here are a few observations that added, believe it or not, a great deal of spice to the festivities:

Jim Burke and Tom McLaughlin's kamikazee mission early in the game that boistered the UMass full-court trap and deflated the New Hampshire stall. Burke was named the MVP of the game by Channel 27. Upon leaving the Cage Leaman asked him for five, Burke gave him a pinky. Leaman asked for a rebate and the 6'3 soph said "that's OK coach."

How about Al Skinner, Dr. A. (sorry—had to do it), who is fast becoming one of the most polished cagers in the East explored the unknown for the umpteenth time in as many weeks with 17 points, seven rebounds and seven assists, taking only one shot in the second half, while hitting 8 for 11 overall. Al had 14 in the first half, but they all came within UMass' last 22 points. His finest solo came with UMass up 24-15 when he took a pass from Rick Pitino, dealt on three defenders, tucked the ball in a hunched position and then took off for the rafters for two. Bring back the dunk rule.

If there were any Long Island basketball freaks in the Cage, they got their money's worth when Skinner and Tom Gilliams combined on back-to-back Island specials in the second half. First it was Tom from Al, then Al from Tom, but the question still remains "who wanted who to shoot?"

Of course there was the volitile, emotional and fiend of the away from home crowds, Jerry Friel himself, who looked more like Washington on the bow at the Potomac with his gestures after his mighty-mite Erie Paragne tickled the twine from three-point range.

Meanwhile it took almost 38 minutes for the Cage to come entirely to its feet when Chuck Olsen, with 2:04 to play hit an 18-footer from the corner.

But perhaps the best of the evening belongs to Peter Gammons of the Boston Globe. When running over the final stats on the phone Gammons inquired what a "Hinkwitz" was. In reality was the 6'6 center for the Wildcats who scored six points. Said Gammons "It sounds like a 4'11 forward." Zzzzzzzzzz.

Dambman Saves With Late Pin As UMass Outlasts The Guard

By JOHN BOCK

New London, Conn. — Their match plan was to keep close enough to the Minutemen in points and then catch them in the last period when they started to suck wind.

They were the Bears of the U.S. Coast Guard Academy and their plan didn't work as the UMass Matmen were in shape enough to best Coast Guard 25-18.

CG Coach Steve Elderidge told his team that they had a good chance to overcome UMass in the third period (when five minutes of wrestling had already elapsed) if they didn't get too far behind in points.

Minutemen Coach Homer Barr had this comment, "Our endurance index is starting to come back up and this is what fouled up Coast Guard's match plan."

At 118 Co-Captain Dave Amato never gave his man a chance to catch him in the third period because he showed him the lights right off the bat in the second period. It was Amato's third pin on the season and brought his record up to 6-2.

Paul Rodriguez made his varsity debut at 126 and had a terrible first period, getting taken down four times. Paul came back strong in the next two periods but couldn't put any more points on the board and lost 8-4.

At 134 pounds Mike McGlaughlin found out too late that he could have beaten his man by coming to his feet from the bottom and dropped a 4-2 decision Coast Guard's 134 pounder.

Tony Rome hasn't found the going tough yet at 142 pounds as he decisioned his opponent 10-2.

Another Frosh Long Islander made his first varsity appearance and was a lot less than fortunate. Jim Jordan was behind four points and coming back strong when he was reversed and pinned in the second period of the 150 pound bout.

At this point UMass was down 12-9 and definitely needed a win and got one from Chris Cadwallader as he decisioned his man 6-5. Chris almost became the only victim of CG's match as his opponent gained all five points in the third period.

This may sound strange but Cliff Blom recorded his first victory at 167 at the same time he started to cut his weight down to 150. With the whole team wrestling up a weight class, Blom was a little worried, but he showed that the nose to the grindstone and the opponent's nose in the mat will help bring home those 10-5 decisions.

At 177 pounds Steve Benson mauled his man 18-2. Benson used about every move that he is famous for and couldn't understand why he didn't get the fall.

Skaters Bow In OT

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

A poised UMass hockey squad succumbed to the Huskies of Northeastern at the still dingy arena Saturday night, as NU freshman Jim Martell scored his second goal of the night at 6:09 of sudden death overtime giving the Huskies a 6-5 triumph over the visiting Minutemen.

It was indeed a tough loss to take.

The roof seemingly had fallen in on the Minutemen in the second stanza as the Huskies clicked for three unanswered goals within a three minute stretch near the end of that period. The quick barrage broke the game open at the time and put the Minutemen in the hole 2-5.

After the fifth NU goal, the Huskie skating and passing clinic of the first 35 minutes gave way to the Minutemen's exhibition on the dynamics of checking. The show featured Captain Don Riley, who on this night wasn't the gut you'd want to run into in the alley (behind the arena or on a hockey rink for that matter). The Minutemen defense, which had earlier appeared like they missed the bus to Boston, finally made its presence felt and things began to happen.

The Minutemen chipped away at the three goal deficit, led by none other than our own #4 (no, not Bobby Orr) Pat Keenan who had, for him, a routine night collecting the hat trick and assisting on a fourth. After Keenan (28 goals in 14 games) scored his and the teams third goal near the end of the second period, #4 set up Lonnie Avery in the beginning of the third. The Minutemen were down by only one.

The Minutemen continued to press and at the thirteen minutemark Scott Stuart scored the tying goal from Phil Esposito's slot position as he banged home a pass from Don Riley with another assist going to Jim Lynch.

The final six minutes of the game found the NU penalty box occupied by one, and for 18 seconds two Huskies. You couldn't say that the Minutemen didn't have their chances to ice the game, but the Huskie defense was up to the challenge and held on until the buzzer went off and the game went into a 10 minute sudden death overtime. And then came Martell.

The Minutemen were greeted at the St. Botolph St. Palace like intruders at an exclusive affair as the high-flying Huskies boasting an All-Canadian attack showed the Minutemen that they were not to be skated with on this night. The defense was porous at best throughout the first stanza and if it weren't for some nifty heroies from UM net-minder Chuck Theault the game would have been a laugher early.

In the second period the Minutemen finally put the facts together that they couldn't skate with the Huskies and they did what they had to—start hitting.

Something that could have been a tough break for the Huskies in the loss of NU captain Les Chaisson in the second period turned out to be hardly that, as the second and third lines picked up the slack with a more than adequate performance while providing the three-goal barrage which propelled the Huskies ahead in the second period. Being a team made up primarily of freshman and sophomores NU will have to be reckoned with have to be reckoned with in Division I and will be seriously contending for Division I honors in the not too distant future.

For the 7-6-1 Minutemen they come back into the friendly confines of Division II and Orr Rink Wednesday night when they host another tribe of Huskies in Connecticut. Winning has been the rule rather than the exception in Division II where the Minutemen boast a 6-2-1 mark.

"Frosh"

This past year the NCAA has taken a major step in changing the collegiate major sports scene. Freshman sports were abolished and though there was some criticism at the time, now there is silence.

Maybe the critics are just waiting to see the colleges hang themselves or just maybe they're tired of not being listened to. Soon, they will return and sorrowfully announce, "I told you so."

The change which allows freshmen to play varsity sports made it through the football season and is halfway through the basketball season. Now is a good time to see what has happened.

The rule was forced upon the colleges supposedly to help combat inflation, but in reality the reasoning was much more in line with that of a business or factory. The logic was that if we could make money using the player for three years, why not increase the profits by using him for four.

In spotlighted sports such as football or basketball, that is where the pressure is intense. Minor sports such as swimming or skiing can be justified because of lack of funds, but the money makers cannot.

A freshman such as Cliff Blom who has a record of 7-2 as a varsity wrestler is not under the same strain as King Gaskins who was seen as the savior of Holy Cross basketball. The difference between Blom and Gaskins is money. Blom gets zero, while Gaskins is paid via scholarship for his participation.

Adjusting to college life is a very emotional period of one's life and a freshman does not need the added burden of being a campus hero. he should be allowed to adjust academically before he is asked to become a varsity ballplayer (The season involves many hours of endless practice and a freshman is more likely to fall behind if he is the key to team success).

The concept expressed by Freshman football coach Bill Maxwell, last fall, exemplifies what freshman sports should be. Maxwell said that the UMass program was set up to allow the frosh to adjust. They play a shortened schedule (five games) with no practices scheduled for the weekends and players are allowed to skip practices to study.

King Gaskins has been suspended twice already for skipping practice at Holy Cross.

The pressure must be tremendous for his basketball output. Under the old freshman standard, Gaskins would not be faced with the overwhelming publicity and who knows how much less interference from other interested schools. Ever since the story broke as to Gaskins' disenchantment with being a model performer, other schools have been listening and doing maybe more, to grab an athlete.

Freshmen may be better than they've ever been before, but they deserve a fair chance to get orientated before being pushed into the money racket. The ABA started the mad rush by grabbing undergraduates as hardships, but the NCAA does not have to follow. Back to Academia.

Graduate Senate To Fight CC Fee

By JEFFREY LEVIN

In a brief session last night, the Graduate Student Senate took the first step in a suit to stop the payment of the Campus Center fee by graduate students.

The suit, as explained by student attorney Richard Howland, may seek the return of past Campus Center fees paid by graduate students. Many graduate students feel they should not have to pay the fee, claiming they do not use the building, and do not want to, either.

Howland said that over the semester break he met with a representative of the Boston law firm of Gerstein and Weiner, and said the lawyers are satisfied that no students' interests could be harmed by the proposed suit.

Howland also said action in the matter "is likely to be a very long process."

When asked about when the proceedings could begin, Howland replied that they may be able to initiate the suit by this summer. If that couldn't be accomplished, he said that the work would begin next fall.

On the funding of the lawsuit, the Senate debated the ways of financing the endeavor. A member said the Senate's budget would be strained by the case unless it was supplemented with additional funds. The issue was put to rest when a motion was passed which suggested that the Senators consult with their constituencies before a vote is taken on how to raise the necessary monies at the next meeting in 2 weeks.

In an unrelated matter, Attorney Howland also requested of the Graduate Senate a committee to work with him on a regular basis to determine how he can solve any legal problems that graduate students as a group may have.

In other business, the Senate passed a motion which would pay the Senate Treasurer a weekly salary of $25.

The group also voted to increase its advertising budget from $150 to the sum of $400.

The final topic of discussion concerned a proposal by the Graduate Senate to remove its offices from the Campus Center and have them placed in the Graduate Research Center. Before action is taken on this matter, the Senate will submit a formal request for the change to the Graduate School.

The intended headquarters switch indirectly is related to Campus Center as some Graduate Student Senate members voiced resentment at the policy that makes them do their Senate work in the Campus Center Complex.

Rep. Morini Favors State Loyalty Oath

By MARK VOGLER

Rep. Louis Morini, R-Northampton, said Monday that those who favor retaining the state's loyalty oath are "good Americans" and those who don't want to take it are "bomb throwers".

Rep. Morini is one of three members of the Legislature's Joint Committee on Public Service, who voted last Tuesday in opposition of the bill initiated in December by Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst and Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst to repeal the Massachusetts Loyalty Oath for state employees.

The bill won favorable support from the committee, receiving a 10-3 recommendation. The two other legislators besides Morini to vote against the bill, were Reps. Thomas Creighton, D-Uxbridge and Royal Switzler, R-Wellesley.

Should the bill remain alive through its three readings in the House–the first one being today–it would then go before the Senate for debate.

"I figure the Commonwealth should keep the loyalty oath," Morini said. "What's wrong with taking an oath? You take an oath to

Black Scientists To Tutor

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

The creation of a tutoring program was the main order of business at the semester's first meeting of the Black Scientist Society last night.

The Society, started last semester by engineering majors James Parks and Trent Poole, is angled towards heightening the awareness in the black community of the need for black scientists, bringing more black students onto campus who plan to major in the "hard sciences" and to help black students now on campus majoring in the sciences.

Poole led off the meeting by pointing out the need for an "interest group" to back blacks majoring, or planning to major, in the sciences. Poole pointed to the high rate of failure among black science majors on campus as proof of the need for an organization to assist them. Rhody McCoy, director of the CEEBS program called it the need to show entering students, "that the 'impossible' is possible."

Bob Padgett, a graduate student in public health who is coordinating the tutorial program stressed the need for more blacks in the sciences. He gave as an example the fact that there are only 7,000 black doctors in the United States, or 2% of the total.

Padgett told the 30 people attending the meeting that the opportunity was "golden" for entering the medical profession. Padgett said some form of socialized medicine was probable in the near future, which he said would increase the demand for medical administrators. In addition, Poole said that some eastern medical schools were initiating programs for minority students. Padgett urged Society members interested in medicine to take advantage of those programs.

To make the tutoring program work best Padgett said the students would have to let him know in advance which courses they felt they could need help in. Padgett said he hoped to have a program that could provide students with "instant" help. For pre-med students he stressed the need to do well in the hard science courses, especially organic chemistry, which he said medical schools place high importance in as an indicator of the students ability. Padgett said with the tutoring program there would be no reason for students to fail the chemistry, physics and calculas courses required in almost all science majors. Padgett said those courses were difficult, but would give the student the discipline needed to be successful in the sciences.

Poole and Parks said the Society is stressing academic excellence and self-help within the Society. They called the tutorial program an important part of the Society.

In addition to the tutoring program the Society plans to start a library covering the sciences and the history of blacks in the field. It also plans to counsel black freshmen who are considering the sciences and provide them with tutoring if needed.

The Society is also seeking funds to start the Engineering Career Orientation program. ECO would be a joint program with the UMass engineering department to find inner-city high school students, preferably sophomores, who have an interest in science. Poole and Parks explained the program would initially find 40 students who had a high interest and a high probability of success and bring 10 of those onto the campus for three summers, in co-ordination with the Upward Bound program.

Those students would be "introduced" to college sciences and take basic science courses. There would be a follow-up program between the summers.

The purpose of the program would be to encourage students to enter the sciences, and Parks said funding was still being arranged.

Other programs the Society plans are seminars on the sciences, and "receptions" to explain the goals of the Society to black science majors and attract minority students interested in the sciences. The Society hopes to hold their first reception within the month.

The Society's office is in 329B in the Engineering Laboratories. The office hours are from 3:30 to 5:00 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Candidates Differ On Rent Issues

(Editor's Note: In order to acquaint students with the candidates for Selectman in the Feb. 20 Amherst Town Election, Edward Fogarty, Collegian Staff Reporter, is writing a three-part series interview with the candidates.)

By ED FOGARTY

Incumbent Merle L. Howes and challenger George Scheurer differ sharply on the issues of rent control, the adequacy of the present landlord-tenant committee, and university town relations. Both Mr. Howes and Mr. Scheurer are candidates for selectman in the Feb. 20 Town election.

When asked about establishing a rent control board in Amherst, Mr. Howes said, "I do not support rent control." He said that the present landlord-relations committee has been "very, very successful."

George Scheurer said he would work to establish a committee to explore the idea of rent control in Amherst. Mr. Scheurer said, "There is a need for rent control in Amherst. Before setting up such a board many problems would have to be solved such as what an adequate profit-margin would be. These are technical problems. I fully support rent control." Mr. Scheurer further stated that the present landlord-relations committee doesn't have the power "to do anything".

Mr. Sheurer said that a rent control board would be able to protect the tenant from exploitation by landlords.

"For instance," said Mr. Sheurer, "a rent control board would be able to stop the current practice of 'rent-gouging' and shoddy construction." 'Rent-gouging' is charging the tenant on a per head basis rather than per room, which means the tenant cannot share the costs of the room. Mr.Scheurer also said rent control would stop speculation for high profit by big landowners in Amherst. Mr.Scheurer said that a rent control board would enforce certain building codes and maintain reasonable profit-margins for the speculator.

Mr. Howes stated that a rent-control board would be hard to administer and that there are better ways to handle rental problems. Mr. Howes said that the present landlord-relations committee does not have the power to control the level of rent, but that it is able to handle any lack of responsiveness and services on the part of the landlord. To control the level of rent in the Amherst area, "the laws of supply and demand are much more effective than rent control," said Mr. Howes.

On the subject of the timing of the recent caucus vote, Mr. Howes said, "We considered the problem, but someone would always miss out."

The town has to coordinate the election calendar for others besides the students, Howes said.

Further, he said, "at the time it was planned, on Nov. 27, 1972, we didn't know if there would be a caucus." On the subject of student voting in Amherst elections, Mr. Howes said, "The Board of Selectmen wants to make every attempt to make it convenient for those registered in Amherst to vote."

The town, he said, is considering holding elections in May or June of this year.

Mr. Scheurer claimed student interests were not taken into account in setting the date for the caucus. He said that "the town is terribly paranoid about a student takeover." Mr. Sheurer stated that he feels that students are responsible and that he would plan the election calendar for resident students as well as townspeople.

In response to a question on University-town relations, Mr. Howe said, "I don't know of any way in which the town and the University could work in any greater harmony. For example, the University supports the Town's request to the Commonwealth for more land for the sewage treatment plant. In addition, the University administration supported the transfer of land for the fire station and helped share the purchase of fire equipment."

Mr. Scheurer said that the University is a large user of the town's resources. UMass receives reduction in cost for using large quantities of water. He said that this is one example of where town and University should work closer so as not to exploit the other.

Senators Introduce Bill For High Speed Trains

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two U.S. senators have introduced a bill to establish two-hours passenger train service linking Boston, New York and Washington.

Connecticut Republican Sen. Lowell Weicker and Sen. Vance Hartke, D-Ill., would establish a high speed system with trains averaging 150 miles-per-hour by 1976.

"The time has come for an end to lip service to rail service," Weicker and Hartke said in a statement released Monday.

Weicker said the bill introduced Monday is the first step in a two-part plan that would provide "superspeed" trains traveling the Boston-Washington route at up to 400 miles an hour by 1896.

Weicker also plans to introduce legislation making New London the one stop on the "superspeed" run between New York and Boston.

The New London terminal, near the junction of Interstate 95 and Route 52, would serve as a feeder facility channeling passengers using the present high-speed train to the new "superspeed" service, Weicker's statement said.

The Weicker-Hartke bill authorizes $400 million to the Army Corps of Engineers for track welding, construction, curve straightening and other design changes necessary for high-speed trains. It also provides $225 million express your loyalty to this country. I think that those who don't want to take the oath are a disgrace to our country. I'm one for taking the oath."

Rep. Morini said that he thought there would be some groups lobbying against the oath-repeal bill, but didn't know specifically who the parties would be.

The bill has been opposed by representatives of the Metropolitan Police Patrolman's Union, the American Legion, the Massachusetts Police Association, Disabled American Veterans, and Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Rep. Morini said he has his doubts as to whether the bill will pass.

"There are many groups around who favor keeping the oath. The VFW and the American Legion are just two organizations who are not against taking the oath."

Morini said he was surprised that the committee endorsed the repeal of the oath. "I don't know what the hell's wrong with that committee. They should have thrown that bill out right away."

BOWAAC On Abortion

By MARY SMITH

Tonight, Ruth Getts of the Boston Women's Abortion Action Coalition will discuss the Supreme Court abortion ruling and what it means in the struggle of women to gain control of their lives and bodies. The meeting will take place in the Student Senate Council Chambers on the second floor of the Student Union at 7:30 P.M.

According to the Court's recent 7-2 decision, abortion can be banned, by state law, only after the first twenty-four weeks of pregnancy. The Court limited restrictions on abortions between the twelfth and twenty-fourth weeks to those concerning the safety of conditions under which abortions are to be performed. For the first twelve weeks no restrictions on abortions are allowed.

Already well-financed anti-abortion forces are organizing to reverse the Supreme Court decision. The day after the Court's announcement Terrence Cook, Archbishop of New York, urged reverse this injustice to the rights of the unborn child." Last Thursday New York Senator James Buckley announced plans to introduce into Congress a Constitutional amendment that would overturn the decision. The exact status of restrictive abortion laws is presently uncertain in many states, including Massachusetts. Attorney General Quinn must rule shortly on the case of Women vs. Massachusetts which could result in the repeal of all abortion laws in this state.

BOWAAC is also sponsoring a Regional Conference for New England women this weekend in which projections for the continuing struggle will be further explored. The Conference will be held Saturday, February 10, at the Ell Center at Northeastern University and will take the form of a celebration and planning session.

Kids' Conference

At 9:30 in the Campus Center Auditorium, David Leiderman, Director of the State's Office, will speak on the Office for Children Putting It Together for Kids. His talk will be followed by a day-long conference with 8 workshops in the Campus Center. Check the CC Calendar of Events. Admission will be free to students with their I.D. cards.

Student Conduct Code Revised

By DON BISHOP

For most students on campus, the idea of a student code of conduct is a matter of relatively little concern.

The fact that one exists at all is evident to some students only at the beginning of the academic year, when student handbooks are passed out at registration. Others become aware of it as part of a disciplinary action taken against them by the University.

Within the last two weeks, a revision of the Student Code of Conduct has been completed by the Student Matters Committee of the Student Senate. Suggestions for revision of the present code, which has been in effect since 1966, first came over two years ago. The new code has been in the writing stage since last semester.

It will probably be discussed and voted on by the Student Senate within the next two weeks. If favorably considered there, the new code will ultimately be considered by the Board of Trustees, whose passage will put the new measure into effect.

The new code of conduct represents a radical departure from the specificity of regulations of the old code. No longer are the rules and penalties regarding such things as lewd and indecent behavior spelled out for the student.

In terms of length the proposed code is considerably shorter than that of the current one; while discussions of the rights of individuals at the University and sanctions to be taken against the violation of these rights are more general and broader in scope.

Elliot Sherman, Chairman of the Student Matters Committee, stated in a memorandum to the Student Senate that, "The code was designed to be broad in scope so as to delineate certain rights that we feel are necessary to the smooth functioning of an academic community."

As an introduction to the new code, the following is contained in the preamble: "The University of Massachusetts is dedicated to learning and the advancement of knowledge through free inquiry...In order to fulfill these values and to insure the well being of the community, each member of the community must be guaranteed certain securities. This Code is intended to set minimum standards of behaviour that are essential for the protection of each individual and to provide a recourse for those who feel that their rights have been violated."

The basic format of the proposed code is essentially similar to that of the older version. Certain rights and responsibilities of students are spelled out in the first part of the code and the sanctions and penalties to be taken for violation of the above are detailed in the second part.

Under the category of "Responsibilities", the proposed code outlines those of 1) Personal Security 2) Security of Property 3) Right to Assemble and 4) Academic Integrity.

Under the category of "Sanctions", the proposed code lists the sanctions that may be applied to a UMass student as including 1) Suspension 2) Jeopardy and Censure 3) Fine 4) Restitution 5) Work Requirement 6) Restriction 7) Consultation.

In the final part of the proposed code there are guarantees that no individual will be penalized without having been accorded the rights of notice, hearing, presentation and appeal.

The stipulation is also made that "nothing in this code shall relieve any person subject hereto of the responsibility of obeying the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts".

Kissinger Out Of Harvard

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Presidential adviser Henry Kissinger cannot return to his Harvard professorship at this time, so the Department of Government will begin looking for a successor, the university said Monday night.

The decision was made at a meeting of senior members of the department after learning that Kissinger cannot leave his present job as President Nixon's national security adviser.

Prof. James Q. Wilson, the chairman of the government department, issued a statement explaining the situation following a long session of the department's senior members.

"Four years ago," he said, "Henry Kissinger took a leave of absence from the Department of Government at Harvard University, where he was a professor, to serve as President Nixon's assistant for national security affairs.'

"Two years ago, his leave of absence expired and, in accordance with long standing university police, it was necessary for him to resign his professorship in order to continue to be away from the university. At that time, the senior members of the government department expressed the hope that he would return to a professorship in the department in the future and agreed that, should he wish to return by January, 1973, they would recommend his reappointment to the Harvard Corporation.

"In effect, the vacancy created by his resignation was held open for him for about two years."

"This was an unusual action, prompted by the view of his former colleagues that there was not then, and was not likely to be for some time, a scholar in the field of international relations whom the department would prefer to him.

Officials of the International Commission for Control and Supervision and the Joint Military Commission meet in Saigon. (AP)

Steps Toward Peace Accelerating

SAIGON (AP)—Representatives of the four parties in the Vietnam peace agreement met in three cities Monday in quickening diplomatic steps toward clearing sea mines from North Vietnam, holding top-level political talks on the South and getting American war prisoners back home.

As disposition for peace accelerated, the fighting slowed.

U.S. officials in Washington and Saigon declared the first group of American prisoners will be released this week, but declined to give a specific timetable.

Ambassador Michel Gauvin of Canada, chairman of the International Commission of Control and Supervision said release of those held in South Vietnam will be "closer to the end of the week."

Then four hours later he told newsmen the release will come "within, I presume, a week or so."

"There will be an exchange of prisoners," Gauvin added after a four-hour commission meeting. "I don't know where or when."

Senior U.S. officials said one of the first groups of American prisoners will be released from jungle camps along the South Vietnam- Cambodian border in the An Loc-Loc Ninh area, 60-70 miles north of Saigon.

In Washington, Defense Department spokesman Jerry W. Friedheim said North Vietnam is expected to release its first American prisoners by Sunday, the time frame specified in the cease-fire agreement signed in Paris Jan. 27.

"Our hope is that we will have some by the middle of this week," Friedheim said.

North Vietnamese, Viet Cong, American and South Vietnamese representatives of a prisoner committee of the Joint Military Commission met in Saigon for three hours to iron out repatriation details. It was the third successive day they had met.

Move To Limit Exec. War Power

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Vietnam peace agreement has given new vigor to the drive in Congress to limit the war-making power of the President.

Nine more senators have joined in co-sponsoring a war powers bill introduced by Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., on Jan. 18, bringing total backing to 60.

The Senate passed a similar bill 68 to 16 last April 13, but House response was lukewarm.

Senate sponsors predict that the measure will pick up support this year from additional House Republicans who last year feared that it would be construed as an affront to President Nixon's Vietnam war policies.

The bill is designed to restore to Congress its sole constitutional power to declare war.

It would allow the President to commit U.S. armed forces to hostilities abroad only in emergency situations, and then only for 30 days, without specific approval of Congress.

The President could use the troops, without an OK from Congress, only repel attack, forestall the imminent threat of attack, or to rescue Americans endangered abroad or on ships at sea.

Hearings by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee are expected early this year, with Senate passage possibly by Easter.

Administration opposition is expected to continue, although one of last year's reasons has vanished: "Wait until after the war ends in Vietnam."

Historians credit early American Presidents with scrupulously interpreting the Constitution as placing on Congress the responsibility for deciding upon any offensive action by the armed forces.

Food Prices Key To Phase 3

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon cited food prices Monday as the potential key to success of his Phase 3 economic program--a largely voluntary effort to keep the lid on inflation after wage and price controls are disbanded.

Holding a farewell meeting with members and officials of the Phase 2 Pay Board and Price Commission, Nixon pledged continued government efforts to hold down increases in supermarket prices.

His comments were relayed to newsmen by Donald Rumsfeld, outgoing director of the Cost of Living Council who joined other economic officials in the Cabinet Room session.

Rumsfeld said the President told the group that wage and price controls helped check inflation without inhibiting growth of the economy but that it is important that the mandatory controls be lifted so the economy can move back toward a free market system.

"Food prices are a key to making Phase 3 work," Rumsfeld quoted Nixon as saying. He added that the President, in referring to the new program which depends largely on voluntary compliance, vowed that he intends to make it work.

The food industry remains under mandatory controls, as the health and housing segments of the economy. In addition, the administration has taken steps to bolster food supplies by loosening imports and easing crop planting restrictions.

Meanwhile, Secretary of the Treasury George P. Shultz told the 800 industry executives Monday that inflation of 2.5 per cent by the year end is "an ambitious but an attainable goal" under Phase 3. He said that is partly because of the President's fiscal clampdown on the government.

Shultz addressed a conference on Phase 3 rules and standards arranged at the administration's request by the United States Chamber of Commerce. Nixon's top economic spokesman had just come from a 2-1/2 hour grilling before a congressional committee.

Destroyer Explosion Kills Three

NORFOLK, Va. (AP)—A boiler explosion aboard the destroyer U.S.S. Basilone in the Atlantic northeast of here killed three sailors and injured eight others Monday, the Navy reported.

Four of the injured men were flown to the St. Albans Naval Hospital in New York City by Coast Guard helicopter and the other four remained aboard the ship.

The 390-foot Basilone was proceeding under its own power to its home port of Newport, R.I. The explosion occurred 150 miles southeast of that base, the Navy's Atlantic Fleet Command here said.

Cause of the explosion, which occurred about 6:45 p.m., EST, was not known immediately, the command said.

The Basilone's skipper, Cmdr. John L. Towley of Middletown, R.I., reported to command headquarters that there was no fire aboard the vessel after the explosion.

Chinese Peasant Doctors Losing Patients

TOKYO (AP)—The "barefoot doctors" of mainland China are in trouble. Some have lost patients because they prescribed the wrong remedies.

"Barefoot doctors" are peasants who, with little or no previous medical knowledge, have been roaming the Chinese countryside since 1968 caring for the sick because of a shortage of regular doctors.

Best estimates outside China put their number at about a million, many of them women. They administer traditional Chinese herbs, acupuncture and some Western medicines, but if they encounter problems they send their patients to clinics or hospitals.

According to mainland newspaper accounts reaching Japan, some patients of the barefoot doctors have lost confidence in them and are consulting regular doctors and have begun to overcrowd hospitals.

Corona Sentenced For Life

FAIRFIELD, Calif. (AP) — Juan Corona was sentenced to 25 Consecutive life prison terms Monday after a judge denied him a new trial on charges of slaying 25 transient farm workers.

The family of the 38-year-old former labor contractor sat silently, showing no sign of tears as sentence was imposed by Judge Richard E. Patton.

"The order of the court is that the defendant be punished by confinement in the state prison for life," he said.

Corona himself silently rose from his seat beside his attorney. A deputy sheriff tapped him on the shoulder and he quietly walked to a nearby holding cell.

Corona clutched a pocket-sized Bible in his hand.

He was convicted on 25 counts of first-degree murder by a superior court jury Jan. 11.

Patton also ordered defense attorney Richard Hawk arrested in the courtroom, to immediately start serving 54 days of a total of 70 days of contempt of court citations issued during the four-month trial.

After an 11-1 jury deadlock was broken, the woman who had been the holdout juror, Naomi Underwood, said she still wasn't certain Corona was guilty. And she said a sheriff's matron discussed the case with her the night before she voted for conviction.

Airport Security Move Delayed

(AP)— A federal judge Monday ordered a delay until Feb. 15 for new regulations that would have required armed guards at airports.

A hearing is set for Feb. 13 to determine whether the order should be made permanent. The court order, issued by Judge John Smith, in Washington, D.C., came after the Federal Aviation Administration refused to extend the midnight Monday deadline for compliance with new airport security rules.

Following Smith's ruling, the FAA said nine regional offices would decide whether to post airport guards at midnight or wait until after the Feb. 13 hearing.

The Airport Operators Council International—AOCI—representing 132 facilities, filed a motion Monday in U.S. District Court in Washington for a temporary restraining order against the FAA.

An Associated Press survey showed that most airports hired anywhere from one to several dozen extra guards to meet the more stringent security regulations. The first part of the plan, requiring searches of all hand-carried luggage, took effect last month.

Twenty-six new police officers were assigned to guard duty at the Phoenix, Ariz., Sky Harbor International Airport, bringing the total security force to 48. A police spokesman, Lt. Tom Blaine, commander of the airport unit, said the new men were graduates of the Phoenix Police Academy and had taken a special eight-hour course given by hem and FBI agents.

Blaine said the added guards would cost more than $350,000 annually. He said the cost currently is being paid from airport funds, but authorities said the rental fees of commercial airlines would be raised to absorb the expense.

Extra guards went on duty Monday at Logan International Airport in Boston, where a 25-man force was selected from among special details of state police. The extra cost—about $600,000—is being paid by Massport, a quasipublic transportation agency.

The Lambert-St. Louis International Airport hired 13 extra guards from the Wells Fargo security service, bringing its total force to 39. All the new guards received seven hours of classroom training and five hours of instruction on a pistol range, spokesmen said.

Atlanta Airport beefed up its security force from 60 to 75 officers—all city policemen. The armed guards will be on duty at the entrances to each of three special concourses through which all passengers must pass on their way to the 80 departure gates. The cost for the extra policemen will be an estimated $162,000 annually which will come out of the airport budget.

Viet Aid Continues

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress' auditors say the United States, which has turned more than $5 billion worth of weapons over to South Vietnam so far, will have to continue both material support and technical training "for the foreseeable future."

The ability of Saigon's fleet of some 600 helicopters to cope with an all-out North Vietnam attack "may be marginal" for example, the General Accounting Office said in a report released Monday.

GAO auditors also said U.S. turnover of jumbo C-130 cargo planes to South Vietnam last fall because of heavy combat needs will require continued training of Saigon's pilots and mechanics on how to use them "for some time to come."

The agency's conclusion that some indefinite U.S. arms supply and training will be needed by South Vietnam was drafted before the Paris peace agreement was reached providing that all arms in Vietnam may be replaced only on a one-for-one basis.

The report said that because of the uncertainties of the peace negotiations and defenses that might be required against potential renewal of hostilities after a cease-fire, it could not estimate the cost level of continued U.S. arms supplies that might be needed.

In greatest need, the report said, is South Vietnam's air force which was the last major responsibility turned over to Saigon and which was turned over ahead of schedule.

Lynch Sets Irish Election

DUBLIN (AP) — Prime Minister Jack Lynch on Monday ordered a surprise national election for Feb. 28, apparently to strengthen his government's hand for the bargaining with Britain on the future of Northern Ireland.

Lynch could have waited out the remaining 16 months of his current term of office before going to the voters. But he is riding a wave of popularity and clearly hopes a reinforced mandate will help in his forthcoming talks with the British.

A British government policy document on the future of Northern Ireland is due out in March. The British have promised to consult Lynch in advance on these proposals and the Irish leader appeared to have this in mind when he called the snap election.

A public vote of confidence now also would help Lynch's efforts to crack down on terrorism and keep the violence in Northern Ireland from spreading across the border.

The election, Lynch declared, is "essential if a protracted period of political uncertainty and instability is to be avoided."

His government majority in the Dail--parliament--has been gradually eroded since his Fianna Fail--Soldiers of Destiny--party was elected in June 1969.

His action came as Northern Ireland was ravaged by a bloody surge of sectarian fighting that has claimed at least 20 lives, with nearly 50 persons wounded, in the last week.

The savagery of this feuding between rival Protestant and Roman Catholic extremists spurred fears in Belfast that the violence would escalate. In Dublin it was felt that the bloodletting would spill over the border on a wider scale than ever before.

Lynch has won general support for his policies, including a crackdown on the outlawed Irish Republican Army and a major revamping of Ireland's constitution.

Concern Over West European Alliance Grows

BONN, Germany (AP) — Chancellor Willy Brandt has sent a key aide to the United States amid growing concern here that disputes over the dollar, trade and troops could weaken the Western alliance.

Karl Moersch, a state secretary who is taking over some of the functions of ailing Foreign Minister Walter Scheel, left Monday for five days of talks in New York and Washington.

He is the fourth official sent by Brandt to Washington this year.

German newspaper reaction and private comment by Bonn officials indicate growing fear that all is not well between the United States and West Germany.

The conservative anti-Brandt newspaper Die Welt said, "It is useless to gloss things over: German-American relations have hit their lowest point since West Germany came into being."

The latest source of concern is Bonn's weekend decision not to "float" the West German mark -- which would have made exports like Volkswagens harder to sell. This decision is reported to have conflicted with U.S. wishes.

Last Viet Warrior Buried

WASHINGTON (AP) — With full military honors, the Army Monday buried America's last warrior to be killed in Vietnam before the cease-fire ended the United States' longest war.

Col. William B. Nolde, 43, died 11 hours before the truce went into effect, the victim of an enemy artillery burst. He was the 45,941st American serviceman to be killed in action in Indochina.

"He now represents all of us who served in Vietnam," said Army chaplain Roy V. Peters at the final mass for Nolde in the red brick chapel at Ft. Myer, Va.

Nolde died with a "sense of accomplishment he found in his many years of service to his country," said Peters.

Nolde's flag-draped casket was carried on a horse-drawn caisson from the chapel to a hilltop gravesite in Arlington National Cemetery. The cortege included Black Jack, the ceremonial riderless horse.

After a rifle squad fired a three-volley salute, the mournful strains of Taps sounded across the rolling cemetery, and Lt. Gen. Robert E. Coffin handed the carefully wrapped flag that had covered the casket to the widow, Joyce. She placed a single red rose atop the gray casket.

President Nixon expressed his personal condolences to the family, and invited its members to the White House after the burial.

One other soldier--a helicopter pilot--has been killed since American guns were officially silenced.

Nolde, a resident of Mount Pleasant, Mich., was a career Army soldier who devoted his life to the military after being drafted during the Korean conflict.

Prison Conference

The Attica Prison massacre has been all but forgotten by the American people. It's a part of the American psychology to believe that "someone must have done something" about the issues of the day.

But the "crime of punishment", as sociologist Karl Menninger dubbed it, continues unabated, in Federal prisons, in state prisons, and in county jails. Men and women who should have been rehabilitated into society, emerge from our prisons more alienated than before, without jobs, without money, without homes.

The Self-Development Group, of Boston, an organization of ex-convicts which helps men and women adjust to life out-of-prison, is sponsoring a Conference on Prisons this Saturday from 9 a.m.-5 p.m. at Farley Lodge, behind F Lot.

The Conference, which costs 2 dollars for students (the money being used for lunch and for the Group), will feature films, discussions, and speakers from the Boston Lawyers' Commune. Current inmates, released for the day from Deer Island and the Hampshire County Jail, are also expected to attend.

Although we usually look askance at conferences--most of them are glorified bull sessions for the rich--we do endorse the Conference on Prisons. Not only will it raise funds for a worthy cause, it will be a creative, educational experience.

Look, Listen, and Come

Our generation, as it has been said many times, was raised on TV, the blue glowing screen acting nursemaid for us while our parents planned the cocktail parties that came along with the tube as new signs of post-World War II affluence.

A lot of us can remember the arrival of the big brown box that replaced the radio. Some of us never remember being without a set, others have always had two or three around.

And now some of us want very little or nothing to do with TV, taking exception only with NET.

The same networks which brought Superman, Howdy Doody, Amos 'n Andy (anathema to dignity that it was), The Lone Ranger, Ed Sullivan, Dick Van Dyke, Lassie, Walt Disney, Jack Paar, and uncountable heroes of our past, are still very much with us grinding out day after day after month of shows, mostly crap, expecting that we will watch them like before.

But speak of crap. While watching the shows of dubious quality we are mistreated to miles of lying, deceiving, phony, poorly produced commercials whose commands, if followed to the letter, would cost thousands of dollars and consume every bit of our time plus more.

But why worry about that? We have Vanquish, Compoz, Anacin, Bayer, and if none of those work, good old gusto will get us through the day.

An example to this was Sunday night's production of "Goodbye, Columbus."

During this film, which was indeed a cinematic treat, (even with Ali McGraw, who went to Hollywood to major in Radcliffe) viewers were bombarded with forty-two invitations to buy every kind of product imaginable.

Begin with Head and Shoulders, which will not only remove the snow from your dome, but make you sexy as well. Combine that with Ultrabrite Toothpaste, which brings such drastic results that a young coed's mother would never tell her about it, add that to some natural-scented Right Guard, a little "Love's Fresh Lemon" on top of your natural non-oily Noxema which is, of course, used with Cover Girl. If you happen to need a shave, try Gillette's Orange and Herbal scents, and if this Waldorf Salad for your face doesn't make you happy, cover your face with Light-Powdered Arid, smear on a little Moisture Response, a dab or two of Ben Gay, a pinch of Lysol and then shave it all off with your new Gillette Track Two.

Now you're ready to pick up Josephine the Plumber and her Comet for a ride in your quieter-than-a-Mercedes Mercury. Suck down a couple of quarts of Tyrolia wine, then hurry out and buy a new Zenith Color TV so that you can run home and watch the Monday Night, Tuesday Night, Wednesday Night, and Thursday Night movies.

Be sure to pick up some Hostess cakes, for snacking.

Oh yeah, and a bag to throw up in, because if you have any sense at all this barrage of crap will make you sick too.

...Not Big Enough To Forgive

Very soon (Feb. 10) the prisoners of war will be returning from Vietnam in a quiet fashion. A war, that the American people voted to have ended through their Presidential choice, will see its very last days of American involvement. It was not a war supported popularly among "a majority of the American people" as President Nixon has said, but held as the dregs of our nations morality and the shame of our history. In the world of history the war can be nothing else; it is to us as the Opium War was to Britain, a crime against man.

With this war came the effects of immorality, degeneration of the American social structure. America had returned to the days of the Civil War with citizen against citizen, friend against friend, over the basic tenet, "thou shalt not kill." It is a sad period and one useless to mull over and one that is gladly left behind.

Now there is a new world in which to make new designs. A time to look outward and inward so as to rebuild the devastation that the war has wrought. Growth and prosperity seem to be the next step. Yet there is an albatross upon all these contemplations, another set of prisoners that are being forgotten. During the skirmish with the Communists, hundreds of men who believed in their nation sacrificed as much as any man for they decided to leave their country. Many sacrificed their lives this way for their country and their beliefs.

Now that the war is over, it seems only right to release all the prisoners of this unjust war, yet President Nixon has found the idea of forgiveness untenable. It seems that the United States is not big enough to forgive. This is a terribly sad state of affairs and a real albatross of the past. In a fashion it only continues the list of crimes against men that the United States began many years ago. One would think that the United States has had its fill of such crimes but alas it seems not.

The prisoners of the Vietnamese war should be freed, there exile ended, wherever they may be held, whatever war crime they may have done. As a purposeful act of a new and developing morality, it is only just. In their own ways millions of "Americans have paid a very high price to serve their country, some with their lives, some as prisoners of war for as long as six to seven years and of course, 2-1/2 million, 2 to 3 years out of their lives serving in a country far away" (from the President's News Conference) for one of the greatest errors in the history of the United States. The statement above is taken out of context simply because as President Nixon does not believe that the people of America have the capacity for forgiveness; I believe they do.

Facts, Not Prejudices

Ignorance and misunderstanding about homosexuality cause serious problems for literally millions of people. Even today, despite all the talk about the sexual revolution, people are still uninformed and confused about homosexuality. Many heterosexuals continue to feel that homosexuality is a crime or sickness and must be brutally repressed or "cured". We, the members of the U. Mass Student Homophile League, feel that correct information concerning homosexuality can prevent the problems-the personal tragedy and anguish caused by misunderstanding, and subsequent prejudices against Gay people. Unfortunately, many homosexuals themselves have incorporated these negative attitudes into their own self-image.

To provide this information to gays and straights alike, SHL maintains an informational center, and a limited library, within the league's office, for the university community. Furthermore, to reach out and present the facts, and not the myths, concerning homosexuality, volunteer members from the league maintain a speaker's bureau for college classes, dormitories, greeks, religious groups, and other colleges and high schools for enlightening discussions on homosexuality and Gay Liberation.

Although the league has close ties to the objectives of the Gay Liberation Movement, we do not subscribe to any rigid perspective concerning tactics for Gay Liberation; SHL's major concern is to enhance the opportunities, and most importantly, the general well-being of Gay people in our community.

Through weekly meetings, monthly dances, and parties, the league provides opportunities for gay people to meet each other in non-exploitative settings.

If you are gay and hassled by the police, university, family or friends-or by yourself-, the league has concerned people who are ready to assist. A variety of both formal and informal counseling situations-or specific referrals, when requested-can be obtained by contacting the SHL Office.

The league holds meetings on Thursday evenings at 7:30 P.M. (Room number is posted in Thursday's CC Daily schedule). Assistance and information can be obtained by writing the U. Mass SHL Office, RSO 368, Lincoln Center, U. Mass., or by calling 545-0154 during office hours.

Everyone has some problem or crisis arise at some time...but being gay shouldn't be one of them-

Letters To The Editor

Your Commuter Services

To The Editor:

Please inform the undergraduate commuters of this university their area government, the Commuter Assembly, is attempting to respond to their needs. To define and act upon them is hard when given the amount of interest and participation commuters have shown, but there are some of us who are plugging away at it. Specifically, there are four major programs being funded by the "Assembly" which I shall briefly explain. The reason for this is two-fold. One, this is to act as a progress report by this area government to its constituency, and two, it will, hopefully, stir up some interest which, in turn, could generate more participation.

The first program is an interest free loan to the "People's Market" to provide them with the necessary money to open this semester. The rationale behind this is to offer students; especially commuters; with food essentials such as bread, milk, and some meats here on campus; i.e., the Student Union/Campus Center Complex; at prices reflecting the store's own self-perpetuation and not profits.

Another program being funded by the "Assembly" is the provision of lockers for personal use by commuters. The R.S.O. office (Registered Student Organizations) has provided us with twenty-four lockers which have already been given out to those who applied on a 'first-come, first-served' basis. In addition to this, eighty more lockers are being ordered for utilization by commuters before the latter half of this semester. It is hoped this particular program will be further implemented next year.

The publication of the HOUSEMOUSE, the "Assembly" newsletter, which deals exclusively with housing problems relevant to commuters is the third program. This is going to be on monthly basis for the remainder of the academic year with the first issue out in mid-February and, hopefully, a special edition in June to serve as a guide for renting a place for the next school year.

The fourth program is to renovate the space in the Student Union allocated to the "Assembly" by the Governing Board for the Commuter Lounge. This space is room 218 just outside of the back of the "Hatch." The money being funded to this area will be utilized to create an atmosphere which is conducive to quiet and relaxing usage of a commuter's time before, between, or after classes. It is hoped this program will be completed before the end of this month.

So, there you have it: four programs that I and the other members of the Commuter Assembly Executive Council hope you, as a commuter undergraduate, approve of. If they sound interesting enough that you might be willing to work on any, feel free to drop down to the "Assembly" office in room 112, Campus Center anytime. If you have criticism, advice, or ideas of any nature, also feel free to drop down. The primary goal of the Commuter Assembly is to serve the commuter's interests in the best manner possible.

Thomas E. Merluzzi
President

P.S. Please don't forget about the Commuter Assembly election on February 15, 1973 from 9AM to 6PM in the Duke Room, Student Union. There are three vacancies to fill on the Executive Council for which nomination papers are available just outside of the R.S.O. offices on the first floor of the Campus Center.

To The Editor:

Recently, the Supreme Court made a ruling legalizing abortion. If you wish to find out more about this decision and its complications, Ruth Getts and Karen Margolin of the Boston Women's Abortion Action Coalition (BOWAAC) will be speaking tonight at 7:30 in the Council Chambers of the Student Union on the second floor. They will also discuss the upcoming BOWAAC Convention and celebration to be held this Saturday, February 10, in Boston. We urge all who are interested to come.

Swami's Yoga

To The Editor:

HATHA YOGA ORGANIZATION is a newly formed RSO group for undergraduate students of the University community. Our group is for those who wish to continue their practice of yoga, in a genuine way, seeking a true and personal freedom and peace within, individually, as well as with other fellow students. Yoga aims at developing the whole person, physically, emotionally, and intellectually. Seeking this harmony and balance, also means the development of each toward a more continuous personality. We should actualize our ideas and thoughts into a personal lifestyle, which means living more from within our own bodies, our own person. We should be happy, and we should be glad in the very life each has been given, each in the very moment.

If you would like to join with us for the Spring Semester, please contact Ruth Dubin, who is facilitating our group on campus: 20 Cance, UMass. Phone: 546-5009.

Mitchel Salnick will be instructing sessions, Wednesday evenings, weekly, from 6:00 to 8:00 p.m., beginning February 14th. New members should notify us as soon as possible. There will be rooms available daily, in the student center, for practicing members. There are dues.

To The Residents of Southwest:

Last Tuesday night the first step in student control of Southwest was supposed to be initiated. John O'Connell, Business Manager of Southwest, was to present a written and verbal report on the first of eight budgets in Southwest. We planned it for last Tuesday, because that would give the Assembly two weeks (if necessary) to discuss it before it was presented before the Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee.

Your representatives in the Southwest Area Government didn't take the time to show up.

Now we have one night (tonight, Tuesday, 8PM, Hampden Student Center, back rooms) to discuss the budget and make a decision on it. If we do nothing again Tuesday night the budget has to go before the Rents and Fees Committee without any Southwest students input. The staff has to prepare the budgets anyway. They want student input. If they don't get it, they'll prepare the budget the way they THINK will help Southwest. It would be nice if we could tell them where we as residents want it spent.

If everyone in Southwest did something in Southwest, even if it's just going to their Southwest Assembly representative (if you don't know who she or he is, maybe you should find out) and asking him what he has done for Southwest.

Southwest, wake up before the opportunity is gone!

A Thief's Primer

To The Editor:

An incident happened today that has partially restored my faith in the innate good of man.

Fool that I was, I forgot my pocketbook in a classroom in Bartlett for about two hours. After an hours time I realized what I had done and like a flash went back to the room. I waited until the class in process was over. Pacing up and down, I suspected everyone of being a potential thief. Well, surprise, surprise. The pocketbook was still hanging on the back of the chair. I grabbed it triumphantly and rushed out. Outside the classroom I reached for the wallet. It was there, no money, but there. Checkbook, there. Driver's license, I.D., Social Security, all worldly possessions WERE THERE. My thief (I can't help feeling possessive) had the decency to take what he knew had the least importance to me, and saved me the trouble of having to replace the other things.

All I can say is that I hope this higher grade of thievery is an example of what's to come.

Vietnam Thanks

To The Editor:

This letter is addressed to the numerous members of the University community who donated money to help send personnel and medical supplies to Vietnam House, Saigon. During exam week in December I was asked by my father to try and collect some funds to help defray the expense of sending two volunteers and a large amount of collected medical supplies to Saigon. The volunteers and supplies were going to Vietnam House in Saigon, a rehabilitation center for Vietnam's children seriously wounded in the war. With the cooperation of the Campus Center staff and the generosity of the community we raised $50 on December 18. This, plus donations from across the country paid for the trip to Saigon. May I express my thanks and relay the thanks of my father and the Committee of Responsibility (sponsoring agency) for this generous response.

If there are any members of the community who would like to read a report on the volunteer's trip, or otherwise pursue work toward helping the children of Vietnam House, please contact me in room 205, SBA building.

Pick Nick

To The Editor:

The election for a new Senate speaker comes at a crucial time in the course of student government. The Senate needs a decisive, experienced leader with the ability to bring the threads of legislation together and make them work. I have known Nick Apostola for two years, having served on many committees with him, and he has consistently displayed a serious commitment to University reform on all levels. This commitment, combined with the ability and responsibility to achieve those reforms, makes Nick the best choice for this office. I am convinced that he will work as hard as Speaker as he has as committee chairman, and I endorse him wholeheartedly.

Guatemala Solidarity Day

In Cuba on February 6 commemoration of contemporary figures in the Guatemalan struggle for independence and socialism occurs.

Guatemala experienced a decade of progressive policy that reached all levels of the population during the elected presidencies of Arevelo and Arbenz. In 1954 under the directorship of the Dulles brothers and the CIA mercenaries were effective in deposing Jacobo Arbenz Guzman. Since 1954 more than 15,000 people have been assassinated for opposing the reactionary-military and U.S. aligned regimes.

In the two years of the presidency of General Arana Osario, 4,000 political opponents have disappeared. Recently leaders in the unions have been tortured and killed. Napalm and conterinsurgency have been components of the generous U.S. aid.

Tonight in Grayson Lounge of Orchard Hill, Zoe and Mike Best will lead a discussion on the Guatemalan struggle by way of political economic analysis and poetry, at 8:00 P.M.

Spirituality Series Continues

The third lecture in the series "Discovering the Metaphysics of psychic phenomena and sprituality" will take place tomorrow night at 7:30 p.m. at Hampshire College, Academic Building, Room 103.

Pedestrians Get Priority

By TONY GRANITE

STREETWALKERS GET PRIORITY at Mankato State 9minn), according to a recent Daily Reporter.

Because college manpower and equipment do not allow for all snow removal to be done at the same time, priorities go to "safety of persons on foot." The assistant vice-president for administrative affairs is quoted as saying that cleaning of campus walkways will have highest priority "to give pedestrians a place to walk during deep snow without forcing them into the streets where they would be in danger or being struck during low driving visibility."

Now there's a thinking person who would be deserving of a Metawampe, were there such on the UMass campus.

LOOSE DOG COMPLAINTS rival even those about parking at the Modesto (Calif) Junior College campus, according to a page one story in Pirate's Log.

Students who have dogs are required to license and leash them in public, under penalty of fines that may exceed $20.

Because most owners of loose dogs cannot be found, campus security holds them only until 4 p.m. in a "holding cage" before turning them over to the city poundmaster.

One solution: "Students can help by not feeding stray animals on campus. This only encourages them to return to the campus rather than their own homes."

MUCKRAKER is the name of a new game the editors of the University of South Florida Oracle have conjured, this semester.

Making its debut in the Jan. 10 issue of the student newspaper, "Muckraker" claims concern with consumer-oriented problems.

Questions answered included reason for the increased price of coffee on campus to 15 cents a cup ("inflation").

$5,000 RIP-OFF during the Christmas holidays was discovered by the brothers of Sigma Pi when they returned to the University of Virginia, according to a page one piece in the Cavalier Daily.

And a third-year law student reported a stereo system valued at $2,225 was also stolen from his off-campus apartment. Similar thefts were also reported by students who lost almost $2,000 worth of sound equipment and records.

Time was when students didn't own anything worth stealing.

'Loving Hands' Continues

WANTED: A PAIR OF LOVING HANDS is an exhibit that forces the participant to use a set of nerves that have gone unexplored; to discover what the world is like if it is touched rather than seen. The participant is blindfolded and finds his own way through a room filled with objects and shapes to touch.

The show is now in its final week at the Student Union Art Gallery (behind the Ballroom). It has been well received by all comers as both enjoyable and provoking.

"One of the most amazing things about it," says Abbott Chrisman, its creator, "is that it means different things to everybody who comes in. To actors it is a sense-memory exercise, to psych students it is a place to test their reactions, and to others it is an exercise in being blind, a teaching aide, an experience of pure design, a place to relax and all kinds of other things. But everybody likes it. I'm happy."

The show is open until February 9th: 1-5, 7-10.

Trackmen To Run At Dartmouth

By WALT POWERS

"The track season lasts from September to June, and our primary objective is to prepare for a successful outdoor season", said Coach Ken O'Brien as he prepared his track squad for today's meet against Dartmouth. Despite a big loss to New England powerhouse Northeastern, O'Brien was not overly displeased and he put the meet in perspective. "Seven out of the thirteen indoor events are field events, technique events that require a great deal of practice. We just don't have to send our field men to Amherst, where they share the cage with a basketball team, and another track team. You don't get adequate practice that way, and we're competing against teams that use their own modern facilities." The problem isn't restricted to the field events. The track at Curry Hicks is a rickety old wooden structure, tunneling under the balcony and both grandstands. This contrasts with the modern, tartan surfaces that teams such as Northeastern, UConn, and Dartmouth are on.

At Northeastern, UMass was bucking a six week layoff. "N.U. came at us with five meets under their belts. Because of the long layoff, it was essentially our first meet of the season. The same thing happened to us last year, and we improved fast enough to take the Yankee Conference indoor title," said O'Brien.

"Because the conference is stronger, it won't be easy to repeat. Still, I think that if we work hard enough in the next two weeks, we can do well in the conference, and qualify our men for the New Englands. So far, the teams progress has not been a valid indicator of its ability" said O'Brien. "The track at Hanover is modern, tartan surfaced, and very fast. Our times on this track should give a better indication of how good our runners really are."

In Dartmouth, UMass will face a team of surprisingly similar ability. Like Northeastern, they've been competing all winter, and have the competitive edge. Unlike N.U., though, they are not especially strong in the field events, and O'Brien hopes to exploit these weaknesses. By neutralizing Dartmouth in the field events, UMass could turn their depth in the running events into a victory.

Ken O'Brien thinks they can do it, and so does his team. And then there's another motivating factor: revenge. "Face it," said co-captain Steve Levine, "We really didn't expect to beat Northeastern. They were just too strong. But we do have a shot at Dartmouth. Last year they embarrassed us indoors, and we haven't forgotten it."

Women Swimmers Win At Albany

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

The UMass Women's Swim Team completely dominated the 5th Annual Albany Invitationals Saturday wiping out all the other teams present. The final score stood UMass 93, Russell Sage 38, Albany 37, and Middlebury 10.

Minutewomen Swimmers set new Pool and Invitational records in the competition; Mary Ellen Dash in the 100 Butterfly (time 1:06) and Laurie Seluk in the 100 Freestyle (time 1:03).

UMass gave a very impressive showing, winning the top places in practically all the events; their practice certainly paid off.

An impressive list of first places were accumulated by Freshman Cathy Abramson; in the 200 Freestyle (time 2:36.7), 50 Breaststroke (time 39.9), and 100 Breaststroke (time 1:27).

Another key swimmer contributing to the UMass victory was Dash who placed first in the 50 Butterfly (time 29.4) and the 200 Individual Medley (time 2:29.9).

Seluk won firsts also in the 100 IM (time 1:11.2).

A victory was also scored by the 200 Freestyle Relay Team Competition collecting over 150 points. This was Carol's first time diving in competition and she did an excellent job for the team (not bad, placing first right from the start).

Valuable second places were scored by Kathe German 200 Freestyle, Claire Briana 50 Breaststroke, Seluk 100 Backstroke, and Handler 100 Breaststroke.

Third places were grabbed by German - 50 Backstroke; Handler - 50 Freestyle; and Briana - 100 Freestyle.

Fourth place points were won by Mary Beth Stanne 100 IM and 200 IM and German, 100 Backstroke.

Tremendous team effort was displayed in this overwhelming victory despite the fact that many on the team were recovering from bouts with the flu and unable to swim their best time.

Keino Signs Pro Contract

NEW YORK (AP) — Kip Keino, Kenya's famed distance runner, did a sudden turn-around Monday and signed an American pro track contract that admittedly "will cause shock in Nairobi."

The International Track Association (ITA) signed the Olympic steeplechase champion to a three-year deal, and Keino then departed for his home in Africa. "I'm pretty sure I will lose my job—and my home—because of this decision," the 33-year-old Keino said. "I asked my superiors before if it would be okay for me to turn pro. They said no."

Twenty-four hours earlier, Keino had said from an amateur meet in Toronto that he would not run for money. Then, late Sunday, he was talked into it.

Keino said, since coming to North America for a series of events, he had refused ITA President Mike O'Hara's bids in Los Angeles, Albuquerque, San Francisco and Toronto. O'Hara even visited Keino in Nairobi last fall.

Then, O'Hara gave it one final shot.

"He asked if I could spare a half-hour at the airport," Keino said. "I said okay and we had a long discussion. I finally decided that, after running for my country for many years, I would now run for Kip."

Neither Keino or O'Hara would disclose the financial arrangement, but it was reported in Nairobi last week that a $4,800 bonus had been offered.

The ITA inaugurates its program March 24 at Los Angeles featuring such other track and field names as Jim Ryun, Bob Seagren, Randy Matson, Jim Hines and Bob Hayes.

Freshman Tim Tague here racing in the UMass. Giant Slalom at the Dartmouth Skiway has scored in four straight races for UMass to help establish a 36 to zip win loss ratio. The Minutemen had dual wins over the weekend up North. We'll have the whole story in tomorrow's MDC.

Hoopster's Fate (NIT?) On Line in Next Four Outings

By EARLE BARROLL

Within the next four games the destiny of UMass basketball for this season will be decided. Destiny? Yes. Three letters worth, N.I.T. At 10-6 the Minutemen are still in the thick of the race to New York City if and only if they can win their last nine games, which can be done.

"Our next four games (Boston College, UConn, B.U., URI) are very important for us", said Jack Leaman yesterday before practice at the Cage. "And only if we win these four will the next set of games be important to us."

Right now the Minutemen are second in New England behind Providence College, but they are still behind UConn (5-0) in the Yankee Conference race. With the Huskies, the Terriers (who are tied with UMass at 3-2) and the Minutemen squaring off in combination during the course of the next two weeks the YC race could very well be decided.

As far as the Eastern rankings are concerned, a mythical poll would have the Friars first followed by St. John's, Syracuse, Penn., and a maze of the Big Five from Philly, the Mid-Atlantic Conference and UMass.

Saturday night's game at the Cage was "as difficult for the writers and fans as it was for the coach" said Leaman. It's the type of game that makes basketball unpopular, but the blame has to be put entirely on UNH. Sure, it was the only strategy that could be used, however, 32-30 games are a drag.

Leaman and his cagers have to be commended. They did what they had to do, speed the game up, inject enough excitement for two teams. And with their outstanding shooting percentage (58%) their full court press and the individual efforts of Al Skinner, Jim Burke and a few others, UNH was totally embarrassed and obviously outclassed.

"This is the type of game that makes you a better team," explained Leaman. "We stress defense which gets us ready for this type of situation. I fully expect this again when we travel to UNH and Maine later in the season." This road trip will be a first as the Minutemen will play Friday night at Durham and travel to Orono for a game with the Black Bears the very next night.

At the stage of the season, the N.I.T. quest could very well be the reality this campus has been "waiting for more than a year. If you remember last season when UMass was 14-12, the then Redmen lost at these two dens. But as Leaman said at a post game social hour Saturday night, "I'll guarantee you, if these games mean something to us this season, we'll get them."

Busses for Wednesday's game at the Springfield Civic Center between UMass and Boston College are FREE. Just get your ticket and leave the rest to Western Mass. The Eagles pulled a mild upset Saturday afternoon on Eastern TV when they nipped Fordham, 77-76. B.C. was ahead only once, on the last shot of the game.

Leaman is expecting upwards of 7,000 fans for this game. It would be ideal for the N.I.T. throng of three and two years back to invade Springfield. Like 6,000 Umies per game. There needn't be any long expose on what UMass-B.C. is all about. 20,000 buldged Alumni Stadium in the fall to watch Dick MacPherson's crew dismantle the Eagles.

And if you have some time before Wednesday, take a trip to Leaman's office in Boyden and ask for the UMass-B.C. game film at the Cage two years back. If you thought the Traffic concert was jammed, this was something else, per capita.

Maybe you've been asking yourself if Al Skinner is pro material. Says Leaman, "He could be a pro, he has great ability. But he has to work harder and develop his body more." The last time this was said J. E., who had a natural ability to exploit his abilities, was somewhere in the stratosphere.

Yesterday before practice began, a time when shots you'd like to try in the real games, but wouldn't dare, are common practice, Chuck Olsen, who brought the roof down at the Cage with an 18-footer Saturday night connected on two 40-foot hooks from the hash marks on the sidelines. Heee waaas horrrored.

Manager Bob Powers continues to amaze the average onlooker. He has to be the best shot in the East (he'll tell you the country) of all team managers. Maybe that's why you hear "who's that long hair out there banging them in from 30 feet."

Bruins Axe Tom Johnson

BOSTON (AP)—The slumping Boston Bruins of the National Hockey League Monday fired Coach Tom Johnson, explaining that something had to be done to revitalize the team and "we can't fire all the players."

The Bruins immediately signed Johnson to a new three-year contract, with a pay raise, for an administrative job, and named Armand Guidolin, coach of the Bruins' American Hockey League farm club, to replace him as coach.

"I don't feel I'm being made the scapegoat for the team's poor play," said Johnson, whose Bruins won the Stanley Cup last season. "I had a feeling this ought to happen. Getting fired is just part of the game."

The decision to dump Johnson in his third year as coach was announced by Harry Sinden, managing director of the Bruins and a former coach who led Boston to the Stanley Cup in 1970.

"We were in a tailspin and I didn't see any other way we could come out of it," Sinden said. "We can't fire all the players.

"It was my decision. I stayed up all night thinking about it. I felt it had to be done at this time. We had to do something to shake up this club."

The Bruins, who have managed only 15 points in the past 12 games, are mired in third place in the NHL's East Division. They started slowly this season but caught fire and surged into first place in the East before their current tailspin.

Guidolin, 47, coached the Bruins' AHL entry, the Boston Braves, to the league's Eastern Division championship last year, it's first year of existence, and had them in second place behind Nova Scotia this year.

He played with the Bruins in 1940s and later with Detroit and Chicago in the NHL career that spanned nine seasons.

Guidolin is noted as a believer in conditioning and discipline, qualities some critics felt were missing in this season's version of the Bruins.

Buses...You Better Show Up

Rt. 91 Express—Well, here we go again . . .Welcome back to part 2 of the Athletic Department's fight for respectability, and they may win this one . . . And they will if Peter Pan has anything to say about it . . .

When they took the first mail from Santa Fe to St. Joe's (or is that vice versa), the mail did get there. It was rather crude transportation . . . But it worked. And last week on the first of two overland hauls slated for the winter of '73, the students of this land grant institution fared far worse than the early American mail . . . For they had no real way of getting to their destination.

But as time and ingenuity changed the system for transporting mail, those intangibles have both caught up with the Atlantic Department in a week's time . . . For the Indians had an early picnic with those defenseless Pony Express riders, but then out of the crude factories of Philadelphia, came Iron Horse, immune to the arrow of Black Feet. . .

But now barring the Christmas rush, the mail is a sure bet to meet your expectations. But that's mass transit . . . You just fire the mail in the box and forget it . . . However, when you talk about transporting . . . individual students from St. Joe's to Santa Fe, it's a headache for Mr. Wells Fargo . . . And maybe Vic Fusia and Al Grenet and a few of the others down Boyden Way can take affinity with our very first transportation masters, for they have now taken up the slack and found a way to transport the university mail . . .

Yes, we will have buses for tomorrow night's debauchery against the better half of Boston's college sports ethic . . . For as many students who do show the interest, there will be a bus made to order to take you to the Civic Center. And even the Band will get free transport.

So with a few of the legistics out of the way, there's no excuse for boycott . . . However; the $1 excise tax remains very much intact but that's to defray transportation expenses for the Athletic Department. When you think of it, that's not a bad deal. It is apparent though that the bus probably will be leaving right after the game. So if you want a quick tour of Springfield's night life, forget it . . . Point of Information . . . Beers at the Center are $.55 but I warn you, the hotdogs are horrendours . . .

Now a 10-6 team that really doesn't care about environment, meets a BC quintet that just upset Fordham between TV commercials and as far as the Minutemen are concerned, is the last will and testament before Massachusetts makes a stretch drive for the Conference title . . . UConn, who will be here sporting their dancing cheerleaders and an injured Jimmy Foster, are on top of the Beanpot heap at 5-0 . . . But the Huskies are more than welcome to find a way to silence Al Skinner . . .

So your gas and oil problems are now solved let alone parking . . . Hell, a buck for an emotional matchup and a fine facility is certainly not too much to ask for. Besides, the Civic Center is not a bad place to see a game. If you can't find your seat, a bevy of red-booted, petitly manicured babes will escort you . . . Even if you know where your seat is fake it. But watch your manners, remember, you're here for a basketball game, not politics.

And if you can afford an $.85 draft you should have a good time after two rounds . . . The Civic Center in all its taxpayers' grandeur does a rather adequate job of turning a college basketball game into an entertainment spectacle. But you'll never know that until you get there. And if you like to bitch, don't be a hypocrite. Go to the Civic Center tomorrow night and see what it's all about for yourself.

There is however a guarantee offered for your venture. I do ask you, how many times during a new experience are you given something of a stamp that tells you you made the right decision . . . The ace in the hole is the fact that you still will see a helluva basketball game . . . And all the Pony Express riders got for their venture was an arrow in the hat and a drink of water . . . The Civic Center offers you a draft . . .

Gymnasts Bow To Penn State

By MDC STAFF

Going to Penn State is always a production—all around. UMass gymnasts dream of beating the Nationally ranked Nittany Lions as do all other teams in the East but a polished Penn State team is overpowering.

Never-the-less, spectators (including six hard core UMies and a well-educated, relatively unbiased and enthusiastic Pennsylvania crowd) saw young UMass. coach Tom Dunn return to his alma mater where he once captained the team and won an N.C.A.A. parallel bars championship. And he brought some well-practiced gymnasts with him.

Floor exercise saw some fine performances. Rich Seikunas and Jay Thomsen had nice sets up against Penn's Jim Kruest and Jerry Young with Rich's the best floor set we've seen all year. Gene Whelan, in his first year of competition, scored a 9.0 on a good-looking routine against Olympian Marshall Avener (9.25).

Pommel horse was a rather tough event it seemed and even a bit boring. First place in the event went to Penn's Jim Kruest at a low 8.65. Seikunas had another good set on this piece as did co-captain Steve Scuderi (both scored 8.45).

Us fans got a bit of revenge on the Lion's in event number three, the still rings. A solid UMass group matched Penn State score- for-score to tie on the event. Whelan and injured Danny Spier scored 8.65 and 9.1 respectively to the Lions' Paul Fagan and Kruest who both came away with 9.0s. And' perhaps the high point of the meet was little strongman Jay Aronstein's nearly perfect 9.45 routine. This was a big win for Jay over State's Vince Faust who is a sure contender for Eastern's honors. Faust could only come up with a cool 9.2. This could most certainly mean a berth at the Nationals for Jay.

Jay Thomsen, bad knees and all, came up with a fine 9.2 vault to lead UMass vaulters while Scuderi and sophomore Jack Fabricante turned in nice ones too. Penn's Lions, however, were too much on the event as all five entrants scored over 9.0. As with pommel horse, the Minutemen just didn't have it all there in this event. Penn State looked far too good.

In the parallel bars event UMass showed more of its old strength and style. Bill Bouillet, going all-around for only the second time in his varsity career made a fine showing as did Steve Scuderi and Gene Whelan. A stylish Bob Graf came up with a tie for high meet score to win the event for Penn. State.

Final event honors went to Penn State as versatile Jim Kruest came up with a 9.4 and a Penn "freshman-to-watch", Larry Butler drew up close behind. UMass did have solid shows from Dan Spier, Steve Scuderi and Gene Whelan, although I know they're capable of more.

Final score of the meet was Penn State 162.65 to UMass's 157.70, but it wasn't a hard-to-take defeat. The team looked good and felt good—and looks forward to a possible second place at the Easterns in March. With concentrated effort on the remaining weak spots, this is almost assured. Best of all, Alumnus Tom Dunn had a team he was proud of, a team with a new spark of Penn- grown perfection.

On Friday night, UMass gymnasts met Pittsburgh and easily defeated a weak Pitt team.

Now that you've read what UMass can do, come and see for yourself on Friday at 7:00 p.m. in Boyden Auxiliary Gym. All of us hard core fans are really excited by what we've seen.

President Wood Socko In Secret Session

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

UMass President Wood discussed Governor Sargent's reorganization plan and the University budget in a closed session with administrators from the three campuses yesterday.

A public relations victory appears to have been scored by University President Robert Wood during a closed session yesterday with the academic administrators of the three-university campus.

The session was, according to Wood, an effort to improve communications.

Wood also announced that the Governor had approved and introduced to the legislature an $89 million budget for the University-for fiscal '74. If approved it would mean a $17 million increase over the fiscal '73 budget. The University had originally asked for $98 million.

Issues discussed by Wood and the deans and department heads from the Boston, Worcester and Amherst campuses included the Governor's reorganization plan, tenure and affirmative action and the University budget.

Reaction to the conference was favorable from most administrators interviewed. Dick Clark, a professor at the School of Education said Wood was, "the most impressive I've ever seen him." Atron Gentry, a dean at the School of Education said the administrators dealt with issues instead of "shooting at each other."

Chancellor Randolph Bromery said the conference was a "good chance" for Wood to get feedback from "at least the dean and department head level."

In an interview after the three hour long meeting in the Campus Center, Wood said he explained, in depth, the Trustees' statement last week criticizing the Governor's reorganization plan; discussed the university's graduate programs and explained the new tenure and affirmative action program.

Wood, who called the new budget "good news" for the University, said the Trustees found fault with the planned "regionalization" of state education. The Governor's plan would put all state education, from the elementary to University level under the control of regional boards.

Any future meeting along the lines of yesterday's would depend on feedback from the administrators, Wood said.

Robert Chew, a graduate school administrator in charge of degree requirement said Wood told them the graduate schools at the three-campus would be under pressure from the legislature to cut programs. Wood said the state budget and cuts in the federal government's education budget was forcing a re-evaluation of all programs and a possible phase-out of some.

Chew said the possibility of sharing programs with the six land grant universities in New England was also discussed.

The implementation of affirmative action guidelines in tenure appointments will probably be left up to the departments, Chew said. While each department would formulate their own guidelines, Chew said the feeling at the meeting was that there should be some general University policy.

The guidelines cover increased hiring of minorities and women by the University. They were first issued by HEW last year, with Wood issuing university wide guidelines and each campus drawing individual plans. The department heads are charged with implementing them.

Oath Still Safe After First Reading

By MARK VOGLER

BOSTON--The Massachusetts Loyalty Oath repeal bill was soundly defeated in its initial reading before the House Tuesday by a 143-84 vote.

The bill, filed in December by Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, and Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, to lift the oath for state employees will be reconsidered today at the motion of Rep. Collins.

Last Tuesday, the bill won favorable support from the Legislature's Joint Committee on Public Service, receiving a 10-3 recommendation. Had the bill remained alive through its three readings in the House, it would then have gone before the Senate for debate.

Rep. Collins indicated Tuesday that the bill's chances of passing now seem "grim". "It's going to be very difficult to get it through. It will be quite a task to pick up those additional votes," Rep. Collins said.

Collins said that even if the bill should be "killed", it was a worthwhile issue to bring before the state legislature. "I think a strong concern was indicated. And even if it does lose, I'm sure that we can introduce it again in the future," Collins said.

The Amherst representative said that the oath is the type of issue that could become important. He said it was not unusual for this type of bill to be initiated several times before coming law. "In the meantime, we may have to rely on the courts for a remedy," he said.

The trial, consolidating the cases of two University of Massachusetts (Boston and Amherst) groups and another from Berkshire Community College, Pittsfield, has remained stagnant pending the outcome of the oath legislation currently before the House.

Rep. Collins said he wasn't surprised by the House's verdict on the oath repeal bill but said that he expected a little stronger support.

Rep. John Buckley, D-Abington, who spoke in behalf of the repeal bill, said he was not surprised of the outcome on Tuesday's roll call.

"The last time it went before roll call was back in 1966, and it only received 36 votes in favor then," Rep. Buckley pointed out.

"It was a question of not whether people were against the oath, but of whether the repeal bill had support. Only one member of the House debated against it. The others just didn't endorse the bill."

Rep. Buckley said he expects legislation to be filed to abolish the loyalty oath next year. He said the bill would take a long time before gaining approval of the state legislature "since the House is basically a conservative body when it comes to reviewing civil and libertarian issues."

One Killed In Subway Fire

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — A flash fire broke out Tuesday in a four-car subway train loaded with homeward-bound commuters and hundreds of persons were led choking and gasping through a smoke-filled tunnel.

Hospital officials reported one person had died and 87 others were injured--11 seriously--as a result of the fire and smoke.

The fire, occurring at the peak of the city's rush hour, struck the lead car of a south-bound train between the South Station and Broadway stops, according to spokesman for the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority, MBTA.

In addition to the injured, scores of commuters were led choking and gasping 60 yards through the smoke-filled subway tunnel to ground level.

Boston City Hospital reported admitting 32 persons, 10 of whom were placed on the danger list. Massachusetts General Hospital reported receiving 20 victims of the fire, one of whom was placed on the danger list and four others admitted for treatment. Carny Hospital reported receiving 35 persons. All of the injured were said to be suffering from smoke inhalation.

Dr. George Clowes, head of the emergency disaster team at Boston City Hospital, said 70 per cent of the fire victims at his hospital would be "all right" by Wednesday. He said most were being kept in the hospital overnight because the condition of persons suffering smoke inhalation can deteriorate.

Chief George Paul of the Boston Fire Department said damage to the train was estimated at $7,000. "It was just a small bit of fire and very smokey," he said. "Smoke caused all the trouble."

Paul said burning grease and oil on the undercarriage of the train and on the tracks rapidly filled the subway tunnel with smoke.

Firemen carried some of the victims out of the tunnel on stretchers and in wheelchairs as the smoke overcame many of the several hundred persons on the crowded train.

Central Area Allocates Funds

By SHELLEY BAKST

The first Central Area Council meeting of the semester Monday night voted to spend $1,450.00 for some of the following projects: Central Women's Center, a colloqium on "Racial Stereotypes in Films", "Edge of Gorman" counseloring center, A Black Musician's Conference, and a rock concert for Winter Carnival.

On Thursday at 7 p.m. the Student Senate will decide whether to use a part of the rent and fees money for academic material including the purchasing of equipment used for colloquia courses. Regardless of the decision of the committee, there will be at least a $30.00 increase in rent for the student dormitories as of next semester.

The Central Area paper is presently searching for a new editor. The position is opened to all Central Area residents and pays $26.00 a week. The money can be divided between two co-editors. Interested students may contact Larry Marcus at 5-2041 in the Baker Basement.

Martha Kilcorn, from the new Central Area Women's Center, requested that the Council allocate $335.00 for the project. The vote was passed. The Center which is located in the first floor study of Brett House will open tnis Wednesday.

Every Wednesday night at 7 p.m. there will be a colloquium with films covering the important aspects of the Women's Movement. The Women's Center will be staffed with people qualified to discuss birth control, V.D., pregnancy testing, abortion, lesbianism and other problems.

$150.00 was allocated to fund a more general type of counseloring service called "The Edge of Gorman". The Center will be opened from 1 p.m. to 9 p.m. and will be staffed with graduate students in psychology and sociology and qualified guidance counselors.

The Central Area Racial Awareness Program is offering a colloqium this semester dealing with the manner with which the film industry has protrayed minorities. Six films will be showin including: Birth of a Nation, Raisin in the Sun, and Shaft. The Council voted in favor of paying a total of $410.00 for the colloqium.

International Group Holds Recruitment

The student organizers of the international smorgasbord in Hampden last December, who also offered temporary housing to needy foreign students in January, have planned an open sign-up session tomorrow from 4:00 to 8:00 p.m. in the Student Union Cape Cod Lounge. American and foreign students wishing to plan or carry out projects this spring and summer are urged to drop by for a cup of coffee and sign up.

"The Provisional Board of the International Student Association feels it has enough margin from the smorgasbord to subsidize some activities for the spring," said Ms. Morella Carnevali, a Venezuelan graduate student in Education, "so that we won't have to charge any dues for members. If we hold a smorgasbord every semester we may not need to charge dues next year either."

"But our aims as a provisional board to the old International Club are more than social. Some of us are more interested in providing orientation and arrival services, such as housing and help at registration, to incoming students from abroad. They feel the International Club should change its name and perhaps even modify its constitution to show that it is not just a social group. Adjusting to a new cultural situation here, and learning to function in it and contribute to it, are more important.

"We plan for the International Club to hold formal elections in late April," she concluded. "But we already have some project ideas which we would like to share with the student body, and would like to get some discussions going. We are handing out fact sheets in English and Spanish on Thursday describing what we're doing."

The Provisional Board plans to take the sign-up sheets and idea sheets from Thursday's meetings and hold subsequent discussion and planning groups. Some of the ideas it has generated on its own include a Spring smorgasbord, work on the International Fair which takes place March 9-10, planning orientations for new students this summer and fall, temporary housing arrangements, picnics, sports events and a lending library.

People working on or with the Provisional Board include the following. Those interested in joining the group who cannot come to the Thursday sign-up should contact any one of them:

Selectman Candidates Differ On Town Growth

By ED FOGARTY

Editor's Note: This is the second in a three part series about the candidates for selectmen in the Feb. 20, Amherst Town Election.

Incumbent Merle L. Howes and candidate George Scheurer expressed differing opinions on the solutions to current problems resulting from the rapid growth of Amherst, and to the planning of future growth in Amherst. Howes and Scheurer are candidates for selectman in the Feb. 20, Amherst Town election.

When asked to express his plan to control and plan the growth of Amherst in the future Mr. Howes said, "We have enough apartments in Amherst", adding there is presently a moratorium on apartment building in Amherst. Mr. Howes explained that in the future he would "make every effort" to adopt the 'five village concept' as recommended by the S.C.O.G. (Select Committee On Growth).

This plan would divide the town of Amherst into five areas of growth, two in North Amherst and three in South Amherst. Growth of density of housing and population would be restricted within these areas. Between these areas there would be strict zoning laws to prohibit apartment building.

The five areas would be approximately where apartment complex's are now located. Mr further stated that he would support buying any open land available by the town for conservational, recreational, and aesthetic purposes.

Scheurer said the selectmen, "the incumbent in particular", have a fever for growth. He stated that he would "advocate and enforce a moratorium on present construction at least until Amherst's resources and facilities catch up to the demands placed on it." Scheurer also said that he would do the research necessary to stop artificially induced growth, in the future. He said that he would vote only for what is needed by the Amherst community.

On the subject of the 'Paparazzo Project' (a proposed apartment complex) now being constructed on Route 9 in Amherst, Scheurer said that he would vote for the injunction against Paparazzo Associates to halt construction. Scheurer said, "the quality of life is being exploited by developers without regard to sewage, schools and traffic problems."

He added that the sewage treatment plant is not able to handle the present waste problems of Amherst, and that the town must dump waste into the Connecticut River.

Mr. Howes said that, "I would not support the Growth Study Committee's Report," which has called for a stop-work injucnction against Paparazzo Associates. Mr. Howes said that the Planning Board has already approved Paparazzo's plan, and that for him to vote against the Planning Board would be a vote of 'no confidence'. He also said that he would rather rely upon the process of town government to solve the problem.

Howes said that he and the Board of Selectmen are working "day to day" to solve the current problems caused by the rapid growth of Amherst. At present the town is working with the Massachusetts Department of Public Works to improve the intersection at the corner of route 9 and Southeast Street. Also the town is presently developing a secondary sewage treatment plant to handle the increased amount of waste.

Howes also said he supports the federally-funded mass transit system, and said there are plans to reconstruct parts of Route 9 into a double lane highway in order to handle the increased traffic flow.

Scheurer says he would not support the construction of a double lane highway on the present Route 9. Instead he would support a regional mass transit system including the towns of Northampton and Hadley.

Scheurer said, "The mass transit system would have to be low-cost or no-cost. This would mean asking the federal government for financial support."

Both candidates agreed that special 'safe-rider' stickers should be implemented. These stickers would be handed out with car registration and would be easily recognizable to tell hitchhikers that the driver is a local resident. The stickers would be easy to memorize, such as a symbol or double digits.

The candidates differed on the building of 'hitch-hiking stations'.

Scheurer supports this plan, claiming they would be like a bus stop to decrease the likelihood of accidents when hitch-hikers are picked up. Mr. Howes said that he would not support such a plan, "We would be breaking the law by encouraging hitch-hiking", and "the problem takes care of itself."

Tomorrow: Low-Income Housing and the candidate's background.

Dorm Deficit May Cause Rent Hike

Chuck Hampton spoke last night before the Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee about the possibility of students' rents being increased due to a deficit in dorm funds.

By DON BISHOP

For the second year in a row, projected occupancy levels in the dormitories have not been reached and, as a result, room rent fees may have to be increased for next year.

Figures released by Charles Hampton of the Housing Office at a meeting last night of the Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee, reveal that the expected 95% occupancy levels for both semesters were not reached. This resulted in $285,000 deficit in student rent revenues for fiscal 1973. Any of a number of factors might explain why the 95% occupancy figures were not achieved.

According to the Housing Office figures, in the fall semester the total system of dormitories was filled with 11,376 students, or 95.5% of the dormitories' capacity. A survey taken this semester, on February 2nd, revealed that only 10,625 students were currently living on campus, which figures to an occupancy level of 89.2%.

When both of these figures are averaged together, the occupancy level for the year is 92.3%. The 915 students who were expected to live in the dorms but did not, have resulted in the room rent revenue loss of $285,000.

If this figure cannot be overcome by cost savings made by the Housing Office in other areas of their budget, the deficit will necessarily be reflected in a room rent increase for next year.

Rents and Fees Committee Chairman Michael Gregory estimated this rent increase figure as being between $20-25.

Hampton, in his preface to the occupancy analysis document stated:

"The impact of this loss is not yet measurable. This is a preliminary report which needs further analysis before its impact can be determined. Offsetting factors such as additional revenue from prior years and other sources, cost saving in utility and Debt Service, etc., as well as cost over runs above budget in other categories must be reckoned with before the impact is determined.

"This report is to be viewed as one which cautions and alerts concerned individuals to potential financial difficulties in the dormitory accounts."

Hampton gave a number of possible reasons to explain the substantial drop in the occupancy level. The first reason he gave was the fact that a number of students leave campus second semester due to programs in the School of Ed. and other departments, and to student teaching.

Other possible factors Hampton suggested were that a number of students turned 21 during the academic year and were eligible to move off campus this semester and the fact that a number of students withdrew from the University after last semester.

In response to a question from a committee member concerning the number of students who were transfers this semester, Hampton stated that he did not have these figures with him. Theoretically, the transfer students who moved into dormitories would have offset some of those who had moved out.

In other business last night, the committee was presented budget summaries for fiscal 1973-74 for the residential area business offices.

This was the initial hearing of this budget, which is reflected in student fees.

The two area business managers: Robert Campbell and John O'Connell presented their budget requests for next year, which reflect an increase of $33,660 from $94,448 to $128,108.

The largest request increase is in the area of "permanent employees".

It was also announced at the meeting that the Food Services budget for next year will probably be ready for committee study in two weeks.

On this Thursday, the committee will meet to discuss Residential Area requests for use of student fees for area educational services.

Effect Of Court Edict On Abortion Discussed

By AVIS YUNI

"It definitely is a legal victory but not the whole victory. There is a long way to go in control of our own bodies as human beings," stated Linda Malanchuk of the Boston Women's Abortion Action Coalition (BOWAAC) in a discussion on abortion held last night in the Student Senate Council.

Referring to the recent Supreme Court decision on banning abortions, Malanchuk, along with Ruth Getts and Rosalie Majka also of BOWAAC, went on to discuss how the ruling would affect women and what organizations supporting "the right of women to control their own bodies" still had left to do.

Recently the Supreme Court decided 7-2 that abortion can be banned, by state law, only after the first twenty-four weeks of pregnancy. The Court limited restrictions on abortions between the twelfth and twenty-fourth weeks to those concerning the safety of conditions under which abortions are to be performed. For the first twelve weeks no restrictions on abortions are allowed.

"The Massachusetts Abortion law is off the books," stated Malanchuk. She referred to a statement made by Massachusetts State Attorney General Quinn yesterday in which he said that after reading the Supreme Court's brief on the decision, there was nothing the state could do during the first three months of a woman's pregnancy, and little during the second three, but it could pass legislation regulating abortions during the last three months.

When the Supreme Court's decision was first announced, the Massachusetts courts were already considering the case of Woman vs. Massachusetts in which over 200 women were suing against the Massachusetts abortion laws through several groups including BOWAAC. Upon publication of the Supreme Court decision the women's groups asked for a declaratory judgment on the case since the Massachusetts laws were identical with those of Georgia which had been ruled on in the Supreme Court case.

Atty. General Quinn had been given ten days in which to protest against this judgment. At first he stated that the Supreme Court ruling probably wouldn't change the Massachusetts abortion laws but in yesterday's statement he reversed his opinion and came up with state guidelines regarding abortions.

Malanchuk expressed that they were "jubilant" over the Supreme Court decision and that the work of BOWAAC, which is part of the National Abortion Action Coalition (NAAC) had put pressure to bring it about. She explained that the court had on the "conscious person in a woman" which has a "right to privacy".

Malanchuk pointed out that the brief of the Court said that doctors, lawyers and practitioners through the ages have not been able to determine when life begins, reaffirming, said Getts, BOWAAC's and the other groups stand that such a philosophical and moral area can't be determined yet. The court also stated that the word "person" in the 14th Amendment could not be used to include the unborn.

Malanchuk explained that the work of BOWAAC and other like groups is not finished. "We must take advantage of our legal victory and implement it" to change the existing situation. She feels that "If we could set up more abortion clinics and not have to have it be done directly by a doctor (paramedical techniques could be taught), they could be done cheaper."

To celebrate their victory in the court decision and educate women on what's still needed to be done, BOWAAC will sponsor a Regional Conference for New England on Saturday, February 10th, at the E11 Center at Northeastern University.

A panel discussion will be held with Dr. Barbara Roberts, National Coordinator of the Women's National Abortion Action Coalition who is also planning to move to Boston to perform abortions there, Kathee Allen, Attorney for the Women in Woman vs. Massachusetts, Dr. Preda Rebelsky, Psychologist and Director of the doctoral program of Development Psychology at Boston University, and Phyllis Cosand, Director of Crittendon House.

Courses in Creative Intelligence

By PRAVEEN SHRIVASTAVA

Ecology—it means the interrelationship of forces in a system. There is a very delicate balance in which these energies are maintained and if an imbalance occurs, the systems begin to break down.

There is the ecology of earth, air, fire, and water, the ecology of plants and animals. There is also an ecology of the self.

The human being is equally complicated as a planet-wide ecosystem, and just as delicately balanced. Intellect, body, perceptions, emotions, desires, spirit, ego—these and many other functions must work in an integrated fashion if one is to live a fulfilled existence.

When an imbalance occurs—as when the intellect overshadows the emotions, or vice versa—then the individual becomes less. The feeling of "something missing" is often a signal of this.

This feeling of somehow missing out on something in turn produces its own anxiety, self doubt, compulsion. These make the imbalance even worse. The spiral continues downward; people look for temporary relief in music, in drugs, perhaps in their studies or social life.

There must be some way to break the cycle. There must be some way to once again regain that lost feeling of solid being.

What then can we do about it? We certainly cannot cut down our amount of action. There are things to do, good people to see, responsibilities, recreation, etc. It would be very difficult to give some of that up. That is no solution.

But there is a new science, called the science of creative intelligence, that proposes an answer: the regular experiencing of an entirely new state of consciousness. "restful alertness" or "transcendental consciousness" is what is needed to produce the required rest with which to let our nervous systems become whole once again.

In this fourth major state of consciousness (the others are: deep sleep, dreaming, and waking), the body attains deeper inactivity than it does even during deep sleep, yet the mind remains fully aware. By experiencing this twice a day, the nervous system finally has a chance to begin to repair itself. The cycle is broken and the feeling of stability and involvement begins to return.

But how to attain to this fourth state? The science of creative intelligence suggests that we all have the capacity for fourth state, and it is very easy to actualize. It says that the best means that has yet been discovered for experiencing fourth state easily, safely, and regularly is the process known as "transcendental meditation", a three thousand year old relaxational technique which produces the state effortlessly.

If all this is true, and objective evidence indicates that it is, then these findings are of the utmost

First POWs Expected Home This Weekend

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) — The United States announced on Tuesday the withdrawal of 2,000 more troops and completed plans to welcome the first homebound American prisoners, expected to be released from North and South Vietnam by the weekend.

Ambassador Michel Gauvin of Canada, chairman of the International Commission for Control and Supervision, told newsmen the first American prisoners will be released about Saturday, some in Hanoi and others at probably two sites in the Saigon region.

Canadian members of international prisoner recovery teams that will accompany the captives from their last place of detention to freedom were placed on a two-hour alert.

Shortly after the first group of Americans is released, Gauvin said, Vietnamese prisoners will be freed or exchanged in South Vietnam.

With the pullout of another 2,000 soldiers over the last four days, U.S. troop strength fell to 19,000, the lowest level since December 1964. All U.S. troops must be out of Vietnam and all prisoners freed by March 28 under terms of the peace agreement signed in Paris on Jan. 27.

Henry A. Kissinger told a news conference Jan. 24 that the United States expects American prisoners will be released at two-week intervals in roughly equal installments. North Vietnam has given the United States a list of 562 U.S. servicemen and 23 American civilians held in Communist captivity in North and South Vietnam and Laos.

In addition to Hanoi, Gauvin mentioned two potential release sites. One was An Loc, the devastated provincial capital 60 miles north of Saigon where one of the bloodiest battles of the war was fought last summer and where the last American died before the cease-fire took effect.

The second was Phu Hoa, in Communist-controlled territory along the Saigon River corridor north of the South Vietnamese capital.

American officials said prisoners released in Hanoi will be flown directly to the big medical center at Clark Air Base in the Philippines, where a team of 60 doctors and 100 nurses are awaiting them.

U.S. prisoners in South Vietnam will pass through medical stations at Saigon, Pleiku in the central highlands and Da Nang in the northern region, depending on where they are released. Then they, too, will be transferred to Clark.

Paris To Host Postwar Meeting

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — As Henry Kissinger's postwar travels took on an added dimension, the United States and North Vietnam announced Tuesday that a major international conference to guarantee the Vietnam peace would open in Paris Feb. 26.

A few hours after the joint announcement of the conference date and site, the White House disclosed that Kissinger would stop in Laos Friday to check on prospects for a Laotian cease-fire before heading to Hanoi Saturday for four days of talks.

Kissinger, the presidential assistant who was the chief U.S. negotiator of the Vietnam peace agreement signed Jan. 27, departs Andrews Air Force Base, Md., at 10 a.m., Wednesday. He will go first to Bangkok to confer with Thai officials and with U.S. ambassadors from South Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos.

Then he will head on to Vientiane for talks with Laotian officials, then to Hanoi and afterwards to Peking for five days of consultations with Chinese leaders.

When Kissinger's Hanoi mission was announced last week, Nixon said the purpose of the trip was to open direct communication with top North Vietnamese officials, to discuss postwar relationships and to initiate negotiations for North Vietnam's share of the Indochina-wide reconstruction program.

The day after Kissinger initialed the Vietnam agreement, he told a news conference he expected the cease-fire in South Vietnam to spread soon to Laos and later to Cambodia.

U.S. planes are continuing to strike at Communist positions and supply lines in Laos and White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler indicated this bombardment would continue until a Laotian cease-fire begins.

The Vietnam accord had specified that the international conference would be convened within 30 days "to contribute to and guarantee peace in Indochina."

The simultaneous announcement made Tuesday at the White House and in Hanoi said the United States and North Vietnam "have agreed to propose Paris as the site" for the conference beginning on Monday, Feb. 26. South Vietnam said the date and site were acceptable to it.

The State Department said that one purpose of the conference is to allow nations not directly involved in the war "to associate themselves directly with the agreement" that ended the fighting.

Press officer Charles Bray did not list those nations specifically. But Kissinger said two weeks ago that outcome of peace in Vietnam depends largely on the cooperation of the Soviet Union and China.

In addition to the three major powers, the conference is to be attended by the four nations involved in the International Control Commission-Canada, Indonesia, Poland and Hungary-as well as France, Great Britain, both Vietnams and the Viet Cong. U.N. Secretary Gen. Kurt Waldheim also will participate.

Bray said details for the conference are incomplete but that consultations are underway to settle as many of the issues as possible before the opening date.

FDA Proposes Thorough Labeling

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Food and Drug Administration Tuesday proposed mandatory cosmetic ingredient labeling in an effort to reduce injuries and promote comparison price shopping.

The nearly 1,000 U.S. manufacturers in the $6-billion-a-year industry would be required to list on the label all ingredients in their products by common or chemical name except in the case of bona fide trade secrets.

The proposal was made in a petition from the Consumer Federation of America and Georgetown University law Prof. Joseph A. Page. The FDA is publishing the proposal.

The FDA also is publishing its own proposal which in most cases would disallow trade secrets.

An estimated 60,000 persons are injured each year by cosmetics, according to the 1970 report of the National Commission of Product Safety. The injuries range from skin eruptions and burns to loss of hair and severe allergic reactions in the eye.

The Page-Federation petition said mandatory labeling would help consumers "avoid allergic reactions" and allow women to "vote with their pocketbook."

"Cosmetic products contain many ingredients which are common to all such products," the petition said. "Without full label disclosure of ingredients, these cosmetic products, can be sold at prices higher than a fully informed marketplace would permit."

The Cosmetics, Toiletry and Fragrance Association, representing 180 firms accounting for up to 90 per cent of U.S. production, said it supports the concept of ingredient labeling but withheld immediate comment on the FDA proposal.

Previously, the FDA and the cosmetics industry had joined in a program calling for voluntary registration of manufacturers and their product formulas.

The FDA said it would not require specific label identification of flavor, color, and fragrance.

A process would be established for firms to petition for protection of trade secrets.

Nixon May Veto To Hold Budget Line

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Stripping the president of full power to impound funds would reduce him from chief executive to chief clerk, the Justice Department told Congress Tuesday.

Joseph T. Sneed, deputy attorney general, also said Congress has shown no signs it has the capacity to insure balanced budgets or control inflation.

Sneed testified before a Senate Judiciary subcommittee while the battle of the budget raged in both House and Senate.

The House Rules Committee cleared a bill to resurrect a popular farm program, the Rural environmental Assistance program. House action is expected Wednesday.

And after a White House meeting with President Nixon, Republican congressional leaders quoted Nixon as saying he would take whatever steps necessary to keep his new budget intact. One leader predicted a substantial number of vetoes. Sneed said the nation needs the impounding authority vested in the president to check overspending by Congress.

"The exercise of this authority by the President to promote fiscal stability is not usurpation. Rather it is in the great tradition of checks and balances which our Constitution is based," he said.

Sen. Sam J. Ervin, Jr., D-N.C., and other senators said unrestrained presidential power to impound funds which Congress has told the White House to spend is not now either checked or balanced.

Ervin said the fact that other presidents had impounded funds does not make the action constitutional.

Sneed said it is his legal judgment Nixon has the power–derived from the Constitution and various acts of Congress–to kill entire programs or withhold any percentage of congressional appropriations without consulting Congress.

The farm program, REAP, was killed in late December by the Nixon administration on grounds it was a low priority item. The legislation cleared for House action would earmark $225 million for the program during the year ending June 30.

BOSTON (AP) — Federal agents attempted Tuesday to collect $3.5 million in taxes on the earnings of alleged bookies arrested in a massive gambling crackdown last fall.

BOSTON (AP) — Witnesses at two unrelated hearings on Beacon Hill said Tuesday that safety mechanisms for nuclear power plants–such as Boston Edison's new Pilgrim station in Plymouth–are untested and possibly inadequate.

Bartley Criticizes Nixon

BOSTON (AP) — President Nixon's proposed cutbacks in Federal housing funds "threatened to undo much of the good and humane work of the past decade," House Speaker David M. Bartley said Tuesday.

Speaking before the New England Regional Council of the National Housing and Redevelopment Officials, Bartley said, "the fight must be waged" in Congress. He said, "The President must be convinced that his plans are simply wrong and dangerous."

LIFE STARTS AGAIN IN VIETNAMESE VILLAGE—Vietnamese peasants return to work in their war-torn fields while an armored personnel carrier sits idly in the background before pulling back to its base. The three days of post cease-fire fighting near Tay Ninh ended in a standoff with the government troops in control of the road but with villages several hundred yards off the road still in Viet Cong hands.

Peacekeepers Find Vietnam 'Joys'

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

BIEN HOA: Vietnam (AP)—The international peacekeepers on duty at this regional headquarters have something to write home about to Budapest, Warsaw, Jakarta and Ottawa. Topless nymphs on light fixtures in the conference room. A swimming pool brimming with bikinis right outside the barracks window. Slot machines in the bar, billiard tables in the mess hall and soul music blaring all day from a monstrous hi-fi.

"And some of the biggest rats I've ever seen," said a Canadian officer. "I didn't know whether to shoot them with my sidearm or go after them with a club."

The regional team assigned to this headquarters of the International Commission for Control and Supervision 15 miles northeast of Saigon have taken up residence in the Bien Hoa Club, a roadhouse that in the days of war catered to the after-hour joys of American airmen at the nearby jet base.

Out back, behind the tennis courts, the words "massage parlor" loomed in large letters over a long row of tiny rooms where ladies of professional availability used to hold shop.

"Closed since April," lamented the Vietnamese manager. "The government banned frivolity and ordered seriousness." Col. W. J. Marsh of Ottawa, head of the Canadian contingent, looked across the dining room where two Indonesian officers sipped coffee at tables facing the swimming pool, while a Hungarian and a Pole earnestly studied an American cranking away at the slot machine.

"I'd say this was one of the more comfortable regional sites in the country," the colonel said with a straight face. With fellow colonels from Indonesia, Poland and Hungary, he had just come down from the conference room, which only the day before had been a rooftop night club with bandstand, purple walls and bare-bosomed plaster cuties protruding from the chandeliers like the figureheads on sailing ships.

Behind double glass doors still decorated with a slanty-eyed Santa Claus, they had sat on leatherette divans at ridiculously low tables and discussed getting observation teams out into the countryside to investigate cease-fire violations. Marsh said they were expecting jeeps, scout cars and helicopters "any minute now" from the Americans, but they were still awaiting the Viet Cong delegate to the four-party joint military team before "getting rolling."

In the meantime, they were still trying to get the telephones working and the office organized.

The regional headquarters has taken over every room in the hotel, but has decided to leave the swimming pool and the restaurant, where team members dine together off the excellent Chinese menu, open to the public.

Anti-Hijacking Measures Delayed

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Security measures were stepped up Tuesday at many of the nation's airports despite a court-ordered delay in implementation of new federal antihijack regulations.

A few major airports, however—including facilities in Philadelphia, Boston and Chicago—pulled back extra guards that had been scheduled to go on duty at midnight Monday.

"We didn't have to so we're not going to," said Charles Rogers, operations manager of Philadelphia International Airport, discussing the guard situation. He said city police units had been set on Monday to take up stations at the airport, but now would await the outcome of further court action.

The situation was reversed at Baltimore's Friendship International Airport, where the 22-man guard force had been doubled with the addition of off-duty county policemen. State Aviation Administrator Robert Aaronson said the extra guards would remain on the job pending a final court settlement.

The posting of armed guards at departure checkpoints is required under the second step of a two-part federal plan. Less than 12 hours before the plan was to go into effect, U.S. District Court Judge John Smith in Washington ordered a 10-day delay in enforcement of the rules and set Feb. 13 for further court proceedings.

He issued the temporary injunction at the request of the Airport Operators Council International, representing 231 facilities serving 90 per cent of U.S. air traffic. The council sought a six-month delay in implementation of the new plan. The Federal Aviation Administration said Tuesday that its attorneys had not decided whether to appeal the court order. An FAA spokesman said extra guards were on the job at the two Washington airports operated by the federal agency. The airport operators group, meanwhile, said many of the smaller facilities had not received word of the court decision and did not want to risk possible fines by failing to post the extra guards.

At the same time, the council said airports should be aware of the possibility of suits for false arrest if security guards try to enforce a federal regulation that is not in effect. Extra men were on duty Tuesday in Dallas at Love Field, where 66 new guards had been hired. A spokesman said that since the guards were available, they might as well work. He said the airlines were paying the bill for the added security and pulling back the guards wouldn't save the city any money.

Officials at O'Hare and Midway Airports in Chicago described the situation as "status quo." Mayor Richard J. Daley postponed plans that called for adding 73 men from the Chicago police force to the airport guard staffs.

Vance Murphy, the airport director in Austin, Tex., said his 10 extra guards began working last week and will continue on the job.

New security plans in Atlanta, Ga., also took effect some time ago. Grady Ridgeway, manager of Hartsfield International Airport, said the airport has a contract with the City of Atlanta for a 60-guard force who were manning central screening checkpoints.

A security spokesman at Miami International Airport said; "There has been no change. We had requested that uniformed customs agents and FAA officers stay on until we train our own security men. These men the federal agents are continuing on duty."

Violence Hassles Educators

By JOHN MUELLER
Associated Press Writer

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Educators don't know how to deal with violence in the school and often resort to calling in armed police who only inflame the situation, a former FBI agent who now heads the International Association of School Security Directors said Tuesday.

Joe Grealy, who is compiling a report based on the experiences of 200 association members in 165 cities, said in an interview that "guns and uniforms" are not the solution.

"Calling the police in is too late," added Grealy, who is also security director for the Fort Lauderdale public school system. "That's like locking the barn door after the horse is already stolen. Our feeling is that it is better to avoid a problem than to inherit it."

He said large schools need a security director to provide a line of communication between the students and administrators.

"The purpose is to provide understanding and keep the student out of detention homes and help him get back into the classroom where he belongs," Grealy added.

Grealy said trained security directors can help prevent large-scale racial incidents similar to the ones that erupted in three Florida schools this past week–Escambia in Pensacola in the Florida panhandle, Boca Raton on the east coast and Boca Ciega on the Gulf coast.

"Administrators need to face up to the fact there is a problem and that it is a separate one educators are not trained to handle," added Grealy who spent 29 years with the FBI.

Prevention comes from understanding and "knowing the problem before it gets out of hand," Grealy added. Most of the nation's 45,000 school systems where problems occur "are hoping they'll just go away," he said.

Committee To Defend Zahraie To Meet

The Committee to Defend Babak Zahraie is having an open meeting for all interested in helping to do the crucial ground work of publicizing the three cases and of getting support, endorsements, and contributions for the committee. Amherst is one of the two national centers of the committee as Siamak Zahraie, one of the students threatened with deportation, is a graduate student here at UMass, and we have a great deal of local and regional work to do. The meeting is going to be held on Thursday, February 8, at 7 p.m. in CC Room 178, and everyone concerned with the defense of civil liberties is cordially invited to come.

Harvard To Seek Replacement For Kissinger

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Harvard University officials have begun to consider candidates for presidential adviser Henry Kissinger's teaching position in international relations.

Prof. James Q. Wilson, chairman of Harvard's Government Department, said, "The department has teaching needs that must be met and there are other candidates for the position whose qualifications warrant review."

Wilson informed the senior members of his department at a special meeting Monday that Kissinger had told Harvard officials they can give his teaching position to someone else.

The university has kept the position vacant since Kissinger joined the Nixon administration four years ago.

Destroyer Explosion Probed

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — The Navy opened an investigation Tuesday into a boiler room explosion on a 390-foot destroyer Monday which left three sailors dead of suffocation and four seriously injured from burns.

The USS Basilone steamed into its Newport home port on Tuesday, carrying the bodies of the three dead soldiers, men killed when one of four boilers exploded during maneuvering drills the ship was conducting 150 miles southwest of Newport.

There was no immediate explanation for the explosion, the ship's commander said, adding the boiler had been thoroughly overhauled last fall and had been given regular maintenance only two weeks ago.

The three men who died–David A. Thimmer, 24, of Ipswich, Mass., Charles R. Kelly, 22, of Broussard, La., and David J. Rogers, 19, of Troy, N.Y.–were off duty at the time of the explosion, listening to a hi-fi and drinking a cup of coffee in a gun shack one level above the boiler room.

Cmdr. John L. Townley, the ship's skipper, said the men may have tried to leave the 5-by-14 foot gun shack when they realized what was happening, but by that time the door to the room had become too hot "so they laid on the floor." They were found dead 25 minutes after the explosion.

The four men who were seriously injured–they were the men in the boiler room at the time of the explosion–were airlifted from the ship to St. Albans Naval Hospital Monday night and were scheduled to be transferred to Brooke Army Medical Center in San Antonio, Tex., on Tuesday night.

Those men, all listed in serious condition, were identified as Charles R. Hearrold, 37, from Raynham, Mass.; Michael J. Zajackowski, 20, from Wausau, Wis.; James D. Raun, 20, from Erie, Pa., and Gordon A. Hardin, 19, of Detroit.

Four other men were injured less seriously when they came to the aid of their four comrades in the boiler room.

"We had no prior difficulty with the boiler," Townley said. "It met full requirements. It had extensive overhaul done on it during October through November. It had extensive retubing."

There was no fire or flooding following the explosion and Townley said the crew of the ship, which included 35 students among its 268 men, secured the vessel within two minutes after the explosion.

Townley said it was some time after the explosion that "a muster turned up three men missing."

"Somebody said, 'I'll bet they're in the gun shack,' and that's where we found them," he said.

Townley said the investigation of the explosion would be undertaken by a Naval team from Norfolk, Va.

Two of the four other injured men, Stephen T. Swoyer, 35, a chief boiler technician from Portsmouth, R.I., and Michael T. Soule, 20, engineman from Milford, Conn., were listed in satisfactory condition at the Newport Naval Hospital.

They were taken off the Basilone early Tuesday morning and brought into port by a tug. Both men, bandaged on the face and hands, walked to ambulances on their own power.

The other two sailors, who remained on the ship after treatment, were Dennis R. Peatee, 22, an engineer from Bowling Green, Ohio, and Donald E. Lebmer, 21, a yeoman from Lemoyne, Pa.

One of the sailors aboard the Basilone was counting his lucky stars Tuesday.

WHY STAY IN PARIS?

Take in the Mona Lisa at the Louvre and the night life on the Left Bank. But, why stay in Paris?
There's a France beyond Paris just waiting for you to come visit. Villages and towns steeped in art and history. Vineyards, castles, Alpine spas and beaches made famous by bikinis.
And the best way to get there is by train.
Where in France will the French trains take you? Almost anywhere.
Only four hours separate Paris from Strasbourg. But be careful. Once you've walked its medieval streets, lined by timbered houses, you may never want to return to the glass and concrete of the modern city.
Just two and one-half hours from Paris is Dijon. One of the renowned gastronomic capitals of the world. Buy an extra bottle of white wine there with the money you've saved eating cafeteria-style on the train.
French trains are known throughout the world for their comfort, speed and punctuality.
They're also known as a great place to get to know the people. It's easy to start a conversation in the relaxed atmosphere of a train. Even if you've barely passed second-year French, or German or Spanish. For trains are really the Continental way of travel.
You can eat on a French train. Read on a French train. Sleep on a French train. Dream on a French train. And you'll find French trains surprisingly economical, too. Particularly when you take advantage of the new 2nd Class Student-Railpass.
Whether you buy your tickets as you go, or a 1st Class Eurailpass or new 2nd Class Student-Railpass before you go, you'll save more by seeing your travel agent. Or nearest French National Railroad ticket office. For reservations: French National Railroads, 610 Fifth Avenue, New York 10020; 11 East Adams Street, Chicago 60603; 9465 Wilshire Blvd., Beverly Hills 90212; 323 Geary St., San Francisco 94102; 2121 Ponce de Leon Blvd., Coral Gables 33134. Christine Walevska, will display her talents by playing Vivaldi, Brahms, and Chopin in a cello recital at 8 p.m. at Bowker Auditorium.

Cellist Walevska To Perform

Works by Vivaldi, Brahms and Chopin will be featured in Christine Walevska's cello recital at 8 p.m. tomorrow at UMass. Miss Walevska concludes a two-day visit to the University with another program at 8 p.m. Friday, with sonatas by Debussy, Sancan, Prokofiev, as well as works by Couperin and Tchaikovsky.

Christine Walevska is a native of California. Her talents in music were nurtured from an early age by her father, a dealer in rare musical instruments in Los Angeles. Gregor Piatigorsky, the noted cellist, accepted Miss Walevska as a pupil and called her "one of the extraordinary artists of the new generation." She received a scholarship to attend the Paris Conservatory and was awarded first prize in cello and first prize in chamber music, becoming the first American musician to be so honored.

Miss Walevska's career was flourished in Europe and South America where she has performed as soloist with many leading orchestras, and as a recitalist.

Reserved tickets to Christine Walevska's recitals, part of the Fine Arts Council's Celebrity Series young artist showcase concerts, are available at $3 (half-price to UMass undergraduates) and may be obtained by contacting the Council's ticket office, 125 Herter Hall, Amherst, 01002. Telephone 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium one hour prior to each concert.

Hampshire Offering Law Courses

The following Hampshire College Law Program courses are being offered this spring, and are still open to UMass students. If you are interested in either course, call the Law Program at 542-4668.

Problems in the Philosophy of Law and Justice. What is the nature of law? What is the meaning of justice? These two questions have figured in the work of major philosophers from Plato to the present day. This course will explore their ideas and seek to determine the significance of them for a number of topics of current concern. A principle object of the course will be to examine the difference one's philosophic position makes to the resolution of practical problems.

There will be a brief exploration of the history of legal philosophy, and then each student will select the work of a single philosopher for intensive study. The student will speak on behalf of that philosopher in a series of debates on civil disobedience, equality, the sanctity of life, the growth of law, the relationship of law to language, the capacities of international law to contribute to world order, the impact of science and technology upon law, and the limits of the legal order.

No previous work in philosophy or law is presupposed. Meets Monday, Wednesday 1:30-3:00; Professor Lester Mazor.

Professions. The course will study professions from the sociological perspective, focusing upon Law and Medicine as specific cases. Questions of definition and the socialization process will serve as guidelines to study the rights and responsibilities of the professions—the freedom and/or control that is or needs to be exercised—and what the future of the professions may be. Efforts will be made to study and spend field work time both in professionalizing institutions as well as with the observation of the professions in practice.

Meets Tuesday, Thursday 9:30-11:00; Professors Lester Mazor and Robert von der Lippe.

Elitist Rag?

This week, the staff of the Collegian chose seven people who will have a big effect on what the people on this campus know about each other.

Those people are the board of editors of the Collegian: the Editor-in-Chief, Managing Editor, News Editor, Business Manager, Executive Editor, Photo Editor, and Sports Editor.

The new board is made up entirely of white males. The situation on the paper at large is slightly better, with a good number of women, but there is currently not one Third World (black, Spanish-speaking, Chicano) person on the staff.

As one recent piece of advice to the Collegian stated, telling minority persons to join the Collegian isn't enough. But it's a start—a good start. This newspaper is made up of the persons who appear day after day, sit around and trade ideas, and sometimes work far into the night to turn the paper out.

The Collegian hopes in the future to improve its coverage of women's and Third World events, and to open up the paper to editorial viewpoints from these groups.

But the best way to make sure this paper reflects the campus community is for the various people of that community to come in and help shape it on a day-to-day basis.

If you think the Collegian is an elitist rag, or is not a viable community newspaper, only you can help us change it.

Our offices are on the second floor of the Student Union.

A New Speaker

John Hogan will be among the missing tonight when the Student Senate holds its weekly meeting. Overshadowing all other business will be the election of a new Speaker, replacing Hogan, whose resignation a week ago left this sensitive position vacant. Someone new will try to give leadership to the Senate for the next three months.

It has not been a good year for the Student Senate. Not only has the flow of legislation been slow, but the committee work so vital to an active Senate is in disrepair. A number of governmental reforms which were passed separately have not been codified, leaving the rules by which the Senate operates confused. There is also the perennial problem of inertia, one which has grown in the last year. Finally, and perhaps most important, Hogan's resignation comes just before the Senate tackles what is probably its most important annual decision, that of budgets for RSO groups, which determine the SATF fee for 1973-1974. What is needed is responsible and vigorous leadership.

Of the candidates for Speaker, one, Nick Apostola, gives the most promise of being such a leader. His record over the past three years demonstrates that he is the person most likely to get the Senate going. He has worked hard on behalf of the students of this University.

Perhaps the best indication of what Apostola can do is his work in the area of Academic Affairs. When he became chairperson of the Senate's Academic Affairs Committee, it had not been meeting, and there were no members continuing on the committee other than himself. In two years he has built that committee into the strongest and most active committee in the Senate. He has been responsible for the publication of both Teacher Evaluation and Course Description Guide, jobs that weren't being done until Apostola was given charge of the committee.

In addition to this, Apostola has led the fight for the abolition of the Rhetoric requirement. Long research and much discussion went into the Proposal, which cleared the Student Senate and the Faculty Senate Subcommittee on Academic Affairs before being defeated by the Faculty Senate.

Nick Apostola

Although the attempt failed, it was largely through the efforts of Nick Apostola that it went as far as it did.

People at WMPIRG will tell you that Nick Apostola was a great help to them when they were getting started. WMPIRG, the defender of the public and the consumer, ran into opposition when it was first proposed, since its activities fall outside of the established purviews of student tax money. Apostola helped to clear the way for WMPIRG to achieve its present voluntary contribution status, thus allowing them the funds to operate in behalf of the students of this University.

It was through the efforts of Nick Apostola that the Committee to Search for a Chancellor, appointed in 1971 following the resignation of Chancellor Oswald Tippo, included fifty percent student membership. This unprecedented student participation has since become a standard practice, giving students a far greater voice in the affairs of the Amherst campus.

While the Speakership of the Senate is primarily an internal position, the Senate does not operate in a vacuum. Apostola's work on the Rhetoric Requirement and following the Tippo resignation have given him an invaluable exposure to the sometimes Byzantine politics of Whitmore and of the Faculty Senate. This knowledge is particularly useful since the Senate will soon be considering major proposals for reform of core curriculum requirements.

The Senate needs to move. It handles an enormous sum of money, and acts as a central clearinghouse for students, who by our unwieldy numbers are unable to voice our desires without an organization to make sense of the sound of all those voices speaking at once. Apostola can get the committees moving again; his own record will serve as his example of what can be done given a little hard work and direction. He has done his work within the Senate; he knows the external side as well. For the price paid by the student body for student government, it deserves active and productive leadership. Nick Apostola is the best person for the job. Hoa binh.

A Child's Playground

Kai Lee and her brother, Kai Sun, were playing in the rubble of what was once their home. It had been only a few weeks since the airplanes, which Kai Lee could never understand, had come by and made the Earth erupt for miles in every direction, but those planes had left and now, all appeared quite calm.

Kai Lee was young and quite adorable, considering all she'd been through. She was intelligent, but she couldn't understand why there was always so much death around her. Her father had died only three weeks earlier when, while plowing his field, he was blown up. Most of her friends were marred or maimed in one way or another, and consequently, they resented her. So there she was, playing with Kai Sun on this quiet Tuesday afternoon.

Kai Sun limped a bit. He had been caught in a crossfire while out searching for food one day, and his leg never really recovered.

However, the two children seemed quite happy in their escapades and continued to frolic out into the fields that surrounded their village. They had been warned time and again not to venture into those fields, but the danger had slipped their minds as it so often does with children at play.

Suddenly, Kai Lee heard a noise and glimpsed around, only to realize that she and her brother were in the forbidden area. Upon hearing gunfire, she turned and prepared to make the dash back to the village, when she noticed that her brother had disappeared from sight. Memories of the day her brother's leg was injured flashed through her mind, and all she could think of were the possibilities of his having been less fortunate this time.

She darted about madly, panicking at the thought of more death, and screaming her brother's name continually. Then, from within the tall grass at the edge of the field, she saw a small head pop up. She hurried towards it, echoing her brother's name even more fluidly than before. She could soon see well enough to recognize Kai Sun's features on the face of the small child limping towards her.

Kai Lee ran to him and picked him up in her arms and attempted to retreat towards the village. With Kai Sun nestled in her arms, she ran as fast as she could away from the ever-increasing barrage of bullets which now filled the air around the field. The village seemed so close, but yet, so far as she tried desperately to make her way over the seemingly endless hills and potholes of the former U.S. bomb sight. She tried not to concentrate on her brother, who by now had become an enormous burden.

The village was only a few hundred yards away now, and the knowledge of this gave Kai Lee a renewed vitality that can only be found in times of crisis. She arrived back at the village just as the formerly quiet clearing she had just exited became a resounding battlefield. She turned, still holding Kai Sun in her arms, and gazed at what had, only a moment before, been a children's playground, but was now an adult battlefield.

That night, Kai Lee pondered the day's events and wondered if maybe the next time, she will not make it back to the village. Meanwhile, in a distant land, a newscaster tells his audience that the war is over and the soldiers will be returning home. However, as far as Kai Lee is concerned, the war continues. This is her home.

$7.50 To Turn It On Again

To The Editor:

It's not enough that we have problems with registration, course changes, or books not in stock, but the telephone company has to turn off our phones. Phone bills sat in mailboxes during semester break because ten days-from the end of the billing period, December 13, to December 23-was not long enough for them to get them to us before we left.

Without any definite notice to us, our phone was shut off yesterday because we didn't pay a bill we just received one week ago. They may say they don't know our days off, but they are very sure that we're not there when they should call and notify us that the phone is being disconncted. Any residential home will be notified by phone of their overdue bill before the phone is shut off, but a UMass student is "never home" so we are not notified.

In order to get our phone turned back on we must pay a $7.50 charge which we feel is unjust because we were not notified. When we called our assigned number for questions about bills, we were told to "call back next month and we'll discuss it."

One more aggravation made the day because we paid the bill (not the $7.50) and were told that our service would be restored by five o'clock. True to form, the telephone company failed again, and here we sit without a phone. (We each pay $19 per semester for this phone.)

Similar incidents have occurred throughout our dorm. One incident concerned a phone that was shut off because the former occupants didn't pay the bill. Another was shut of even though the bill was paid and not acknowledged. These people, too face a $7.50 charge to get their phone service back--a $7.50 charge TO FLICK A SWITCH.

Is there any way to fight this monopoly?

Nick's The One

To The Editor:

A Student Senator that I know said that I shouldn't use the Collegian to express my views on the election for the Speaker of the Senate, mainly because it doesn't involve the students as a whole. Well, I disagree.

It's about time students took some interest in who the Student Senate decides its leaders will be. After all the leaders are the people who direct the Senate in its business.

Nick Apostola's Academic Affairs Committee has been the most active committee in the Senate when dealing with the purpose of this whole university, that is, education. Besides the tangibles (Course Description Guide, How To Get Through The University On Your Own Terms, the Rhetoric Requirement fight), Nick has led the committee towards questioning a lot of things that are happening to us educationally in this university.

I feel that the Senate can no longer afford to keep a person's of Nick's abilities and drive concentrating on just one area of student government. I urge the Senate to elect Nick Apostola to the position of Speaker.

All letters must be signed and the author's address and telephone number must be included. Letters will be accepted from organizations, but a name and a telephone number must be on them. Please note this change in policy. No letter will be published without this information. Also, no letters will be printed without a signature.

All letters are subject to editing either for content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Also, due to space limitations, we do not guarantee that all letters will be printed.

Vietnamese Heroism

To The Editor:

Mr. Tackeff's Thursday editorial expressed a view of the modern history of South-east Asia that is without a doubt just as openminded and truthful in outlook as my fifth grade American history text. There are crucial issues other than holding back a "Red Tide of Aggressors" at stake in the conflict. After having been consistently betrayed by the Western powers, the Vietnamese people are struggling for an inevitable goal....not "international hegemony" as you say, but the opportunity for national self-determination. In your strain to justify America's aggressive foreign policy you completely ignore the situation and the rights of the Indo-Chinese population.

America has imposed an oppressive military dictatorship n South Viet Nam and is attempting to repeat this act in Cambodia. In the process of retaining control over areas of S.E. Asia, the U.S. has caused the destruction of millions of acres of land, the misery of millions of people, and the disruption of a culture. After over 20 years of meddling, where is the justification for all this? Certainly, it is not in the regime of Mr. Thieu, or in Geneal Lon Nol. You say that America has withstood a grueling conflict, but the heroic stand of the Vietnamese puts America to shame. Your "massive offenses launched by the Communist forces" pale when compared to the daily rain of death inflicted on the population and countryside.

Mr. Tackeff should stop rationalizing and try viewing the developments in S.E. Asia from the perspective of an inhabitant.

Sour Hitchhiker

To The Editor:

For such a heavy concentration of young people supposedly concerned with vital social change, most people abut this campus seem to express little more than rhetoric when useful cooperation is asked. Indeed, if college is to better prepare one for the modern world, we're all doing quite well it would seem.

To cite only one minor example, it seems inordinately difficult for anybody to hitch-hike in the area of this campus. And often the person who does stop has nothing to do with UMass. Those that hitch are not there for the sheer joy of it-especially at night and in foul weather. We need to get somewhere! I won't go into the oft-heard phrase that hitch-hikers are the only ones doing anything about transportation, crowding and pollution, although that is a point to ponder.

But the sad sight seen from the roadside is people who look just like you and I hiding behind the wheel, people who feel they are perhaps a bit "cool" and "hip" and won't make the mistakes of the older generation. Yet, they fail to perform even the most elemental courtesies. And for all of the horror expressed concerning the number of assaults against women hitching, the average "honest citizen" passes the hitcher by when she's asking for help, leaving her for some creep to arrive.

Perhaps someday we'll come to view sharing our vehicles as something of a civic duty rather than brushing aside hitch-hikers as though they had no right to be on the road too. Really, where are we going in such a hurry?

Editorial Points

At the Collegian elections Monday night, George McGovern received a nomination for Sports Editor. As would be his luck, he got only one vote. But that's OK. All Collegian editors have to be UMass undergraduates anyway.

QUESTION: What do Henry Kissinger and Ralph Nader have in common? ANSWER: They both probably get only four hours of sleep per day. NEXT QUESTION: Considering Nader's notable absence of women, and Kissinger's abundance of women, why is it that Henry always looks so much more well-rested?

This year has seen an outburst of chess freaks on campus. There used to be a time when students would get drunk, get stoned, and just sit around. Now, they get drunk, get stoned, sit around and play chess.

Chess can be awfully addicting. Once you learn the moves and start playing the game, you'll end up playing it when you should be researching a paper that's due in two weeks. It can be worse than cigarettes, or even heroin. (Watch a chess game sometime, and notice the dull gaze in the players' eyes.)

And you know you've had it when you start hallucinating, with black and white checkerboard patterns appearing before your eyes. After all, isn't that what happened to Alice (of Wonderland fame)?

Alice the chess freak!!!!!! She knows all the moves! She's notorious for the way she works knights. Everyone loves to play with Alice.

Quinn's Abortion Stand

To The Editor:

Attorney General Robert H. Quinn has adopted the sound position that the ruling of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Roe v. Wade mandates the right of any woman in Massachusetts with the advice of her physician to obtain an abortion during the medically appropriate terms of the woman's pregnancy.

The importance of the Attorney General's opinion is that any legislative action in contravention will be unenforceable. As a consequence, a series of clarifying lawsuits establishing the precise rule in Massachusetts will be unnecessary. While I believe that Attorney General Quinn has taken an absolutely sound legal position, I think your readers should be aware that it represents a very progressive secondary step in the advancement of women's rights and in this Commonwealth is a very courageous position for Mr. Quinn to have taken.

The result of the opinion is, of course, that women may obtain an abortion early in pregnancy from a licensed physician. I urge any woman who has the need for such medical assistance to insist upon qualified and safe medical treatment. Any person, whether counsellor or patient, before submitting or referring to any abortion procedure should be sure of the qualifications of the medical practitioner.

The best source of information is a woman's center or organized counselling service. The local women's centers are: Valley Women's Center, Northampton; Everywoman and Southwest Women's Centers, UMass. My concern is that women in need avoid being victimized by the charlatans that sometimes emerge in situations such as this. Continue to seek counsel and aid from those you know you can trust.

A Lucrative Suggestion

To The Editor:

I have recently discovered an amazing way to make money. I thought I might share it with you:

First purchase a tract of land upon which students are forced to park due to circumstances. (A small investment considering the returns). Next charge five dollars per car for parking.

Sounds pretty good, eh? Well, that's nothing. Here's where you make the real money. You need the cooperation of the weather but it can generally be counted on. After a major snow refuse to plow the lot. This will greatly reduce the parking area available forcing your paying customers to park in the street. Then you can ticket them for parking illegally and have them towed away, thus spreading the wealth. You make another 5 bucks and the towing company can collect 17 bucks for themselves. Sounds pretty good, doesn't it?

You say it won't work. People will complain and won't allow it to happen. Besides, no one would do such a thing. Well, it has happened. Just as I described it. It's a nice way to make money, but if you're going to try it, get a good lawyer and lock your doors because people get upset when they get ripped off.

Now, I ask you; Is this anyway to run a University? I say no, and I'm going to try and do something about it.

Organizing For *Peace*time

By GILBERT J. SALK

I'm told the war is over. All the newspaper columnists (establishment media) are writing about the death of the movement. There are no major issues with enough concrete and emotional impact to be used as organizing tools. People are tired. People are apathetic. People are frustrated.

Bullshit.

The real war is still with us, and the only thing keeping people from organizing around it is that it seems so amorphous. The battle is for human freedom and dignity within a coercive, manipulative, dehumanizing, death-oriented culture. I don't need to catalogue the fucked-up priorities of the government, of industry, of our educational institutions. You've heard it all before. The big question before us, now that our role in the murder of Vietnamese people is, hopefully, ending, is how we can reorder those priorities.

I don't claim to have all the answers, but I'd like to rap out some possible approaches.

There seems to be a need for a peace movement (as opposed to an anti-war movement.) We need a local group of people who are willing to tilt at windmills, and who can find ways to energize themselves even when there are no immediate rewards. At present, most of us let our institutions control our lives, either directly or indirectly, and we need to find ways to free ourselves of that control.

Analysis: The anti-war movement was a negative response, as was the civil rights movement, in part, in that it acted to oppose a destructive system. Its greatest weakness was that it created no alternatives. We've won our most visible battle--the bombing has ended--and now we find ourselves with no apparent place to go. We goofed. For a time we were gathering hundreds of thousands of people in mass rallies, and instead of using the opportunities to educate them to understand their own potential for freedom (and the revolutionary potential inherent in that freedom), we ego-tripped by hurling verbal invective over the head of the crowd toward the White House, thereby legitimizing the illegitimate power residing there.

Now, as a result, we've got to start from scratch. We have to work to keep people from falling back into a 1950s-style laissez-faire contentment. At the same time, we must offer positive directions, experiment with our own lives as we try to live freedom, and establish support systems for our brothers and sisters who are working with us.

Some things are happening which you might want to plug in to, or you might have some of your own ideas which you'd like some help with. If you want help with your own idea, I'd be glad to rap with you. You can usually find me in 420 SU (Draft Counseling Services office) during the day.

Things that are going on that I know about:

Some folks are talking about putting together a sort of Peace Counseling Service. It will include things like draft, veterans, and military counseling, tax resistance counseling, lifestyle and cultural alternatives counseling, and related stuff. Contact either Tom Whitney or Eric Stocker at 545-0813 or 256-8325 if you're interested.

Another group, which was born out of this column, is trying to create a Culturnatives Clearinghouse. This group will be compiling a list of human resources, primarily within the university community, which can be used by members of the community. They'll be finding out has skills in crafts, building, human potential, lifestyle alternatives, creating new life support systems, etc. They will also be keeping a list of people who have programs they'd like to work on if they can find other people with a similar interest. If you want to work with this group, leave your name with the United Christian Foundation in 319 Hampshire House or call 545-2661.

If you know of other projects in the works, let me know so I can help get the word out. CULTURNATIVES is about people finding new ways to run their lives, and your ideas about that are as good as mine. Your help is needed.

PEACE BOOK REVIEWS

A whole additional area of human freedom is touched by the human potential movement. Things like T- groups, sensitivity training, human relations, group process labs, values clarification, life planning, sexuality/sensuality, conflict resolution. These are all designed to teach people more about themselves and how they interact with others. This movement will be the subject of a separate column in the near future—I'll be away all next week at a workshop learning to become a facilitator. But for now, a few short reviews on some light and moderate books on the subject.

Handbook of Structured Experiences for Human Relations Training by J. W. Pfeiffer and J. E. Jones (3 volumes @ $3 each, may be ordered separately, University Associates Press, Iowa City, Iowa.) is a series of group exer-

Prison Conference To Be Held

By DON GLICKSTEIN

Films about prisons, speakers, and discussions will be part of a Conference on Prisons to be held at UMass on Saturday.

Sponsored by the Self-Development Group of Boston—an organization of ex-convicts that helps men and women adjust to life outside-of-jail by providing them jobs, housing, and counseling—the Conference will be attended by current inmates from Deer Island State Prison and from the Hampshire County House of Correction, prison officials, and representatives from the Lawyer's Commune in Boston.

Some of the inmates are expected to recite poems written by prisoners, as well as talk about the rehabilitative failure of prisons, Federal, state, and county.

The Conference is open to the public, and will be held at Farley Lodge (behind F Lot) on Saturday from 9 a.m.-5 p.m. Admission for students is $2 and for others is $5. The money will be used to defray the costs of lunch, with the remainder being donated to the Self-Development Group.

More information may be obtained from Tim Ney at the Self-Development Group, 3 Joy Street, Boston 02138, 617-523-3580.

CCEBS Tutoring

The CCEBS program (Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students) is offering, once again, academic instruction for any CCEBS student in any course offered by the university.

In order to avoid any academic difficulty (i.e.: academic probation), or to perform better in school, we suggest that you take advantage of this service provided free of charge to you as early as possible.

The policy of the Academic Instruction Component is that tutoring is optional for all brothers and sisters, freshmen through seniors.

How to Get a Tutor:

1. Call the tutorial office, room 219, New Africa House (CCEBS 545-0031),
2. Know specifically the course, course number and section you need academic assistance in, cises/educational experiences. It is an excellent set, which I highly recommend to those who have training as facilitators. It is not light reading, so if you're just curious about groups, it won't help much. Exercises are described in terms of goals, time, materials, process, and task. It functions as much as an idea-stimulater as it does as a resource. A good practical plus is room for your own notes after the description of each exercise so you can record your own usage and reactions.
3. Also include your local address and phone number. The component director will recruit and contact a tutor for you. It is the responsibility of the student to call the tutorial office to find who your tutor is.

Please Touch by Jane Howard ($1.25, Dell, NYC) is a mild-mannered, superficial, somewhat tongue-in- cheek look at a number of different group styles. It's entertaining, and, if you can get beyond the fluff, can give you some insight into the possibilities of group experience. A major flaw: Ms. Howard missed the entire humanistic strength-building portion of the field, and seems devoted to putting down the more sensationalist styles.

Growth Games by H. R. Lewis and H. S. Streitfeld ($1.50, Bantam Books, NYC) is a somewhat better lightweight than Please Touch. A cautionary word, however. These "games" can be very stress-producing, and shouldn't be tried out at parties. However, the book does describe some common exercises used in many groups to facilitate learning, and can give you some idea of what can go on in a group.

Please note that I don't believe that any book can adequately describe a good group experience. If you're interested in groups, first-hand experience is the only way to fly. More on this in my next column.

'Naiks and Natus' To Be Discussed

"Naiks and Natus: Two Family Responses to Changes in Socio-Political Power in Western India, 1850-1890" will be the topic of a lecture to be given tomorrow in the Converse Hall Assembly Room at Amherst College.

Michael D. Metelits, instructor in South and Southeast Asian history at San Francisco State College, will give the lecture at 8 p.m. as part of a fall-winter lecture series on "New Approaches to the History of Modern China and India." The series, sponsored by the College's Department of History, will continue on successive Thursday evenings through the end of February. All lectures are open to the public at no charge.

Metelits, a graduate of Northwestern University and currently a candidate for the Ph.D. in history at the University of California, Berkeley, specializes in 19th century India at the local level. In 1969-70, as a Fulbright-Hayes Fellow, he did systematic research in India on the creation of new ocal elites in western India. His lecture will examine the different ways in which two powerful families, in 19th century Maharasshtra, worked through both traditional institutions and the British administrative structure to preserve and enhance their power.

Women Push For Voice In Affirmative Action

By ANN BRENTLINGER

A group of women from various women's organizations around campus met January 23 to discuss ways women could have an input into the University's Affirmative Action program for women and minority peoples. The U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare now requires that colleges and universities who receive federal grants for education to prepare their own Affirmative Action program form reducing discrimination against women and minorities. The University is planning an Affirmative Action report which will specify goals on such issues as women and minority student and part-time student admissions and financial aid, and timetables for hiring more women and minority staff and faculty.

The meeting January 23 was a follow-up to a meeting held before Christmas, which was an open meeting called by Everywoman's Center for interested women and minorities with some administrators responsible for the Affirmative Action report. The December meeting ended in frustration for the women present, who felt that the administrators had not provided themselves with enough input from women and minority groups on campus, especially those representing student interests, to get a comprehensive picture of the sort of policies needed to offset discrimination against women and minority students, staff and faculty. At the follow-up meeting January 23 it was decided that women on campus need to form a political organization to formulate their own needs and goals, to establish communication between various women's organizations, and to use the resources the female community has itself to build programs supportive of women in key areas not adequately handled by the University.

There is a meeting planned for tomorrow night at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center, Rm. 174-76 for all women interested in a University Women's Caucus. Planned for that meeting is a general information session on the current status of women on campus and ongoing projects by various groups. A list of women's organizations will be compiled and a parliamentary structure for the University Women's Caucus will be formed.

There will be a speaker to discuss current problems and programs for women in the following areas: University Feminist Studies, part-time students, financial aid and admissions, child care, counseling for women, staff and faculty positions and the Affirmative Action report to date. The second part of the meeting will have those present break into work groups to formulate policy ideas and programs to be submitted to the next meeting of the University Women's Caucus for ratification.

The underlying purpose of the meeting on Thursday is to form a University Women's Caucus as a unified body of women to formulate common goals and work groups to implement these goals in a sense of sisterhood for all student, faculty, staff and community women. All interested women and organizations are invited.

—By SYDNEY OMARR—

Ask Aries and Sagittarius for advice and you will be paying those signs great compliments. But Gemini might not be so pleased, preferring not to be confused by the problems of others. Capricorn is apt to reflect, recalling past experiences but is not likely to give a direct answer. Leo will be magnanimous and generous but perhaps not too practical. Aquarius will want to help but finding time to do so might not be easy. Pisces would be very sympathetic but would leave the ultimate solution up to you. Ask your favorite sign for advice and let me know the response.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): What appears to be a giveaway could be something entirely different. No one is giving you something for nothing. Cycle is high but you must exercise caution where legal documents enter picture. Do some doublecheck ing.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Confinement, restrictions are highlighted. Make the most of time you spend alone. Remember that being alone is not same as being lonely. Club, group, hospital or institution is featured. Health and work command your attention.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Dispute could arise among friends. Some of your plans are revised. Be willing to accept innovations. Virgo could play key role. Road to romance is apt to be bumpy. Sense of humor can be valuable ally.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Attention centers around home base and practical issues. There are changes which could be upsetting. Security may appear threatened. Settlement is postponed. Talk with family member is imperative.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Check reservations. Communications tend to be disrupted, misinterpreted. Avoid travel unless absolutely necessary. Examine long range goals. Don't fool yourself. See persons as they really exist, not merely as you would like them to be.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Guard valuables. Take nothing for granted. Get promises in writing. Assume responsibility for your own welfare. Others may not be equipped to do job. Opportunity is great if you are willing to work overtime.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Process of tearing down occurs for purpose of rebuilding. Do plenty of listening, observing. Finish rather than begin projects. Let others show their hands. Hold something in reserve. You can successfully play waiting game.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Fresh point of view is necessary. Delay, setback these are but temporary. Stick to style and principles. Show consideration toward one who is handicapped or confined. Keep health resolutions. Avoid extremes.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may be confused because of emotional tug of war. You are drawn between old loyalties and new desires. Lovers' quarrel could result. Strive to know these conditions are not long lasting. Maintain self-esteem.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Restlessness prevails. Necessary to find outlet for energies. Imprint your style. Help family members but know you have your own life to live. Sagittarian could confide problem. Don't cast first stone.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): One who asks you to run errand may not be aware of traffic conditions. Protect yourself. Don't promise more than you can deliver. Avoid trying to do too much at once. Relative may be unreasonable.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Count your change. Be wary of individual who seems to be a supersalesman. Check percentages, interest rates. No one is handing you anything on proverbial silver platter. Know it and act accordingly.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a spiritual person, concerned with the welfare of others. Pressure of family problems will be lifted in March. Your most significant month of 1973 is likely to be June. You have an affinity for Pisces persons.

Ski Team Wins Two to Extend Streak

By MDC STAFF

Friday afternoon and night a warm rain fell making the driving very hazardous and reducing the snow coverage so that 10 percent or more of the mountains were bare and snow cover elsewhere was thin, soft and mushy. Skiing was so bad that the Dartmouth Skiway opened for the race only. Without the aid of chemicals, ski racing would have been impossible on that warm wet Saturday. The first stop for the UMass ski team on the way to Hanover was for 150 pounds of calcium cloride which is used for melting snow and ice on roads. Used sparingly, 85 pounds for over a mile of giant slalom race track in this case, this salt hardens slushy snow so that it is firm and icy and will resist the hard abrasion of ninety racers or so. Shovels were used to cover the bare spots and the whole course was salted Saturday morning. A hard fast track developed in the midst of wet slushy snow and the Minutemen set out to take advantage of it.

Steve Tonelli skied first for UMass going carefully on an injured ankle. He finished 8th overall with an 84.2 second time on the bobsled run. Kurt Syer skied second for UMass and had a good 83.5 seconds on the only good skiing in the East to finish 6th overall. Dick McWade skied third for UMass and tied with Ken Biederman of B.U. for third place with a time of 82.3. Dick's performance was the best of the day for UMass. Ed Ahern went 4th for UMass, had lots of trouble with the artificial snow and did not finish. Tim Hague had almost as much trouble as Ahern taking three gates backwards, but ended in 20th place, none-the- less. Larry Peck skied sixth for UMass and finished an excellent fifth and was selected to receive the team's first place trophy for the day's best performance. Dave Rutter skied seventh for UMass and had an excellent run but missed the last blue gate just before the finish. Dave didn't see it, but he is being fitted to glasses and will see all gates from now on in. Dave Ferris skied late on bib 62 and finished 39th. Bill Nebesky skied even later on bib 72 and squeaked in a very good 19th place with an 88.1 on a fast rutty course. Phil McKeague, back on his injured ankle, had some trouble and finished 45th. Bob Morrow of Northeastern won the race with a very good 80.3, Andy Wernick of Tufts was second with an 81.5. After that it was mostly UMass all the way.

The Minutemen finished with 337.2 seconds and a victory. BU was second with a 345.7; N.U., third with a 346.3; Amherst was fourth with a 347.4; followed in order by Tufts, BC, Princeton, Bentley, AIC, UConn.

Coach MacConnell used the same race order on Sunday as on Saturday. Steve Tonelli had a ski binding failure in the rock hard moguls near the bottom in his first run. Kurt Syer put two good runs together on a long tough course to finish second to Bob Morrow of Northeastern. Bob's winning time was 160.3; Kurt's, 161.9 seconds for the two runs. Dick McWade with a 164.3 finished 6th. Ed Ahearn went flying in the frozen moguls which ripped off Tonelli's ski got out in the frozen crud, took a very bad fall and injured his shoulder. Tim Hague went next for UMass and finished 14th with a 169.6. Larry Peck had an excellent 82.3 on the first run, but lost his line and got an 85.6 on the second run and finished 11th overall. Dave Rutter skied seventh and finished 25th. Dave Ferris finished 33rd. Bill Nebesky skiing on bib 71 in 9th slot for UMass finished a very good 20th. Ben Ferris on bib 81 finished 12th. Bill McKeague almost the last man off the mountain ripped a toe block off the ski in the lethal frozen moguls and did not finish.

The Minutemen proved that they could "cut it" on frozen ice with a winning time of 663.7 seconds. B.U. was a close second with 664.5, B.C. way back with 683.6 seconds. Amherst was fourth with 687.0. Northeastern was fifth; Tufts, 6th; UConn, 7th; AIC, 8th; Bentley, 9th and Princeton, 10th.

These two wins extend the Minutemen winning streak to 36 to zip. Eight tenths of a second ahead of B.U. in a total time of 663.7 seconds is not a safe lead, however. In four times out skiing on frozen grannular, in slush, and on ice, the Minutemen have kept it all together; they would like to try their skiing skill on snow.

Women's Ski Team Takes Second Place

By MDC STAFF

For the first time in history the UMass Women's Ski Team was given the opportunity to participate in a three week training camp with the Men's Ski Team at the Haystack Ski Area in Vermont. The girls stressed their improvement of technique while working out at their Northern retreat and it proved worthwhile as they captured second place in the first match of the WISC League at Berkshire East.

UNH earned first place in the match while Wellesley rounded out the top three. Other schools that sent teams to compete were Merrimack, Mount Holyoke, and Boston University.

Heather MacConnell and Connie Brooks each finished in the top ten of 56 racers with MacConnell taking third and Brooks taking eighth. The other seven girls who skied turned in good times although they did not place.

As is the case in many competitive sports, injuries take their toll and so it was that Cindy Rosati had to sit out the first match. Rosati has suffered a knee injury which will sideline her for an indefinite period of time.

The team journeys to Tenney Mountain this weekend for another meet involving area schools. Possibilities of competing in the much stiffer Northern League Match do exist if the girls can take first or second in either of the slalom or Giant Slalom this next meet.

Trackmen Fall, 73-44

By WALT POWERS

It's nice to play before a hometown crowd once in a while because, as the UMass trackmen found out for the fourth straight time yesterday, the road can indeed be rough. This time Dartmouth tripped the Minutemen in their spacious, ultra-modern field house, by a score of 73-44.

UMass had an easier time against the Big Green than they did against Northeastern, but some bad breaks in the field events kept them out of contention. Weightman Bob Bocash pulled a bicep warming up, and shot putter Carmen Letizia fouled on his longest throw of the afternoon. Dartmouth swept both events.

Higl. jumper John Osborne sprained his ankle on his first try at six feet, and had to settle for second place at 5'10". UMass freshman Fred Kruse took third, also with a jump of 5'10".

The injury of Mike Geraghty and Pete Ryan's poor health cost UMass a possible sweep of the triple jump. Sophomore Mike Buckley took third for UMass with a jump of 20'72", and Ken Banda won it at 21'5 1/2". Banda wasn't satisfied. "I wanted to reach the twenty-two foot mark but the runway was fast, and I fouled a lot. Still, I'm happy with the win," he said.

Mike Buckley, in his first competitive try at the triple jump, took second place with a jump of 41'7 3/4".

Timing is everything in the fifty yard dash

"Timing is everything in the fifty yard dash" said co-captain Tony Pendleton, after Dartmouth's Rich Berryman edged him by a step at the tape. Pendletons awkward start gave Berryman a two step advantage that Pendleton never made up. Tony's younger brother Marshall took third, despite a six week layoff due to an ankle injury.

In the hurdles, Minuteman Jim Hennessey took first place, his third first place finish in four tries this season. This race was the closest of meet, with the top four runners separated by no more than a foot. In fact, it took a conference of officials to confirm the third place finish of UMass freshman Curt Steggerwald.

Steve Levine fell behind in the 600, and his patented gun-lap kick wasn't enough to catch Rich Nichols, a powerful Dartmouth freshman.

UMass dominated in the distance events. In the mile, Randy Thomas, bothered by chest congestion, took advantage of a slow first half, and held on to win with a time of 4:16.8. Doug O'Connel, at 4:22, came in fourth for UMass.

Freshman Phil Broughton surprised everybody, including himself, by romping to victory in the J.V. mile. His winning time of 4:20.4 would have placed him third in the varsity race.

Sophomore Bill Gillin celebrated his twentieth birthday by romping home to victory in the two-mile. He led almost all the way and his only real competition came from teammate Tom Maguire, who finished second for the third straight time.

UMass saved its best for last. In the two mile relay, the UMass team of Steve Levine, John Maloney, Pete Byron, and Devin Crost clipped fourteen seconds off the old meet record, and established a new UMass indoor mark in a runnaway victory. The Minutemen got strong runs on each leg, but it was John Maloney's "explosion" on the last lap of his second leg that gave the Minutemen their big lead, and propelled them to victory in a time of 7:46.8.

Freshman Phil Broughton wins the J.V. mile in a time of 4:20.4. UMass dominated the distance events, but lost the meet, 73-44, to Dartmouth yesterday. (MDC Photo by Tom Derderian)

UMass-BC 'Rematch' In Springfield Tonight

By EARLE BARROLL

If you saw THE game of the fall, then you certainly can't miss THE game of the winter as far as sentiments, anti-compliments and indictments are concerned.

Tonight at the Springfield Civic Center (8 p.m.) "phase II" of UMass' quest for a home-away-from-home plots east and west, Boston and "huh ?", private and public and most of all the amorous relationship between Massachusetts brethren, UMass and Boston College.

"I can remember when I played for Boston University," recalled Jack Leaman yesterday in his office. "It was quite the rivalry then between B.U. and B.C. Usually players and fans had to fight their way out, literally, at each others gym.

"Today there is still this intense rivalry between these two schools, but UMass and Boston College is becoming even bigger due to the Boston press and the number of students from the Boston area who attend UMass."

You can also add the "mere" fact that Dick MacPherson catalyzed this match-up to the "nth" power on November 25, 1972 A.D. when his gridders dismantled not only an excellent football team, but a seemingly impregnable myth in the process.

Since Leaman's arrival at this campus the series between these two schools has hypered for (1) Leaman himself has inspired UMass and outraged the opposition with his ability and personality and (2) he has forged a program with the Erving's (yes, there is only one Dr. J), the Skinner's (and maybe one of him) and the Ellerbrook's that is not only commensurate with that of B.C. but also a challenge for the Heights to match.

Up until Saturday's upset on Eastern TV of Fordham, 75-74, the Eagles were in the midst of a six-game tailspin. "But," Leaman was quick to add, "they've had a great deal of sickness and injuries during that time. The Fordham game was the first time in weeks that B.C. was a healthy team."

Probably the biggest noise out of Newton, since the arrival and departure of Bob Cousy, came last spring when it was announced that three of the "big five" school boy greats of Boston were heading towards B.C. Ron Lee was on his way to Oregon. King Gaskins chose Holy Cross. But Bob Carrington, Will Morrison and Bill Collins were Boston College bound.

It was also announced at this time that a big Philly twosome of Willie Taylor and Syd Sheppard (a 6'7 Wes Unseld type player) were on their way to the Heights. And so the eyes bulged and the "U.C.L.A." of New England was in its embryo state.

Still, an injury to Sheppard and the 1.6 ruling of the N.C.A.A. that benched Carrington and Collins until only this past month when it was repealed have left B.C. with a "wait" image, but when their time comes..."Carrington is the nearest player that I've seen in high school to Julius Erving," said Leaman. "He dominates a game and does so many good things for a player his size (6'6) just like Julius."

Carrington will be there tonight, but on the bench. The story of B.C. now is Will Morrison, the 6'6 freshman from Boston Tech who completely dominated the last ten minutes of the B.C.-Fordham game and thus far has been perhaps the best B.C. player of this season.

Morrison will be joined by veterans Dave Walker (6'7), Mark Raterink (6'6), and Dan Kilcullan (6'5) to form what Leaman calls "a very big, a very strong and impressive front line." The backcourt will have captain Bob Smith and a smooth lefthander named Jere Nolan who scored the winning basket in last year's 75-74 win over UMass at B.C.

Like UMass, Boston College is a team that thrives and wins on fundamentals. They play tough man-to-man, they full court trap with the big men on the baseline, they run set offenses and fast break when the opportunitius arise. When a situation pops up when two teams mirror each other, but do so in excellence it not only poses problems for each coach, but creates outstanding basketball games.

For the first time since last season's six-game opening winning streak the Minutemen have a chance to win four straight tonight. "We fully understand what B.C. means to us and the university," said Leaman. "And we don't want to take anything away from this game, but UConn on Saturday means more to this season. You have to win the Conference before you start talking about post season."

"Still," he smiled, "we're going after them tomorrow night."

PucksterssHostUConn

By BILL BALLOU

Orr Rink may not be the greatest home in the world for the UMass hockey team, but believe me, anything is better than what tonight's opponent, UConn, has.

The Huskies are forced to play their games at an outdoor rink on their campus at Storrs and the temperature there during a night game makes the Antarctic seem tropical.

Cold weather or no, UMass teams always seem to do pretty well against Connecticut. Last year, at Storrs, the Redmen had a field day in an 11-2 win. The year before they also went into double figures. In fact, the Huskies are one of the few teams that UMass owns an all-time record advantage over.

But UConn is improved. The high point of their season is probably an early-season 6-2 upset win over perennial Division II power Colby. They have been playing pretty good hockey this year but don't look at Storrs as a potential playoff site.

The Minutemen are coming off a heart-breaking 6-5 loss to Division I's Northeastern, in Boston. They've lost four out of their last five games, and all four losses have come at the hands of Division I teams. The win was against St. Anselm's, a Division II team.

Coach Jack Canniff has been getting great goaltending over the last four games from Chick Rheault, and Saturday night one of the all-time greats, Johnny Bower, came down to Boston to take a look at him for Toronto. The way Rheault played, Bower seems a cinch to be back.

Meanwhile, Pat Keenan continues to make monkeys out of every goalie he meets, including the Division I people. Keenan had a hat trick vs. Northeastern, giving him the unbelievable total of 28 goals in just 14 games. Keenan scored 28 goals in his sophomore year and at that time it was a UMass record. He now has 90 career goals and seems a sure bet to break the century mark.

But it's not too likely that any records besides UMass ones will fall. A gent from Middlebury College named Phil Latreille holds them all. Latreille, who played around 1960, holds the record for most goals in a game—10; most goals in a season)80; and most career goals—250.

Anyway, tonight's game should be better than the usual UMass-Uconn fare and it's one of the rare home games for the Minutemen. Game time at Orr Rink is 7:30 P.M.

Wrestlers, No. 10 in East, Take On Dartmouth

By JOHN BOCK

For any school that belongs to the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference (ECAC) and takes pride in its athletic programs, it is an achievement to be rated in the Top 10 in the ECAC.

For the first time in the history of UMass the Minuteman Wrestling team under the auspices of Coach Homer Barr has made it to that coveted list in the tenth position.

Now ten doesn't sound very good but one has to look at it from the correct perspective. First there are some 250 institutions that belong to the ECAC and all but about 50 have wrestling teams. And out of the ECAC comes the powerful Eastern Intercollegiate Wrestling Association (EIWA) whose teams have at least one NCAA Champ from their midst every year. Then of recent years the Pennsylvania College Conference has come on strong where in the past four seasons they have also had at least one Small College National Champ go to the University Tourney and take all the marbles there, too.

And then there is New England, never a hotbed of wrestling but there nevertheless. UMass has become the first New England team to ever be ranked in the East. Chances are the ranking was based a lot on the excellent first semester record the Minutemen compiles (6-0) and the fact that three of the teams they beat were members of the EIWA.

Then there are the team members. This year in the East people are talking about Penn State's Tom Teagarden, Princeton's Lee Klepper, Slippery Rock's Jack Spates, Lehigh's Mike Frick and UMass' Dave Amato.

Last year at the Nationals the second lightest heavyweight at the Tourney beat one of the heaviest and almost pinned the defending national runnerup. That was UMass' Carl Dambman. Steve Benson in earlier years bested two of the better Small College National Champs from the East. Larry Reynolds wrestled some of the best in the nation when he was at Bloomsburg. (He lost by a couple of points to Chico Lutes, from Indiana State, who was named to the All Star team this year.)

The ranking holds until they do the rankings again and the Top 10 is as follows Penn State (also ninth in the nation), Univ. of Buffalo, Clarion State, Lehigh, Wilkes, Navy, Slippery Rock, Princeton, Pittsburgh, and UMass.

So the 10th ranked Minutemen continue the season tonight as they travel to Hanover, New Hampshire for a dual with Dartmouth College. Dartmouth has not had an exceptional season this year but they have a couple of talented wrestlers that will give UMass some trouble. There is Charlie Estin, who is undefeated and was top seed in the New Englands last year, but lost in an early round due to a shoulder injury. He most probably will be at 177 or 190. Then the Big Green have two New England Runnerups in 150 pounder Steve Morrelli and 190 pounder Jim Conterrato.

UMass will take a fairly well balanced team as regulars Larry Reynolds and George Ireland rejoin the lineup at 126 and Heavyweight, respectively. Amato, McGlaughlin, Rome, and Benson will be at their usual weights but Cliff Blom has dropped to 150 in preparation for the Yan Con Tourney this weekend. John Connolly will be at 190 as Carl Dambman sits this one out.

Notice

Busses to tonight's UMass-B.C. basketball game at the Springfield Civic Center are free. Game time is 8 p.m. Tickets are still available in the Boyden ticket office up to 11 a.m. today. They can also be purchased at the Civic Center at $1, $2 and $3. Buses will be leaving from Whitmore at 6:30, 7:00 and 7:30 for Springfield and will be returning immediately following the game.

Booker Elected As Senate Speaker

By STEVE SECHE

After nearly an hour of nominating speeches, during which one of the candidates withdrew, and the remaining three pledged "strong, non-partisan" leadership, David Booker was elected Speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate, receiving a clear majority on the first ballot.

The results were: Booker, 34 votes; Senator Nick Apostola, 24 votes; and Senator Bobbie LaPorte, 5 votes.

Booker, who in assuming the post of Speaker, leaves his position as Chairperson of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, was visibly stunned by his first ballot victory.

"I thought for sure that Nick (Apostola) and I would go three ballots," he said after the results were announced.

In his address to the Senate before the voting, Booker pledged to united the Senate and to overcome the problems of "personality clashes, and frustration that we have felt this past year."

"I'm sure that I can work with everybody in this room," he said, adding that as Speaker, he would "work with the chairmen of the various committees, and not have them work for me."

Booker added, "I don't want the Senate to overshadow the rest of SGA. The area governments should be given their own responsibilities and power."

The voting, which was scheduled to begin at 9:15 p.m., was delayed for several minutes while a women's caucus was held in the Senate office. Following a role call to determine if there was the quorum required for a binding election, candidates were given the opportunity to address the Senate members, followed by nominating and seconding speeches.

It was at this time that Senator Wesley Rasmussen withdrew his candidacy, stating that "it seems like you have to have a political name to win this election, and I just don't have that name."

Each of the candidates who followed repeated their feeling that the person elected Speaker should be strong without being domineering, and capable of leading the Senate out of its present period of "stagnation".

In the Senate business that preceded the election, Richard Nelson, Chairperson of the Campus Center Board of Governors, reported that the Arthur D. Little Co., hired as management consultants for the Campus Center, had "discovered half a million dollars in areas that the students had never been told about." Nelson added that the possibility still remains that Campus Center fees can be reduced to $55 next year.

In another motion, proposed by Senator Nick Apostola, the Senate voted to allow any member of the University community the right to speak before the Senate constant only with those rules which govern the Senators themselves.

Following the elections, and the swearing in of Senator Booker as Speaker by Senate Treasurer Robert Chiller, the Senate turned its attention to budget matters.

The following budget rationales (which do not determine amount of funds, but only express Senate intent to grant funds) were passed: WMUA, Northern Educational Services, Draft Counselling Service; Boltwood Project; Coalition for Environmental Quality; Bicycle Club; Imani (a group formed to support high school students from low-income families). Imani is a Swahili word meaning faith and hope.

False Alarm

Students walking by the new library around 4:30 yesterday afternoon may have thought the unopened 28-story tower had finally started to sink because of the presence of a fire engine and firemen, but it was only a false alarm.

Amherst fire department officials said the alarm was struck at 4:16 p.m. The department says the alarm may have been caused by a malfunction of the alarm system.

Subway Fire Causes Official Investigation

BOSTON (AP) — After the second subway fire in a month left one person dead and 94 in the hospital, Massachusetts transportation officials announced Wednesday that they are ordering 86 of the cars off of the line.

The officials said they had known for two months that the 10-year-old cars had problems with the insulation equipment.

Henry S. Lodge, Chairman of the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority Board of Directors, said at a Wednesday news conference that the cars will be pulled from active service until insulated blocks can be installed on the undersides of the cars. He said this cutback will "cause some decrease in the service level on the line."

Lodge also announced the creation of a three-man panel to conduct a "thorough investigation" of the cause of the fire. He said three transportation executives from New York, New Jersey and Chicago would serve on the panel, and he said a public hearing would be held.

Meanwhile, Gov. Francis W. Sargent Wednesday ordered the state Department of Public Utilities to look into the recent series of MBTA fires and to hold a public hearing next Tuesday. MBTA and Fire Department officials and passengers will testify.

Newly-appointed DPU Chairman Robert L. Meade said the department's investigators were already working on the case. He said that 86 of the 92 "Bluebird" cars on the Harvard Ashmont line where the fire occurred, had been taken out of service until they can be inspected and repaired if necessary.

A spokesman for the MBTA said they will get to work on the subway cars right away, but fixing them could take "weeks", and until then service on the Red Line would be "slowed down".

Sargent also called for intensified training of MBTA employes on emergency procedures and said passengers should be told routinely what to do in case of an emergency.

By late Wednesday, 33 people were still in Boston hospitals, and 12 of these remained on the danger list. The lone fatality was identified as Arthur Rotch, 74, of Milton.

In the Tuesday hour fire, hundreds of persons walked 60 yards through the subway tunnel to escape heavy smoke.

It was the second subway fire in a month, and it occurred in almost the same spot as the first. In the earlier fire, one person was injured and 400 rescued. The subway car was burned out.

Minutes before the latest fire broke out, a boarding passenger had told the driver he saw sparks beneath the train.

Fire Chief George Paul said it appeared that the fire started in the braking system underneath the first car. Damage was estimated at $7,000.

The train had just left the boarding platform when fire erupted under the first car, igniting grease and oil on the undercarriage and on the tracks.

Scores of people, some unconscious, were carried from the tunnel by firefighters and MBTA employes.

Fifty persons were admitted to Boston hospitals for smoke inhalation, and the names of 14 others were placed on the danger list.

Fire Chief Paul said the intense smoke was caused by burning grease and oil.

"It was just a small bit of fire and very smokey. Smoke caused all the trouble," he said.

One passenger in the train, Diane Coughlin, 21, of the Dorchester section, remembers that people in the third card "were praying aloud".

"I prayed to God," she said.

Lou Goodman of Randolph said he boarded the train at Washington Street, one strop from the point where the fire occurred.

"I said to the driver, 'The train is sparking underneath,' but he said everything was all right," Goodman said.

He said that he clambered out of the second car and heard shouted orders to stay over to the left—away from the third, live rail.

Andrew Felock, 61, of South Boston, remembers children in his car screaming and someone shouting, "We're all going to die."

Felock, who was uninjured, was one of 400 persons rescued from the subway fire a month ago.

The fire wreaked havoc with other commuters above and below ground. Hundreds were caught on trains at other points along the MBTA's Red Line when the fire broke out and power went off. They walked to street level and were transferred to buses, an MBTA spokesman said.

Above ground, automobile and bus traffic in the downtown South Station area came to a standstill as fire apparatus and ambulances jammed the area.

George Scheurer To Canvass

George Scheurer, candidate for Selectman, will bring his campaign to the UMass campus today in his quest for votes in the Amherst town election February 20th.

The 27-year-old candidate, who is a special graduate student in Public Health, will campaign door-to-door in Central Area dormitories this evening. Scheurer's first stop will be Baker House, where he himself lived when he was an undergraduate at UMass. Scheurer was president of the dorm in 1965.

With less than two weeks remaining before the town election, Scheurer said that he intends to make "at least four more visits" to the campus—once in each of the residential areas—to gain student support for his candidacy.

Candidates Discuss Issues

Editor's Note: This is the third and final installment in a three-part series about the candidates for selectman in the February 20th Amherst town election.

By ED FOGARTY

In an interview Merle L. Howes and George Scheurer spoke on the issues of water conservation, sewage treatment and low-income housing. Howes and Scheurer are candidates for selectman in the Feb. 20 Amherst town election.

Howes expressed concern for water conservation and said that the town is presently working with the Hampshire Geological Association to study and make an inventory of underground water resources.

In regard to water conservation Scheurer said that he would want to zone water recharge areas to protect them from ruin by construction. He said that the zoning would be similar to that established for watershed areas.

Speaking on sewage treatment in Amherst, Scheurer said that presently untreated sewage is being dumped into the Connecticut River. He said that the present sewage treatment plant is inadequate to handle the demands placed upon it.

Howes said that he knows of no untreated sewage being dumped into the Connecticut River, and that the capacity of the present sewage treatment plant is adequate. He added that all sewage must go through the treatment plant and that Massachusetts state inspectors check the output of the plant for treatment.

Both candidates agreed that an additional treatment plant is needed, but disagreed on the amount of funding available for construction. Scheurer said that due to the lack of federal and state funds, "I don't know when the new plant will be built."

Howes stated that the bids were in for the construction of the new treatment plant and that, "I'm not aware of any charge in the plans of the Federal government to pay 80% to 90% of the funds for the sewage treatment plant addition." Both candidates stated that they supported low-income housing.

Howes said that as a member of the Board of Directors of Interfaith Housing, he had supported the Village Park Project on East Pleasant St. He added that, "in time low-income housing will be a valuable asset in meeting the special housing needs of people living in Amherst."

Scheurer said that he would support scattered low income housing rather than restricted areas. He said that restricting low income housing to areas creates a ghetto-like situation.

George Scheurer has lived in Amherst since 1963 and is a community services specialist in the Tuberculosis Prevention and Control Program of the Mass. Department of Public Health. He is a graduate of UMass and is presently a special graduate student in Public Health.

Scheurer was active in the McGovern campaign.

OH Third World Center Opens Amid Controversy

By BOB SCHEIER

The Third World (Black, Chicano, and Spanish-speaking) Community Center took up residence late last night in a space which had been allocated for it in Dickinson House by the House Council and several area governmental bodies.

But the move into what had been the Orchard Hill Area Library sparked much confusion and a call to the Collegian that a group of Third World students and sympathizers had occupied the library.

A referendum held in Dickinson after the earlier actions reportedly rejected the location of the Center in the house.

Members of the Third World community claimed the referendum was invalid because it had not been properly advertised, had not followed rules for such referendums, and was not worded the same as a question circulated earlier in the house.

The Academic Policy Committee will meet at 4 P. M. today in a regularly scheduled meeting.

Rhonda Bolling, a resident of Field House and a member of the Area Academic Policy Committee, had presented the original proposal for the center to the committee. She said the incident over the center was an overreaction to the idea of Third World students having a center.

Area Director Jim West called the incident a "breakdown in communications between the elements involved" in the center.

West said the Third World persons who established the center were acting on the basis of an approval of the center by the Orchard Hill Area Government Tuesday night.

The center had also been approved by the Area Academic Policy Committee, and the Dickinson House Council previously.

According to Ms. Bolling, the center would include counseling on drugs and political life, athletics, cultural communications, and the library.

At 2 o'clock this morning, students were still discussing the incident in the main lounge of Dickinson, and the center was still located in the library.

Reorganization Plan Puzzles Wood

By BILL DENSMORE

UMass President Robert Wood said last night that he's "puzzled" by the recently released reorganization plan from the office of Secretary of Education Joseph Cronin. Wood said the plan's regional concept "while attractive, seems to us somewhat artificial."

President Wood made his remarks during a twenty-minute interview simultaneously broadcast on Channel 57 television and WFCR radio. Wood was interviewed by Louis Lyons, host of Louis Lyons News and Comment, originating in Boston.

During the interview Wood:

—discussed his report to UMass Trustees recommending reduction of the projected enrollment peaks at all three campuses.

—reported on progress towards completion of the medical school campus at Worcester.

—described UMass-Boston as "a real exciting program" which he hopes will not only be a liberal arts institution but a center for learning "careers for which there has been no training at the university level." Wood also called the "non-traditional" role of the University a "major part of our next five years."

—explained that Massachusetts, having many privately endowed institutions did not insure college education for all.

"The plain fact was it did not . . . we've got to make sure that education is open to more than the rich, the well-born, and the readily testable."

The major portion of the interview concerned the Secretary of Education's reorganization plan which calls for greater regionalization and combination of existing elementary, secondary, and post-secondary educational programs. The report recommends splitting-up of the three UMass campuses under separate trustees or governing boards.

The report's reforms, if implemented, allegedly would allow reductions in the total outlay of state educational funds, and the streamlining of existing programs. "I just don't see it," Wood said last night. Under the proposed plan, now before the Legislature, there would be the same number of boards as now, as well as "confusing relationships" according to Wood. And, the UMass President pointed out, the purpose of education is to educate—"cost and savings are not our first priority."

In a related development, the Governor's office recommended Tuesday that the University's 98 million budget proposal for fiscal '74 only be cut to 89 million—a substantially smaller reduction than in previous years.

Wood said that his office has been puzzled because the problems of education don't match the solutions proposed in the Cronin report. "The responsibility for elementary and secondary education should remain with the individual cities and towns," Wood said, and the control of post-secondary education should remain at the state level. "The regional concept, while attractive, seems to us somewhat artificial," he said.

Wood suggested that the use of one board to govern the five post-secondary campuses and a "general tightening" and reorganization of the state's educational systems as two alternatives to the Cronin report.

Loyalty Oath Bill Defeated

By MARK VOGLER

BOSTON—The Massachusetts Loyalty Oath repeal bill was knocked down in its reconsideration reading before the House Wednesday by a 147-84 vote.

The discussion of the bill ended on the same note upon which it began as sharp criticism was levied by those who favored retention of the oath for state employes against the abolition bill's proponents.

Rep. Charles Doyle, D-Boston, led the floor fight against the legislation initiated by Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, and Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, by charging the House's support for the bill "of viewing patriotism in a contemptuous and condescending manner."

"There is a certain element in the Democratic Party who will not be satisfied until Jane Fonda is nominated for Governor and Joan Baez for Lt. Governor," he said.

Rep. Doyle considered the fact that 84 legislators supported the bill "reprehensible", adding, "There shouldn't have been one vote, let alone 84. It was devoid of any semblance of merit."

According to Doyle, "The loyalty oath is something that is heavily supported by the people of Massachusetts. They are proud to register their manifestation to our government."

"The only ones who would favor this bill are the effete and pseudo-intellectuals of our Commonwealth."

Earlier in the week Rep. Louis Morini, R-Northampton, said those who favored retaining the state's loyalty oath were "good Americans" and referred to those who didn't want to ascribe to the 1949 legislation as "bomb throwers".

Rep. Collins expressed discontent in view of the fact that the bill failed to gain support following Tuesday's initial reading. The bill was defeated in its first roll call by a 143-84 vote.

"It's unfortunate at this time in our state's history that those who work very hard in education are still singled out for special scrutiny in terms of their loyalty," Collins said.

Rep. Collins, who gave his first speech in the legislature, received a round of applauds from his colleagues.

He said in the future that he hoped that the legislature would do away with the oath and "stop questioning the patriotism of our own citizens and rather call upon all our citizens to begin solving the many problems of our state and country."

Britain 'Yes' On Nuclear Deterrents

LONDON A(AP) — Prime Minister Edward Heath, questioned in Parliament about his talks with President Nixon, said Tuesday that Britain and France "intend to keep" their nuclear deterrents.

He rejected criticism by Labor opponents in the House of Commons that he had "dragged up the spectre of the cold war" in his public statements in Washington last week.

Heath gave no details of the secret talks covering the future of British-American cooperation on nuclear weapons.

But other British sources said Heath still stands by his own plan for developing a British-French partnership in nuclear weapons to be held "in trust" for allied Europe.

SGA Conference Draws Few

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU

The Student Government Association Conference recently held in the Campus Center met with a disappointing turnout. But SGA President Larry Ladd and the Student Senate Communications Co-ordinator Denise Magnell agree that "the quality of the discussion made up for the quantity in attendance."

According to the invitations sent out to approximately one thousand people in various student governing units the mid-year evaluation was intended as "a series of workshops dealing with issues facing all branches of our student government. It was hoped that, through discussion, we can bring to light the common problems of campus governing bodies, and ways of solving them in the coming semester.

About thirty people showed up for the Conference, according to Miss Magnell, its organizer, "and eighty per cent of those in attendance were involved Senators."

Larry Ladd seemed more optimistic about its impact, describing it as "good for the morale. The conference stressed student concerns such as academic reform rather than totalitarian classroom games—dramatizing the classroom situation;... strategies for students to have an impact on policy, how structure perpetrates racism, sexism," he said.

Ladd also suggested that this sort of conference would be a good idea for new Senators. "Senators are overly concerned with procedures and politics. You forget why you got concerned. The conference focused on the issues."

Workshops focused on such topics as "Student Co-Ops & Student Fees and Budget Controls," "Dorm Governance," "Broadening Participation in Student Government," "Campus Judiciaries; an Overview," "Concept of Community Control," and "Controlling Our Own Education."

China Night

By ROBERTA MARTONE

China is not as far away as it seems. In fact, on Monday, February 12, a part of China will be brought to the Campus Center Auditorium.

On that day the Chinese Club, made up of Chinese students on campus, is presenting a China Night and Chinese Culture Exhibition.

I-hsiugn Tai, president of the Chinese Club, said that China Night will consist of a traditional Chinese dinner (prepared by Debbie Wong) and various Chinese entertainment.

Among the entertainment will be a stage show pantomime; Chinese Worship Dance in original costume; a solo performance on a Chinese instrument, the zither; and, a Lion Dance (usually performed during the Chinese New Year festival). Also included in the events is a lesson in Kung Fu, similar to Judo or Karate. Chinese music and movies of the New Year feast complete the entertainment.

China Night will begin at 7:00 p.m. Tickets are $2.00 and are currently on sale in the lower level of the Campus Center, or Herter 125, or the RSO office.

Jim Ku, the vice president of the Chinese Club, said the Chinese Culture Exhibition will consist of displays of Chinese paintings, ancient and modern. He said the exhibition will also display Chinese pottery, jade, stonework, and bronze.

The objects on display were borrowed from the Boston consulate.

Chinese students will also be allowed to sell their own handiworks. This exhibit will begin at 10:00 a.m. and continue until 5:00 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

I-hsiugn Tai said the purpose of these two events is to bring the Chinese religion and tradition closer to American students on campus. He hopes it will improve the communication between the Chinese and American students, and give each a better understanding of the Chinese culture.

Free Transit Service Expands February 12th

By CINDY GONET

As you enter the offices of the Student Senate Transit Service, you first see a plush room with thick rugs. Several men look up from their work to offer you help. There, behind his desk, sits Bob Godding in his blue jeans and flannel shirt.

Godding is in charge of the experimental free transportation program which has grown from the senate transit service to a three quarters of a million dollar operation.

A grant of $475,441 from the U.S. Urban Mass Transportation Administration; $157,728 in money, labor and services from UMass; and $30,000 in money and leased buses from the Student Senate is supporting the project. The transport system is an experiment to determine how many automobile commuters will leave their vehicles home if public transportation is available at no fare.

Ten new buses will be driven on Friday night from Kent, Ohio where they were manufactured, to Amherst. Off-campus routes will begin on Monday, Feb. 12. Amherst, Belchertown, South Deerfield and Sunderland will be on these routes, so a bus display for each town is set for Sunday, Feb. 11, from noon to 4 p.m.

Two buses will be at the Town Commons of Amherst, Belchertown, South Deerfield, and at Skibiski's in the center of Sunderland.

The new buses are tampeco yellow with black and red floor mats. Carpeting flanks the walls of the buses. Seats are yellow and green-blue.

About 16,000 cars are registered to park on the UMass campus, which has about 28,000 people. Buses will be available at 7-20 minute intervals on the intra-campus stops, and at 30 minute intervals on the off-campus route stops.

Holyoke Bank Held Up

By MARY SCHEIER
Associated Press Writer

HOLYOKE, Mass. (AP)—Two men wearing messenger uniforms hauled three sacks of cash containing $297,350 in small, unmarked bills out of the Holyoke National Bank Wednesday before most bank officials knew what was happening.

The two men, arriving at the bank 30 minutes before Brinks guards were to show up to transport the money, fled in a waiting car. Police said they had no idea of the men's whereabouts.

The men, one of whom was armed, held up the bank's main branch shortly before 10 a.m. and escaped in precision fashion with the money bank employes said was intended for their bank's branches and for area savings banks.

Police said the men obviously did their homework before pulling off the robbery and said there were indications two more men may have been involved—one for each of two getaway cars used.

Armand LeBlanc, a cashier at the bank, said none of the bills was higher than $20 denominations. He said none of the bills were marked. All of the stolen cash was insured, he said.

Peacekeeping Missions Meet To Clarify Truce Plans

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)—Vietnam's peacekeeping missions met on Wednesday to sharpen their plans for prisoner exchanges and get their truce watching teams into the field to bring a complete halt to the fighting.

U.S. C130 transport planes continued daily runs into Hanoi to pick up North Vietnamese and Viet Cong personnel to flesh out the Communist side of the Joint Military Commission.

Delays in getting the military commission up to its full complement have hampered the International Commission for Control and Supervision in its attempts to field a full supervisory force, supposed to

Four of the C130s flew 157 North Vietnamese and 30 Viet Cong to the military commission's headquarters at Tan Son Nhut air base in Saigon, U.S. spokesman said.

A subcommittee of the Joint Military Commission was reported at work on plans to allow the Viet Cong to join teams in the field directly without passing through Saigon, where bad blood between the Viet Cong and the South Vietnamese government has produced procedural tangles and delays.

Partly as a result, the International Commission for Control and Supervision has dispatched its teams to regional headquarters without the logistics and security guarantees they need to get into the field and police and cease-fire signed Jan. 27 in Paris.

This support is supposed to come from the military commission.

Chiefs of the four delegations to the military commission--North Vietnamese, South Vietnamese, Viet Cong and United States--met for 3-1/2 hours Wednesday in efforts to get the operation on its feet.

A subcommittee on prisoner exchanges also met for more than four hours at Tan Son Nhut air base.

Vernon Turner, a senior political adviser to the Canadian international peacekeeping team, told newsmen his group expects a first release of prisoners around Saturday. A senior U.S. planning official also said 20-40 American prisoners would get out of jungle camps along the Cambodian border Saturday. But other officials said there is no firm date.

North Vietnam has given the United States a list of 562 U.S. servicemen and 23 American civilians held in Communist captivity in North and South Vietnam and Laos. Henry A. Kissinger has said the United States expects American prisoners to be released at two-week intervals in roughly equal installments from the time the peace agreement was signed Jan. 27.

The Saigon command, meanwhile, accused the Communist side of another 121 cease-fire violations, raising the alleged toll to 1,900 since the cease-fire officially began at 8 a.m.

In Paris, representatives of the Saigon government and the Viet Cong met for the second time this week to work out details on starting substantive talks to determine the political future of South Vietnam.

Both sides said further procedural issues were resolved during the three-hour meeting. But they gave no details and announced plans to meet again Saturday.

Kissinger, President Nixon's top foreign policy aide, is to stop in the Laotian capital of Vientiane Friday to discuss prospects for bringing the Vietnam cease-fire to the rest of Indochina.

Kissinger left Washington on Wednesday for Thailand on his way to Hanoi for four days of talks with North Vietnamese leaders on postwar relations. He will visit China later on the tour.

House Forces Nixon Farm Spending

By CARL C. CRAFT
Associated Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon lost an opening round in his multibillion-dollar spending bout with Congress as the House voted Wednesday to force him to give the farmer 65 cents a day to save America's soil.

The vote was 251 to 142.

Legislation to reinstate a farm-belt legend known as REAP was passed by the House and sent to the Senate. It was the first House floor action by the new Congress in a clash with Nixon over who should set spending priorities, Congress or the President.

The vote, by which the House asserted that Nixon should restore life to a $225 million program that he killed last December, came amid Republican predictions that Nixon would use multiple vetoes to keep his budget intact, while Democrats accused the White House of moving toward one-man rule.

Prior to the final vote, the House began its battle by refusing to accept a Republican-backed compromise.

Then, a GOP-supported attempt to write what Rep. Paul Findley, R-Ill., termed "the concept of fiscal responsibility into this forced-spending bill" was turned down on a parliamentary point-of-order on grounds it was not germaine to the measure at hand.

The House promptly pressed ahead on its debate on the fate of REAP. Republican leader Gerald R. Ford of Michigan advised his colleagues that Nixon "has no choice" and must cut spending if Congress won't do it. "I have good reason to believe he will veto" the bill, he said.

The chief Democratic handler of the legislation, Rep. W. R. Poage of Texas, chairman of the Agriculture Committee, noted those repeated threats of a veto by Nixon, then yelled to his colleagues: "Let him crack his whip! Let him crack his whip-we're going to try to do what this House should do."

The House spent most of the afternoon arguing over the merits of the committee's bill to resurrect REAP from the grave in which the President had buried the program last Christmas.

The committee produced a bill to make REAP mandatory at a $225 million level for spending on various conservation projects to save the soil and fight pollution.

As a substitute, Rep. Wilmer D. Mizell, R-N.C., offered legislation to keep REAP for $140 million-the level of initial allocation announced by the administration last September. The House refused to take such a substitute, voting 217 to 176 against Mizell.

Findley then came up with an amendment that would require one of these things to happen before the legislation could be effective: Raise the national debt, hike taxes, or keep the budget in balance. This proposal died on the point of order ruling from Rep. Robert N. Giaimo, D-Conn., who was in the chair at the time.

Former Korean POW Offers Advice

BALTIMORE, Md. (AP)-How do you help the released Vietnam prisoners of war adjust when they return home? An oil delivery man, an accountant and a mechanic offer their own advice: Don't rush them.

The three have firsthand experience. Twenty years ago this summer, they were on their way home from North Korea and Chinese prison camps following the Korean armistice.

"People tried, in a way, to be too nice to me after I got home," said T. Reese Harrison.

"They gave me a T. Reese Harrison Day. It was a nice enough gesture but I just wanted to be left alone, to be able to catch up on things.

"Kids had grown up and married, people had died, lots of things had happened," he said.

Harrison, now a farmer and oil delivery man in Tilghman, Md., spent the last 28 months of the war in a Chinese prison camp near the Manchurian border.

"I was wounded at the time I was taken," Harrison said. "We tried to avoid capture, but you get to wondering whether you couldn't have tried harder," he said.

Harrison said Vietnam POWs probably have had a more difficult time than Korean War prisoners.

Charles B. Elder, a payroll accountant, spent more than two years in a prison camp on the Yalu River after his capture by Chinese troops in May 1951.

He advised returning POWs to "go to a nice quiet place. Enjoy life. Get away where you can get it all off your shoulders."

"I'd try for awhile to keep myself in good physical condition, but after awhile I'd say, 'what's the use? I'll never be going home again.'

"But then that would change and I'd begin caring again," he said.

Robert I. Banks, a Cambridge, Md., mechanic, said he was hospitalized for stomach disorders and malnutrition after his 33 month confinement in a prison camp.

"You feel almost out of place for awhile," he said.

Harrison said families should not lavish attention on the returnees nor ask too many questions for the first few months.

And, he said, avoid serving rice.

"They fed us rice coming back on the ship and I think that the whole works went over the side," said Harrison.

Explosion Hits Second Ship

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP)-A fiery explosion hit the destroyer Agerholm cruising off San Diego Wednesday, injuring three sailors, the Navy said.

The 26-year-old destroyer is sister ship of the Atlantic fleet destroyer Basilone, which was ripped by a boiler explosion Monday. In that accident, three sailors were killed and eight were hurt.

A spokesman at the Pacific Fleet Cruiser-Destroyer Force said fire, apparently from leaking engine fuel, broke out during crew-training exercises.

He said the fuel apparently leaked from a broken pipe and exploded as crewmen ignited a boiler.

The three injured sailors were not identified. They were taken to San Diego Naval Hospital for treatment of second and third degree burns.

There was no immediate estimate of damage to the 390-foot destroyer, which carries a crew of about 270 men.

In Brief...

BOSTON (AP) — Besides being difficult to find, parking in Boston's downtown area will soon be more expensive.

Starting within two months, motorists who park up to 30 minutes downtown will have to put 50 cents into the parking meter.

Traffic and Parking Commissioner William T. Noonan said the price rise is intended to get cars off the street and into parking lots and garages.

WARWICK, R.I. (AP) — A fourth postponement was granted Wednesday in the district court trial of two leaders of the Rolling Stones rock group and three companions.

The case, stemming from a fracas with a newspaper photographer and police at Green Airport last July 18, was moved to April 18.

BOSTON (AP) — A sensing device so sensitive it can spot an oil spill no larger than 50 feet in diameter is expected to be ready for service next summer on two Grumman Albatross twin-engine amphibian airplanes, the Coast Guard reports.

Lt. John LaFlamme, of Otis Air Force Base, said the sensors will operate at altitudes as high as 5,000 feet and will enable the planes to survey about 6,000 square miles of sea a day.

IRS FINALLY TAKES CASH--Jerry Lee of Sacramento watches as Internal Revenue Service officials count out $12,954.09 in cash after he paid his back taxes. Lee, short on his 1968 and 1969 employes' withholding payments and delinquent on his 1972 fourth quarter payment, arrived at the IRS office with cash mainly in $20 bills but officials insisted they wanted a cashier's check or a money order. Lee insisted the money was legal tender and they should accept the cash. He went to a local newspaper and returned to the IRS office accompanied by a reporter and a photographer. The officials relented and accepted the money saying it's unusual to accept cash payment. (AP)

House to Investigate Watergate Bugging

By CARL P. LEUBSDORF
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate voted Wednesday to create a special seven-man committee to investigate the Watergate bugging case and related charges of politcial espionage.

Its Democratic majority, however, rejected Republican efforts to broaden the panel's mandate and revise its membership so that it could look into alleged past Democratic political misdeeds as well as alleged GOP ones in the 1972 campaigns.

The Senate voted 77 to 0 to set up the committee.

Democrats agreed to give Republicans control of one-third of the committee's staff after GOP lead Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania threatened "to leave the whole thing to the majority."

Then, Scott said, the entire country could see that the probe was "a partisan political effort to extract the last bit of juice from an already squeezed lemon-and lemon it is."

The investigation stems from the bugging and break-in at the Democratic party's Watergate building offices last June.

GOP senators said the Democrats were seeking to cover up their own misdeeds by confining the probe to the 1972 election, saying, without citing specifics, that the Democrats had bugged them in the 1964 and 1968 campaigns.

But the Senate rejected, 44 to 32, a proposal to broaden the probe to cover the last three presidential elections.

On two separate tries, the Senate rejected amendments to add a third Republican to the proposed panel scheduled to have three Democrats and two Republicans. Then, the Senate agreed to a proposal to increase the size of the panel to seven members, with four Democrats and three Republicans.

Sen. Sam J. Ervin, Jr., D-N.C., is scheduled to head it.

GOP Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania told reporters shortly before the Senate met that he has "wholesale evidence of wiretapping of the Republican party" in the 1968 campaign.

And Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., said in a statement that he wanted the probe broadened to inclue Democratic alleged spying on his own 1964 presidential campaign.

Republicans argued on the floor that a bipartisan approach was necessary to assure the American people that the probe would be fair.

Strike Paralyzes N. Ireland
Gunners Hit Catholic

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Submachine-gun fire raked Roman Catholic mourners Wednesday at the funeral of three Irish Republican Army volunteers, and a general strike called by Protestant militants paralyzed Northern Ireland.

Youths also burned a Catholic church and wrecked the home of its priest, gunmen sniped at British troops and police posts and fires were set in the Belfast business district.

An 11-year-old boy was hit in the shoulder and a 45-year-old man was hit in a leg by shots fired at the funeral.

The gunmen apparently were never seen.

The three being buried were among six Catholics killed last weekend in a shootout with the army. The other victims were buried earlier Wednesday.

The strike, enforced in part through intimidation by Protestant militants, was obeyed by all but an estimated 100,000 of the province's 600,000 workers, labor sources said.

The one-day work stoppage caused electrical blackouts and disrupted public transportation, closed factories, newspapers and shops and cut into milk and bread supplies.

The strike was called to protest the detention of two Protestants after a grenade attack on a busload of Catholics last week and to demand restoration of the provincial parliament. That body was suspended when Britain imposed district rule last March.

Protestant youths in east Belfast, where the Protestant Ulster Defense Association is entrenched, stoned a police station. Another group invaded St. Anthony's church.

Tension Continues Over U.S. Dollar

LONDON (AP) — Pressure on the dollar eased slightly in Europe on Wednesday even though the dollar closed below its permitted floor in West Germany.

Money dealers throughout the continent remained nervous. They cited fears that American action to protect the dollar could touch off a new international monetary crisis and perhaps a trade war.

Parallels were being drawn with the situation just before August 1971 when President Nixon shocked his allies by suddenly letting the dollar float and by imposing import controls that risked retaliation from Europe and Japan.

The crisis was resolved in December 1971 when the dollar was devalued, the U.S. import controls were scrubbed and new international exchange rates were set up by the Smithsonian agreement.

Financial sources across Europe believe the heavy pressure on the dollar over the past 10 days now has thrown that agreement into serious question, raising a new threat of economic confrontation between the United States on one side, and Europe and Japan on the other.

Under the Smithsonian agreement the dollar is allowed to move in a narrow range, between a floor rate and a ceiling rate. If it slips below the floor rate, another devaluation is in order.

Mazda Has a Wankel - And It's a Gas

NEW YORK (AP) — A Japanese car based on a German's invention may be setting the stage for an American automotive revolution.

It's called the Mazda--introduced, by stages, during the last two years across most of the United States--and its trump card is a rotary combustion engine developed from the original built by Dr. Felix Wankel in Germany in 1957.

For the present Mazda's manufacturer, Toyo Kogyo, has no major rotary-engine rivals in America. But there are firm indications it will get some heavy competition before long.

General Motors, biggest of the auto makers, has paid several installments of a $50-million fee for the right to produce Wankel engines and has said it may begin offering them as a limited-quantity option on its 1975 model Vegas.

GM won't discuss its plans beyond that. One industry observer who has followed the Wankel's progress closely, however, predicts GM will be marketing a new Wankel-powered front wheel drive compact by 1976, producing about 600,000 units the first year.

No other major U.S. company has equaled GM's commitment so far, but Mazda counts 21 car makers worldwide now at work on Wankel development.

While many observers say there are still too many "ifs" in the picture to draw a long-range conclusion, there are some who predict that the Wankel will have essentially replaced the traditional piston engine by the early 1980s.

Even the more cautious experts acknowledge the rotary engine to be-among other things--smaller, lighter, simpler, smoother, and potentially easier and cheaper to make than the piston engine.

Production cost is a matter of immediate importance to the Wankel's future, because conversion of manufacturing facilities--"retooling"--is an expensive process. A manufacturer's decision whether to make such a massive investment is going to be influenced by his expectation of an eventual cost-saving.

Peace in Project 10

Henry Bubar, an activist in the peace movement for more than two decades, will address the Political Campaigns seminar in Project 10 tonight at 8 P.M.

Bubar, a graduate of Colby College in Maine, spent some eighteen years in the employ of the Aroostock Federation of Farmers, a farm cooperative, in Caribou, Maine. He also served as a history teacher in Maine and Massachusetts for many years, and recently retired from that profession.

Bubar has worked in numerous political campaigns. He supported Edmund Muskie for Governor of Maine in 1954. He was a volunteer worker for U.S. Senate candidate Thomas Boylston Adams in Massachusetts in 1962. He supported former Senator Eugene McCarthy's bid for the Presidency in 1968. In the 1971-1972 Presidential campaign, he served as treasurer of Northampton Citizens for McGovern.

Bubar's talk tonight will be concerned with the history of American involvement in Vietnam and the present imbalance of power between the Executive and Legislative branches of American Government.

Tonight's presentation is one in a series of appearances by local political figures in conjunction with the Project 10 seminar. Students interested in enrolling in this seminar are urged to visit the Project 10 Academic Office in Pierpont House as soon as possible.

OUTREACH Talks

By CYNTHIA NADREAU

The Center for OUTREACH Programs is sponsoring a conference of approximately 30 agencies and community programs for students who may volunteer to work and, at the same time, satisfy needs for an experience related to one's major academic field.

Some of the agencies which will be represented at the conference, to be held tomorrow afternoon in 163 Campus Center include the Northampton Nursing Home, Meadowlark Nursery, Headstart, and the Child and Family Services of Springfield.

If the kind of work you want to do is not represented at tomorrow's conference, then OUTREACH will find something for you at their tables set up in 163 CC, or students may go directly to the OUTREACH office in 318 Arnold House. Their phone number is 545-2021.

OUTREACH also provides full time internships, as well as volunteer or paid service positions. They will try to provide a faculty sponsor, either in your major department or in some other area (such as fulfilling elective requirements).

OUTREACH is an excellent opportunity for students to further investigate the career that their major is leading into.

The services of OUTREACH provide information on off-campus service projects, and assist students individually or in groups, in helping them establish their own student-run volunteer programs.

People in the community are becoming increasingly aware that when they need help, OUTREACH Volunteers come through. OUTREACH is especially anxious to work with agencies, groups, and individuals who cannot get help anywhere else. Great emphasis is placed on service to the lower income groups.

In the past years, college volunteerism meant throwing a Christmas party for orphans once a year, or taking a group of kids to the zoo. Things have changed! Being a college volunteer now means establishing long-term relationships and making valuable commitments with people.

Typical OUTREACH programs include work with miners in Appalachia, migrants in Illinois and New Jersey, Native Americans in California and Oregon, school lunch programs in Washington, D.C., and other programs for the aging, prisons, the women's movement, and political action.

Graduate Admissions New Office Hours

Due to the increased number of applications being processed for the fall semester staff limitations, and the extra burden imposed by a quota system, the Graduate School has found it necessary to close the Graduate Admissions Office one day a week. Effective February 9, the Graduate Admissions Office will be closed for business on all Fridays through April 13. Telephone inquiries and requests for admissions materials will be handled on those days by the receptionist in the second floor lobby of the Graduate Research Center.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and Miss Helen Curtis, retiring after 28 years as Dean of Women.

Miss Helen Curtis, first person to hold the office of Dean of Women at UMass, has retired after a career of 28 years.

Named to the newly-created post in September of 1945, Miss Curtis worked for increased admission and financial aid for women and for more academic and career opportunities for women. She developed a counseling program in women's dormitories, and trained a large staff of student house counselors and heads of residence.

In 1957 she helped Dr. William Field, then director of guidance, develop the Freshman Summer Orientation Program. After a reorganization in 1968, Dean Curtis changed her emphasis to counseling women commuters, including older women in degree programs.

She served as adviser to honor societies, Motar Board and Alpha Lambda Delta and other women's organizations, and was a member of the Faculty Senate, the University Health Council and the Committee on the Status of Women. During her years at the University she chaired numerous committees, initiated the University Weekly Calendar and, with Amherst College, the Four-College Calendar.

Dean Curtis has been an active member and was former State Division President of the American Association of University Women. She also was active in the National Association of Women Deans and Counselors, serving a term as president of the Massachusetts Association.

She received a B.A. degree, with a sociology major, from the University of Northern Iowa, and a Master of Arts degree in student personnel administration from Columbia University. She also studied at the University of London.

For several years she served as Y.W.C.A. Teen-Age Program and Summer Camp Director. After graduate study she was appointed director of students at the New Jersey College for Women (now Douglass) of Rutgers University.

She has left for a tour of Africa and the Far East with two friends. She will return next summer and continue to make her home in Amherst.

Take A Bus

Starting Monday, no-fare bus service will be provided on intra-campus and off-campus routes for all members of the UMass community. This "research and demonstration project" is financed by a grant from the U.S. Urban Mass Transit Administration (UMTA) and from funds appropriated by UMass and the Student Senate.

Present local transportation, which consists of three buses that run only on-campus routes, will be significantly expanded by the addition of ten transit coaches. Off-campus routes will provide service to the high-density housing areas in the towns of Amherst, Belchertown, South Deerfield, and Sunderland. Buses will run weekdays, 7 a.m.-7 p.m.

This program is an experiment designed to cut down on auto traffic and promote commuting by bus. In addition to easing traffic congestion in a community which constantly generates automobiles, the buses will eventually be fueled with propane, resulting in less noise and air pollution than conventional diesel fuels, which are now being used. There are plans for installing additional pollution-reduction devices on the buses this summer.

The efforts that have gone behind developing such a commendable project are to be lauded. But the true success of the project can be measured only by the response of the UMass community. Conceivably, Amherst could be a model for the whole nation.

Do your part. Take a bus.

High Cost Of Bombing

WASHINGTON–If all goes well with the peace accords, it will just be a matter of time before the United States sends a team of damage experts to Hanoi to estimate what it will cost to rebuild North Vietnam. The price tag last year was $2.5 billion, but this was before the carpet bombing of Hanoi and Haiphong at Christmas.

I can see the U.S. team of experts arriving at the Hanoi airport and being greeted by Ho Gap, the North Vietnamese Minister for Reconstruction.

The minister says, "Welcome to our humble country. Forgive us for the condition of our airport which unfortunately was destroyed by your excellent and talented Air Force."

"We did all this?" one of the damage experts asks.

"Yes, but please do not apologize. We know the airport you will build us will more than make up for it. What we think we'd like is something on the order of Dulles near Washington, D.C. Our engineers estimate that with Communist labor, it should not cost more than $40 million, give or take $10 million, for what I believe you people refer to as 'overruns.'"

"Can't we talk about this later?" one of the U.S. damage experts asks. "We'd like to go to our hotel and get cleaned up."

"Of course," the minister replies, "forgive me for thoughlessness. Please get in the trucks and we will take you there."

"Trucks?"

"Alas," the minister says, "our private automobiles were all destroyed in your protective-reaction strikes of Dec. 15. But we have plans to build a new automobile factory to produce the 4-door 'Ho Chi Minh' with a Wankel engine. We think we can undersell the Japanese in America by $500 a car. Here, you can study the plans in your spare time."

The U.S. Damage Control team climbs on board the trucks.

"How far is it into town?" one of the Americans asks.

"Ordinarily, 20 minutes. But, unfortunately, the Bridge of Peace and Conciliation Heartbreak was hit by a 'smart bomb' from one of your B-52s and, therefore, it will take two hours," the minister says.

"I suppose you want us to pay for the bridge, too," a damage control expert says.

"We thought you might build us a tunnel instead. Something like the Lincoln or Holland tunnels, which we understand work quite well."

"Was that the only bridge destroyed?"

"Oh, dear, I wish it was! According to your own Air Force estimates, you destroyed 3,457 bridges, all of which were listed as military targets."

"But you people don't have that many bridges in all of North Vietnam!"

"That's what we kept telling the U.S. Air Force. But they kept destroying them anyway."

The truck passed a building with only the walls standing.

"What was that?" one of the damage experts asks.

"That was the Anti-Imperialist Shirt and Textile Factory. Your intelligence people kept referring to it as an ammunition dump."

"What's that going to cost us?" one of the Americans asks.

"Well," says the minister, "we thought as long as we have to rebuild the factory, we'd go in for automation and work in synthetic fibers. We believe that with American help we could be producing Arrow-type shirts for the United States in less than three years. I think we put you down for $80 million for a new plant."

"Damn," says one of the damage experts, "we haven't even gotten to the hotel yet and with the bridges they're up to $2 billion."

Finally the truck pulls up in front of the ruins of a dilapidated building with boarded-up windows and sides held up by scaffolding.

"Here we are, gentlemen," the minister says.

"This is the hotel?" one of the damage men asks incredulously.

"This is it," the minister says. "It was hit by a rocket on Christmas Day. As soon as you wash up in the river over there, we'd like to discuss with you our fantastic plans for a new super Kissinger Hilton."

Under The Bigtop

It has been several months since I resigned from the UMass Student Senate, Amherst's own Barnum and Bailey sideshow. After a full year of wasted Wednesdays, I used my disgust over a Senate reapportionment decision as a pretext to bail out of there. It was the most intelligent decision I ever made.

In writing, I find it extremely difficult to convey to the reader an accurate impression of those Wednesday night Circuses. In order to understand, in case you've never been down there under the big top, you've got to see it for yourself. But this I am not recommending. Watching Ozzie and Harriet re-runs on the tube would be a much more worthwhile expenditure of energy.

But they're spending our money, you say...hundreds of THOUSANDS of our dollars. Sure they are, but don't waste your time fretting about it. I spent an entire year of fretting, about my money and about yours. Fretting in vain. While I entered the Senate with high hopes of restoring some degree of responsibility in the handling of student money, I was only one vote. The majority of my fellow senators had concerns other than responsible student action. You might as well accustom yourself to an annual fork-over of 35 or so dollars to the Senate, to be spent as they see fit. Like it or lump it.

After my resignation, or escape, I received a Boy Scout letter from Senate Speaker John Hogan, who presided as the Ringmaster for the Chattering Chimps during my term as Senator. John, in very formal fashion, appealed to me to retract my decision to resign. If I remember correctly, he urged me to disregard the petty politics and go on with the work I had undertaken as Senator from Field House. Well, last week, John succumbed to the overwhelming pettiness, the all-pervading boredom, the schoolboy shenanigans, and the monumental insignificance of the Student Senate. It took me only a few months in the Senate in order to make that discovery. Poor John blew almost four years. It's difficult to live with yourself after wasting all that time. Time is just too precious to squander.

John's resignation last week left the Senate in what is traditionally the most ludicrous of situations: the "power vacuum". Now the students at UMass are asked to sit tight and witness the scramble of the opportunities, the little power seekers who are the mainstay of the Senate. For most student senators, elevation into a "prestige" position is a goal of a substantial portion of his or her effort, a prime motivator. It looks good on the records for graduate school, so they tell me. Yes, the smoke-filled rooms are there, all right, but the smoke may smell a little different.

I went down to the Senate proceedings last night, in order to check up on the cast of characters in the big scramble for the podium in the front of the Senate Chambers. It should be remarked that the position of Speaker of the Senate inevitably gets in front of the Collegian cameras to a far greater degree than any other position in the Senate. Last year, the pages of the Collegian were graced many times with various poses of John Hogan lighting a pipefull of Middleton's Cherry Blend, or some such concoction. When I asked about the candidates, I was informed that the election for speaker may not occur this week, for lack of adequate attendance. Ho-hum.

Editorial Points

A recent special investigation by reporters of the Washington Post showed that hospital costs have shot up 110% in the last six years. We know a few freaks on campus who have shot up quite a bit themselves in the last six years.

Even in Orchard Hill, where the dorms are only seven stories high, you have to wait a hell of a long time to catch an elevator. So here's a suggestion which should cut the waiting time in half. They should install two types of elevators in every building on campus—one which only goes up, and one which only goes down.

That last bit of logic is commonly known as efficiency—UMass style.

Louis Morini says that those who favor retaining the state's loyalty oath are "good Americans", and those who don't favor retaining it are "bomb throwers". We wonder which category that puts Richard Nixon in. Tell us, Dick, are you loyal to good ol' Massachusetts?

Not only that, but how about the Faculty Senate, who voted 55-8 to repeal the Loyalty Oath? Maybe they should be investigated. Hunh, Louis?

There's an even better old saying: girl who lay cards on table, end up playing old maid.

Letters To The Editor

Influence Your Future

To The Editor:

The next few months may prove to be one of the truly critical periods in our national history as debate turns to action in defining national goals and priorities. Will our first priority be to enhance corporate wealth or to assure basic human rights and well-being? Are we to permit a President to set his will above that of our elected representatives, or shall we insist that Congress assert its prerogatives for decision-making in areas which are appropriately its concern.

Now is the time for each of us to let our Senators and Representatives in Congress know unequivocally how we feel about these and other matters of critical national concern–regardless of which side of the issues we support. Above all, we must not permit our national leaders to make decisions in a vacuum, insulated from our advice.

Many will say that a letter means nothing, but I believe firmly any political leader will admit the influence that correspondence from constituents has upon voting records. I am personally persuaded that if every student would write once a week to his/her Representative or one of our Senators the impact could be tremendous. The future of the country belongs largely to new or younger voters. Now is the time to try to influence that future.

Question Of Priorities

To The Editor:

In answer to R. Colton's letter in the Collegian–why do you believe that it is the responsibility and obligation (moral, civil, or otherwise) for all drivers to pick up hitchhikers? I've hitched and driven around Amherst and Northampton and generally pick up people, but have never believed it to be more than my own personal moral obligation to do so.

There are many people hitching who can't afford to have a car, and some who are concerned about the environment and thus won't buy one. How many hitchers are there who have spent last summer in Europe or have an expensive stereo set with the money that could (not necessarily should) have been spent on an auto?

It's all a question of personal priorities–there are some of us whose priorities are oriented towards owning a car (and using it as they see fit). This recognizes that the attitude is as much result of American advertising as travelling abroad or purchasing a stereo.

Most rides I've given have been enjoyable. How many of those getting rides are as guilty of failing to perform the most elemental courtesies as the drivers R. Colton speaks of–I've had my share of those who didn't even thank me.

If we all think of others the world will be better. We shouldn't go through life, either at the University or in real world expecting that the world owes us everything we want.

Malice Toward None, Charity For All

To President Nixon:

For all the people who love and respect the United States, the Vietnam War has been a painful and divisive experience, second only in our history to the Civil War. For some, the war was viewed as a test of our courage, strength, and commitment as a nation. For others, who equally love and respect our country, the war was viewed as an immoral and unnecessary exercise of power based upon mistaken and misdirected policies. Rather than participate in an exercise they could not in conscience condone, some of those who disagreed with the war policy of our government choose either to go to prison or to leave the country. To term their actions cowardly or unpatriotic is to be self-righteously facile. By their actions, they refused assent to the simplistic and dangerous maxim "my country, right or wrong." As a conviction of conscience, their subsequent actions ought not to be construed as necessarily expressive of a scornful or unpatriotic attitude toward our country. Who is to judge the sincerity of another man's conscience? God and history alone will be the final judges of who was right and who was wrong.

Now that the war is ended–at least for our country–and we prepare to welcome home those who took up arms because they were convinced the cause was right, we should likewise prepare to welcome home those who would not take up arms because they were equally convinced the cause was wrong. Mr. President, let our attitude toward those who disagreed and who acted on their convictions be that expressed by President Lincoln, who said in his second inaugural address as the Civil War was coming to an end, "With malice toward none, with charity for all, let us bind the nation's wounds."

At your recent press conference, you too spoke of "healing" America, but your expressed position on amnesty seemed to violate the generous spirit of Lincoln's eloquent words. I would recall to you, Mr. President, that earlier you had said that you would tend to be generous in granting amnesty, but only after the war was ended and our POWs returned home. At long last that time is coming and so too is the time for "malice toward none" and "charity for all." If we can now extend a generous hand to help rebuild North Vietnam as an "investment in peace," we should also be able to extend a generous hand to those Americans who in conscience opposed the war as an investment in healing and reconciling a war-wearied America. Mr. President, amnesty, even if conditional, would be not only a generous, but also a healing act.

Fred L. Milne

Representation And Responsibility

To The Editor:

"Representation" is a tough word to play with, like the kid on your block who used to not only take his ball and go home when he fell behind, but evict you from his daddy's baseball field as well. So why argue with the kid? If he can't play it like it is, it's not baseball. The idea is to stay up as long as possible at the plate, so you made a couple of solid hits and then paused to rub your hands in the ol' dirt. Stepping back to the box, you're startled by the sour expressions of your buddy "Representation," who is standing opposite the plate now. "Get out of the yard," he says, "you ungrateful rat." Letting him win all the time would be unfair not only to yourself, but to the entire sport of baseball. If you win, it's only for now, anyway. The idea is to enjoy batting, wishing you could bat forever.

Of course we can't include everyone's claims of what's best for the country in Congressional Decrees. But we've a responsibility to try. We've got to be wherever we are now and in Washington at the same time. Those officials are our agents. Let them have their way all of the time and they think that the doctrine is IT. The President is our agent, even though we didn't elect him. We're always changing, aren't we? Impressions change, and consequently so do ideas and convictions. I think everybody has inside of them a sense of truth that can't be framed by ye learned essayist, because no sooner are the opening lines written than the hearts of people have trembled further into the night.

The people who left the country during the sixties must certainly have had more texture than a Nixonian label would imply. Being from this side of the fence, I don't think we can do without the other. No sense in refusing anyone a chance to express themselves.

Thaddeus Fitzpatrick

Jazz Festival To Be In NYC

NEW YORK (AP)-The 20th Newport Jazz Festival, like the 19th, will be in New York, but nearly twice as big, producer George Wein announced Tuesday.

Wein said that the festival was expanding to more than 50 events. Like last year, there will be concerts in Carnegie Hall and Philharmonic Hall, midnight jam sessions at Radio City Music Hall, giant concerts as Shea Stadium and a dance, with swing bands. It will be spread over 10 days compared with last year's nine, June 29-July 8.

But there also will be a concert at the Nassau Coliseum on Long Island, five concerts at the Apollo Theater in Harlem, outdoor afternoon concerts at the Wollman Amphitheater in Central Park and a concert for children. One of last year's most popular events, three July 4 boat rides on the Hudson River with New Orleans jazz bands aboard, will be expanded to two days.

Nearly 15 musicians are on the list expected to perform.

The New York Musicians Organization, which last year berated the Newport Jazz Festival for not hiring enough black, relatively unknown and avant-garde players, this year is joining the festival for six days of concerts in Alice Tully Hall.

Writer James Baldwin was present to talk about "The Hallelujah Chorus," which he will write about the life and times of Ray Charles and which Charles will perform.

Baldwin said he had long wanted to do a study of blues and jazz and their "passion and pain and joy and beauty" and that he wanted to show that the "rejected, murdered, burned, lynched, still-menaced can still say hallelujah."

Eric Larrabee, executive director of the New York State Council on the Arts, pledged support and said that the council is spending $150,000 on jazz this year.

Future Flu Vaccine

PARIS (AP)-French doctors have developed a vaccine that can protect against strains of influenza virus that have not yet appeared, the Pasteur Institute announced Tuesday.

Prof. Claude Hannoun, head of the institute's ecology unit, told a news conference the vaccine is effective against strains of flu virus that could appear between now and 1978.

Until now, he said, flu vaccine was always one strain behind whatever type of virus was causing an epidemic. Vaccines for the current "London" flu appeared only after the epidemic had spread.

This is What Happens

at a free Evelyn Wood speed reading lesson

0:00 We start by telling you a few of our secrets. We show you how simple, yet ingenious, the Evelyn Wood course is.

0:12 You now suspect that Senator Proxmire wasn't crazy when he said, ". . . This was one of the most useful educational experiences I've ever had. It certainly compares with the experiences I've had at Yale and Harvard."

0:15 We reveal what only reading teachers know: why your personality is to blame for the 3 bad reading habits you have. And, why a slow reader comprehends less than a fast reader. And, why it's harder to concentrate when you read slowly.

0:20 We show you how to improve your reading by 4.7 times . . . that means speed with comprehension.

0:30 We want you to have more than a peek at the Evelyn Wood method, so we take the time to teach you STEP 1, the first technique in the course. No charge.

0:35 You discover that you've increased your speed on the spot. You wonder how fast you could read if you took the whole course. They promise you a 3-time improvement or you get your money back.

0:45 Last minute questions are answered, no punches are pulled!

0:60 That's it. It only took an hour. You learned to read a little faster and you liked it. Now, you know why 500,000 people have taken the course.

England Exchange Students Recruited

The UMass academic year student exchange program with the University of Keele in North Staffordshire, England is again recruiting applicants from UMass to go to Keele. Each of the two universities will send three undergraduates to the other for the academic year 1973-74. Keele is one of England's most innovative universities. Founded in 1949, it aims at encouraging interdisciplinary studies and at breaking down some of the traditional divisions between different branches of study.

Keele operates on the basis of close contact between students and faculty. This contact is facilitated by the tutorial system and by the fact that Keele is a residential university for both students and faculty.

Keele is located about two hours, by train, northwest of London and 15 minutes from the industrial center of Stoke-on-Trent. Yet the setting is a rural one; the town of Keele is very small, and the university itself has only about 2,000 students, with slightly more men than women.

Among the disciplines taught at Keele are English, History, American Studies, Philosophy, Economics, Government, Geography, Sociology, and most of the sciences. This year one exchange student, a pre-med major in Zoology, took courses in biology, chemistry, physics, and zoology. Another UMass student at Keele majoring in human development, took courses in Sociology, Applied Sociology and social psychology and was able to compare American and British social work systems through field study.

To apply for the program students must have a cumulative average of 3.0. UMass undergraduates studying at Keele receive full academic credit for their work.

The cost of a year at Keele is about the same as a year at UMass, excluding international air fare (about $200). Students interested in applying should contact Mrs. Barbara B. Burn, International Programs Office, 239 Whitmore. The deadline for applying is Feb. 23, 1973.

Ed Workshops Begin Sunday

The Young Workers' Liberation League extends an open invitation to come and participate in the series of educational workshops beginning this Sunday. The discussion will deal with the present American situation from a Marxist-Leninist perspective. The workshops will be held in the University Campus Center, Rms 804-808, every other Sunday evening from 6:30-9:30 p.m. starting with this Sunday night. The topic of the first educational is The Working Class: its makeup and historical situation. We invite all young workers and students to set aside time on Sunday evenings for these important meetings

Draft Counselors Corner

Don't Sit Back Yet

By GILBERT J. SALK

The important news, as you have probably all heard by now, is that the government has announced that it will no longer induct men into the armed forces.

CAUTION: This is a policy statement, not a law. And like most policy statements, it can be reversed at any time.

The Selective Service System is still operating, and will continue to do so indefinitely. It affects you in the following ways: You are still required to register within 30 days of your 18th birthday. (This can be done in the Placement Office in Whitmore, or at any draft board.) Lottery numbers for those born in 1954 will still be drawn this month. Classifications will continue to be issued, and appeals heard. And those with low numbers (which probably means those with numbers below 76) will still be called for physicals.

There's the distinct danger that people will be lulled into a false sense of security by the so-called end of the draft, and fail to appeal undesirable classifications or prepare adequately for physical exams.

You should realize that the SS intends to maintain a large number of registrants who are ready to be ordered for induction at a moments' notice if the "need" arises.

If you have a low lottery number, have passed your physical, and receive a 1-A which you do not appeal, you will be in that "ready" group. Don't let it happen.

Find out what options are available to you. Check with a draft counselor to determine the deferments for which you might qualify, and how to get them. Review your medical history to see if you have a possible 4-F claim--and don't assume that you know whether you do or don't--some silly things can lead to a deferment. Consider conscientious objection. What will Nixon think if CO cases continue to be made even with the war and the draft supposedly over? It might make some people think twice before plopping us into another (or the same) Vietnam.

But above all, don't be complacent. If you get a 1-A in the mail, and you don't want to be in the army, appeal it! Within 15 days of the date the card is mailed to you, write your board and tell them that you are not 1-A and you want to appeal the classification, and that you want them to schedule you for a personal appearance. Sign your name and add your SSS number. Keep a copy for your records, and send the letter by certified mail, return receipt requested, to your board. The address is on your draft card. When the receipt comes back, staple it to your copy and save it. (You should do this with Everything you do with your board. It provides a legal record of all your transactions.) See a draft counselor as soon as possible.

If you can, start preparing a case for a 4-F at the earliest possible date, but in any event see a draft counselor at once when you get an order for a physical.

And if you ever get anything from your board which you don't understand, consult a draft counselor immediately. SSS deadlines are very restrictive, and you can jeopardize your rights if you fail to meet them. A counselor can help you protect and exercise them.

Free Draft counseling is available from Draft Counseling Services in 420 SU from 9-4 M-F. Appointments are not needed. DCS is also offering a 2-credit draft counselor training course this semester, starting next week. Register at the office before Friday.

Meditation Directs Actions

By ERIC SCHWARTZ

While this phrase is a motto of this country, it is certainly also one that is universal. All living things naturally seek happiness, for why else would they always be running away from suffering? The nature of life is to eveolve into a more and more fulfilled state. This positive progressive direction is evident in nature, from the smallest seed to the largest galaxies of the universe.

If this is the case, one might rightly ask, "Why doesn't the university produce a society of free and happy individuals, living lives that are full in every aspect?" Ideally, the educational institutions are the means through which each individual can develop his full potential in order to make the ideals of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness a living reality.

What our educational system needs to be better suited to its job of aiding man to live and pursue happiness in a rational manner is a science which allows the student to grasp that which is at the center of all fields of knowledge. Man needs to find the "home of all knowledge". If we think of the world as a wheel, and each branch of knowledge as a spoke, what we need to do is to get to the hub of the wheel, from which we have access to all the spokes, and thus to the whole wheel of life. If we can get to the reservoir of knowledge, then all the water, all the knowledge, no matter what stream it may be in, will be available to us. The Science of Creative Intelligence is a science with this as its goal. The rewards of such a search are infinite. They are life lived at 200% value, with fulfillment of both the individual, spiritual, and societal economic goals. This is because once we can see the entire picture of life, we can then consider a certain aspect without losing sight of how it is tied in with all the other aspects. This automatically makes one act more effectively on all levels.

Through the Science of Creative Intelligence and the practice of Transcendental Meditation, the individual becomes more effective in all action. Through meditation he achieves deep rest. Then, since rest is the basis of activity (as in the process of walking the foot must rest before it takes another step forward), one becomes more dynamic in everything he does. The Science of Creative Intelligence helps him to direct his new found dynamism in the directions that are most life-supporting for himself and society.

On Thursday, February 8th, at 8:00 P.M., Fred Ponaman, New England co-ordinator of the Students' International Meditation Society, will elaborate on this point and further explain the practical and theoretical aspects of Transcendental Meditation. The meeting will be held at the Campus Center Auditorium.

An exhibition of Science of Creative Intelligence as also going on in Room 177 of the Campus Center.

Pre-Dissertation Training Programs Available

The Council for European Studies, headquartered at the University of Pittsburgh, has announced the availability of pre-dissertation training programs. These are available to students who have completed at least one year of graduate study in a U.S. university in the social sciences and related disciplines by June 1973, and who have demonstrated interest in contemporary Western European society and politics. Awards up to $1,000 are made for the summer or the equivalent period. Minimum of one year in intensive training in relevant languages is required. The purpose is to enable students to make final plans for their dissertations and to sharpen skills necessary to their research. Students with approved dissertation proposals embarking on research are not eligible. Grants also are available from the German Exchange Service for summer German language study at a Goethe Institute. For details consult Dr. G. Braunthal, Department of Political Science, Thompson Tower, Room 310. Application deadlines are March 1.

Canada Recognizes North Vietnam

OTTAWA (AP)-Canada has formally recognized North Vietnam, Foreign Secretary Mitchell Sharp announced today.

Sharp told the House of Commons the move means that Canada now accords equal diplomatic status to the governments of North and South Vietnam.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Cancer women are more than cooks. They possess quiet sex appeal, are ambitious and know how to achieve basic goals. Cancer men make fine executives, can transform apparent losses into solid gains. Many Cancer persons, men and women, will be making adjustments at home in 1973 and some will be changing residence, especially in September.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Sudden changes occur in areas associated with marriage, partnership and career. Nothing is apt to remain the same. You tear down only to rebuild. You agree only to disagree. You fight only to make peace.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Good news from afar relieves local tension. You will find something to celebrate. Gemini, Virgo individuals play key roles. What was confined, restricted, obscured will see light of day. You could be ultimate beneficiary.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Keep tight rein on tendency to be extravagant. Friends may expect more than they actually deserve. Tendency now is to spend more than is required. Good feeling would only be temporary, followed by remorse.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Avoid self-deception. Obtain valid hint from Gemini message. Pisces individual could play important role. Refuse to be sidetracked from major objective. Price of property fluctuates. Hold on for profitable sale, purchase.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 23): Long range view now is necessary. Rise above petty disagreements, superficial lures. Don't reject responsibility. Older individual has your best interests at heart. Heed voice of experience. Running away would be destructive.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Steer clear of family quarrels. Unusual relationship is put to test. Better now to finish rather than to initiate projects. Broaden horizons. Strive to rid of obstacle which blocks distribution, communication.

Ski Success-Topic At Varsity M

By STEVE CROWE

"Our success is based on alot of hard work," stated a very relaxed Ski Coach, Bill MacConnell at yesterday's Varsity M.Luncheon. Three and a half weeks of training at Haystack over the intersession catapulted the local racers way ahead of their competition. They are now 36-0, taking first place in all four of their meets this season.

Coach MacConnell, presenting his team's report in a Johnny Carson monologue fashion, came up with quite a few gems.

He pointed out that alot of people ask, "Why, if you're so good in your competition, don't you get into the tough, top-notch competition?" Coach MacConnell answers them, "There isn't any." UMass competes in only one of the two types of ski competition, Alpine. "If we were to compete in both Alpine and Nordic, (includes cross-country and jumping), we would need two coaches. As it is, all we have here is one half-assed weekend coach . . . me."

One thing that the UMass skiers use to "psyche out" their opponents is the old "Chinese Fire Drill" trick. They don't have a bus or a van (Like Northeastern's Mercedes bus); they have Coach MacConnell's Ford wagon. "Nine skiers pile into the wagon with 80 pounds of calcium chloride; nine pairs of skis and gym bags are packed onto the rack on top.When we arrive at a meet and began to flow out of the wagon, like a film animation of a flower opening up, we look up at the Northeastern skiers in their bus and they look down at us and they know we're going to beat their ass."

Co-captains Kurt Syer and Dick McWade also spoke of the success of the ski team this year and both had nothing but praise for their new coach.

"Whether he calls himself a weekend, half-assed coach or what," said Syer, (who skis in the No. 1 slot), "Coach MacConnell has made the team what it is today." (At this point, the coach interjected, "Kurt has just established the fact that he will be skiing first in our next meet.")

McWade gave two theories of his own for the team's fast start. "He saw the coaching of MacConnell, especially in his training camp, as one of the major reasons. This gave the UMass skiers twice as much time on snow as most of their opponents. Another reason, he pointed out, is the abundance of talent on the team. The team has alot of depth, having men skiing in the 80th and 90th slots finishing in the top 20."

In spite of the team's recent success, the skiers are still looking forward to some improvement . . . in the skiing conditions. As in the cases of skiers all over New England, the UMass team is praying for snow.

Recent grappling action in the wrestlers only setback of the season, against Springfield. The 10th ranked grapplers entered the top ten in the East, for the first time in the school's history last week. It was also the first time any New England school had ever entered into the top Eastern Ten. (Photo by Peter Manera)

JV Women Gymnasts Beaten By Springfield

By MDC STAFF

Before the largest crowd ever to witness a UMass women's JV gymnastics meet, the team just couldn't get themselves together. The constant loss of control, the inability to present completed routines, and the excessive nervousness all contributed to the lopsided victory by the Springfield JV squad. The final score was UMass 82.75 and Springfield College 91.05 points.

There were very few bright spots and in general the team was weak on all events. In the vaulting event Marion Kulick led all UMass scorers and finished second overall. Gail McCarthy, vaulting for the first time, was our second highest scorer and finished fourth. The event was won by Linda Henry of Springfield with a handspring vault.

On the uneven bars UMass really fell down in their scoring. All but Gail Hannan had falls from the bars, and Springfield's tough competitors capitalized on these mistakes. Ms. Hannan did a good routine and showed that she is a real competitor. The event was won by Sue MacLeod of Springfield, Gail finished third. The balance beam held many surprises for UMass as each performer took their falls and bobbled through the longest 90 seconds on record. In spite of their errors Gail McCarthy, Marion Kulick, Alicia Goode, Heidi Armstrong, Candy Gross, and Gail Hannan did show some good difficulties and dance parts. Again it was Hannan who kept the best composure and she finished fifth. Sue MacLeod won the beam event with a very good performance.

The final event was floor exercise and it was here that UMass finally recaptured some respect. Gail McCarthy, Heidi Armstrong, and Marion Kulick gave their best performance to date. Candy Gross and Gail Hannan looked pretty sharp as they tumbled well and danced lively to their music. The main problem for UMass on this event was that Springfield rose to the occasion and Sue Rassmussan and Sue MacLeod tied for the number one spot. Gail Hannan, injuring her knee during the beginning of the routine, finished strongly and got third place.

Everyone affiliated with the women's gymnastics program knows that this was a freak occurrence and will be corrected immediately. This surely isn't a sign of things to come for the remainder of this season. For those of you wondering, the varsity takes on the defending National champions (Springfield College) here on March 3. This weekend the varsity travels to State College, Pa. to take on Penn St. and a powerful Clarion team. This meet will be a test of the gymnasts on this season's nationally ranked team.

Lettis, Lawson Shine In Track Meet

By MDC STAFF

Two UMass women won both the shortest and longest races in Saturday's region #1 women's indoor track championship held in Burlington, Vermont this past Saturday.

Kathy Lawson, a Sophomore phys-ed major, won the 60 yard dash in 6.2 seconds and the 220 yd. run in 25.9. She failed, however, to make the National championship qualifying standard of 25.3 for the 220. She has already qualified for the 60 yards in an earlier meet.

Charlotte Lettis, a Junior theater major, also missed qualifying in the one mile run. She placed second in 5:06 missing qualification by only one second.

Lettis also won the 2 mile event in 11:21 which was held for the first time in the women's region #1 championships. There is no two mile run for women in the Nationals.

Kathy Lawson competes for the Liberty Athletic Club located in the Boston Area while Charlotte Lettis runs for the Local Sugarloaf Mt. Athletic Club.

The National championships will be held February 23 at the new Madison Square Garden in New York City.

Women's B-Ball Teams Win Two At NU

On Monday, the varsity and J.V. Women's basketball teams travelled to Northeastern and swept a pair of games from the Huskies.

The Varsity beat Northeastern 43-36 in a game which saw 51 fouls called. Between walks to the foul line, UMass managed to take a 24-18 halftime lead.

The second half found most of the starters on both teams getting into foul trouble early, thereby changing the game. UMass played their usual strong defense, forcing Northeastern to shoot from the outside. Jen Edminster was high scorer with 15 pts. and Pat Glispen had 12 points.

The JV's pulled out a close one 42-40 over Northeastern. Northeastern took a 14-8 first quarter lead on the outside shooting of Sauer. UMass battled and took a 21-20 lead with Ann Foley and Micky Locke scoring for the Minutemen. The third quarter saw the lead see saw back and forth with it being tied at the end of the period 33 all. The Minutemen scored the first two points in the fourth quarter and managed to stay ahead for the entire eight minutes, the winning margin being two points.

Ann Foley played an outstanding game scoring 19 points and intercepting many passes. Micky Locke and Mary Dowling both helped in the scoring department with 8 and 6 points respectively.

This brings both teams' record to 3-1 with a big game at Springfield today at 6:30. UMass has lost the services of Beth Fay, co-captain, for at least one game with a sprained ankle. Mary Dowling, starting center on the J.V. team is a questionable starter for the Springfield game due to a sprained ankle.

UMass Whips BC, 76-52

Springfield – "I'll tell you," shouted Jack Leaman, "this game wasn't as important as the up and coming one with UConn, but heck, this was Boston College. Our students want it, our players want it, UMass wants it."

And Boston College will not forget how they got it last night at the Springfield Civic Center as the UMass basketball team inflicted the Heights with its second black eye of this year via a 76-52 pasting of the Eagles.

Thus, Dick MacPherson and company and Jack Leaman and his crew have left the hills of Newton with more than idle conversation for the next few months.

In the locker room immediately after the game, Leaman said to his cagers, "This is a great win, we're on our way now. We've proven that we can win every game from here on in."

With their record at 11-6, and the assurance from the P.A. that UConn, which had previously been undefeated in the Yankee Conference (5-0), had lost to Boston University, 107-99, Leaman's comments are super food for thought.

The architects of last night's destruction were many. It was Al Skinner wheeling and dealing at the taunting Boston School Boy Greats for 17 points and 11 rebounds. It was Bill Endicott bombing from the outside with reckless abandon for 15 points while playing all but four minutes of the game.

It was Tom Austin (20 points, 8 rebs), Charlie Peters (8 rebs) and John Murphy dominating the backboards, 48-34 over the bigger and supposedly better (meaning class A vs. class C and D) playground wizards, especially when Skinner was forced to the bench with over six minutes left in the game and the Minutemen up by seven at the time (57-50).

It was Rick Pitino and Jim Burke raising all sorts of havoc with anything resembling coherency by the Eagles in manners ranging from defensive gems to offensive eye-poppers. For Boston College, it was just too much to handle on this evening.

The only problem that UMass had in the game was untracking itself and this came six minutes into the battle. While B.C. was employing every defensive movement in the book and scoring in its and bits (11-6 lead), the Minutemen were doing something that resembled more of a Chinese fire drill.

Leaman called time. "I told them to slow it down and coordinate their offenses and defenses." Two lay-ups by Austin off the full court trap, a bomb by Endicott, a couple of Skinner specials and a gutty dive by captain Tom McLaughlin resulting in two free throws put UMass ahead 16-13. B.C. led only once thereafter, 20-19. But by the end of the half the Minutemen were up by seven, 34-27.

It was apparent that fundamentals-plus was the name of the game until UMass blew the doors off the Eagles in the last four minutes. "I expected it," said Leaman. "I told you earlier in the week that this would be a game between two well-drilled teams." The resultant presses, set offenses, fast breaks and numerous turnovers for both teams were a testimony to what this type of basketball is all about.

In the second half B.C. could only manage one spurt that brought them to within three (42-39) but for the rest of the game it was one big "good-night" for you know who. As previously mentioned, Skinner went to the bench with four fouls. Bob Zuffalato, the B.C. coach inserted four freshmen including Bob Carrington, Will Morrison and Bill Collins.

The rest was disarray as the Minutemen outscored B.C. 15-0 and for the 3500 who came to the game, including maybe a couple of thousand Umies, the band and the cheerleaders, it was quite a sequel to November 25, 1972.

Skaters Trip UConn, 6-1

By ROY LYONS

UMass celebrated their return to the friendly confines of Orr Rink and Division II competition last night, skating to an easy 6-1 decision over an outclassed University of Connecticut squad before a small crowd of five hundred.

The Minutemen were rebounding from two straight Division I setbacks in the Hub and junior center iceman Jim Coleman was the chief Huskie executioner, netting a hat trick before any of his teammates even got on the board.

It was only the brilliant goaltending of UConn's Louis Parker that kept UMass from hitting in double figures. The freshman whiz turned back 38 shots, most of them real testers, and who could blame UMass coach Jack Canniff if he wished the Norwood, Mass. native had never left the state.

Parker was especially outstanding in the first period, holding the Minutemen off until, literally, the last second when Coleman potted his first of three. He drove a backhander home after Parker kicked out the initial shot by Pat Keenan. Canniff had his special goal-scoring line on at the time, featuring the three centers, Coleman, Keenan, and Don Riley.

UMass put the heat on Parker again as soon as the second period got underway. They really began to swarm the UConn cage when Huskie forward Joe Marashio was whistled off for hooking at 2:18, but Parker was stopping everything in sight until Coleman finally broke through again midway through the period. This one was the prettiest goal of the night as he stickhandled between the defense and snapped a wrist shot past Parker. It came at 9:14, and moments later he triggered another one just wide.

UConn mounted their only real attack of the game in the next few minutes after Coleman was sent-off for elbowing. Bob Monroe tested UMass goalie Chick Rheault for the first time in the game with a booming slap shot from the left face-off circle just as the penalty was expired, but then Coleman struck for his third and final goal at 12:49. This time rightwing Kevin Connors got the assist.

Phil Scudder stuffed a rebound behind a sprawling Rheault less than a minute later, and the Huskie scoring was over. Kevin McGarry and Ray Ferry got the assists, the goal coming at 13:35.

Keenan cancelled that less than a minute later when freshman Billy Harris sent him in alone with a nifty pass at the blue line and Keenan lifted a perfect wrist shot past Parker on his stick side.

That wrapped up the scoring in the second period, but Brian Mulcahy may have had something to do with that. The sophomore rearguard made the defensive play of the game—a diving poke check in front of the UMass net. Oh yes, and Coleman snapped another one just wide at—you guessed it—19:59.

The third period was icing on the cake with Harris and John Muse bagging a goal each to up the count to 6-1. Harris rammed his home from a jam-up in front on a centering pass from Keenan. It came at 13:26. Muse was logging some ice time in place of Coleman on the last couple shifts, and the Brookline soph made the most of it at 19:54 when Connors sent him in alone with a perfect pass from the right sideboards.

UMass plays Hamilton (they beat them 9-4 earlier in the season) tomorrow night at Orr Rink. Face-off is at 7:30. Saturday they travel to Andover to play Merrimac College. The Minutemen now sport a 8-6-1 record overall and a 7-2-1 record in Division II.

Minutemen Selected To Honors Team

Three University of Massachusetts football players have been named to the NCAA Small College Academic- All America second team. They are Chuck Hamatty (defensive tackle), John Hawkins (guard) and running back Paul Metallo.

The players are selected on academic as well as athletic merit. Hamatty is a second semester senior with a 3.2 cum in Economics; Hawkins and Metallo graduated in January. Hawkins compiled a 3.6 cum in Engineering and Metallo had a 2.95 in Physical Education.

Coach MacPherson was elated over the selection of his three players. "It's a great step forward in our football program," he said. "We have been striving for our athletes to be good students and this is a great step in that direction."

It wasn't the same...

By MARTY KELLEY

From Nosebleed Territory—Maybe a pattern has been set, a precedent established, and although the Heights took one more physical and emotional beating, something was missing; . . .this really would have been something to see at the Cage. However, the Eagle has fallen again and from the nostalgia that accompanies the Boston College ethic, it wasn't to be found last night down Civic Center way.

Of course, the Cage would have loved it. But how would it have affected the players? Lord knows that manicuring the Eagle in any sport is a feat foretold far stronger and with more wide reaching affect by the emotion that accompanies the event and not the statistic that governs it. But was the emotion there?

It was hard for the players to display it after the game. For they performed their feat in front of an appreciative, partisan crowd. But the home-spun ethic was gone. The Civic Center took that away. It could never give it back. It seems that the players almost had to be reminded that they had just shut the door in the face of their No. 1 nemesis.

But, this one was kept away from the students. The atmosphere of the Cage and a 24 point victory margin is something that is so inexplicably ear-shattering that it's almost a shame to take this one away from "Ol' Hicks". With the usual ten point Cage cushion, this one could have been a 34 point walkaway and the Bells of Chestnut Hill would be silenced for a long time to come. As it stands now, Boston College has a lot of unconsecrated ground between it's former basketball loft and that now established by the Minutemen.

Just where UMass goes from here is of no bearing to the disconsolate Eagles. But, how much of a hurdle was this for the Minutemen. Al Skinner met the challenge, Tom Austin showed that he is the dealer against the zone, Jim Burke was his usual cagey self, Charlie Peters and Tom McLaughlin hustled relentlessly, and with variables working against them like this, Coach Zuffalato calling on Bobby Carrington, (25 points in the preliminary game) to keep his Eagles at bay.

But you missed a show if you weren't there last night. The Leaman discipline was very much in vogue. But oh, how nice it would have been if Curry Hicks Cage had hosted it . . . "The band was great", said Leaman afterwards. "The fans were with us as well, but you better believe it's going to be nice to be back home at the Cage with UConn on Saturday night".

Probably beating BC at a neutral site will be more of a buffer for the team. Who knows, maybe it won't be. But no one left "team integrity" at the Cage when the Minutemen left for Rt. 91 around 5:45. That's a quality that this team has been pressed for all season long. For if you blink, you'll miss their act. The Minutemen always seem to be on the road.

And now that Boston University pulled a mild upset last night (107-99 over Connecticut in Boston), the Yankee Conference is now left to the home court advantage. UMass will have that and a chance to tie UConn for the conference lead this weekend. Just how will the BC debacle figure into it?

Although it may not have tasted like a typical BC win, there's one thing certain: there's a problem spelling the word "pedestal" at the Heights this morning.

Profs Push For Collective Bargaining

By CINDY GONET

Sixty UMass faculty members last night approved the affiliation of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) with the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) after 3-1/2 hours of deliberation on collective bargaining. On Monday, Feb. 12, the MSP will vote to approve the Professional Unity Agreement approved by the faculty yesterday.

The primary points of deliberation focused on the membership dues proposed on the professors and the number of members from the AAUP to compose the Executive Board.

Article II concerning membership stated that "The local AAUP chapter is affiliated nationally with the National AAUP. The local MSP chapter is affiliated through MTA (Massachusetts Teacher's Association), with the National Education Association, NEA. Both national organizations serve vital and somewhat different functions for the American academic community. Members of MSP-AAUP-MTA are urged to join either one or both national organizations." Legally speaking, this could mean that professors would pay annual local dues of the AAUP of $4, MTA dues of $76, and MSP dues of $3.

When the possible coalition of the two associations, AAUP and MSP for the purposes of collective bargaining were deliberated, the National chapter of the AAUP urged that dues of $12 to $36 (depending on rank) also be paid.

The National chapter of the AAUP has $400,000 for organization of collective bargaining rights, nationally. The MTA, which is an affiliate of the MSP, offers $100,000 for this purpose on the UMass campus alone.

Concern was expressed by several faculty members over the groups making up the MTA. The Massachusetts Teachers Association is composed of those in the public education from high school teachers up to professors, mainly in state colleges.

The MSP, on the other hand, is made up of only professors in prestigious universities. Some members of the faculty expressed misgivings that those in the MTA could be dictating to the MSP.

Another hotly debated point was concerned with Article III and Governance Structure. The agreement says the joint MSP-AAUP-MTA would be made up of ten members on the Executive Board. "Seven members will be designated...of the MSP and three...of the AAUP to serve...."

A 7.3 ratio of the Executive Committee was needed by the AAUP for compromise purposes.

If the MSP meeting ratifies the agreement, the faculty will gain considerably more power and strength, especially concerning such issues as tenure, hiring practices, professional standards, working conditions, and budgeting.

After three years of surveying the faculty, Mr. Cadwell Ray, presiding over the meeting and a member of the Executive Board of the AAUP, said at least one-half of the faculty was moving toward favoring collective bargaining.

The Executive Committee considered implementing these findings by the Fall of 1972. The Committee was then made up of Joseph Burroughs, Stanley Young, and Cadwell Ray. A joint effort between the AAUA and the MST explored the possibility of an agreement.

At this time no possible decision on collective bargaining could have been possible because the faculty was split into factions of associations.

The first order of business in deciding to ratify the Professional Unity Agreement came when the "purple epistle", a ditto sheet amending the first circulated agreement which was distributed. It was decided that the agreement and its amendment would be considered in the order of the meeting.

The two issues which were voted and agreed upon were (1) establishing collective bargaining as quickly as possible and (2) maintaining the role of the new combined chapter if collective bargaining came about.

Of Sex And Vested Interests

"Harrad" Author Speaks

By HUGH OWEN

Robert Rimmer, author of The Harrad Experiment, spoke last night on why "being naked in bed with you is the most important thing of my life."

Rimmer said the main problem married people had was to be able to relate sexually. The reason for this, said Rimmer, was that women were far ahead of men in matters of sexual relations.

Women over thirty are the best customers of the endless supply of sex manuals advocating sexual freedom. They are willing to experiment with these new concepts in love, whereas the male is still plodding along in the rut of sexual inhibitions, he said.

Many women, according to Rimmer, are willing to enter into some type of "menage a trois", whether it be between two males and one female or two females and one male. Males, however, are more possessive of their partners and tend to resent any competition.

The American male also regards lovemaking as a job that has to be done. They tend to think of lovemaking more in terms of producing offspring. Rimmer said that the female is not satisfied with this method of lovemaking and revolts against it.

Rimmer sees this problem not as the fault of the male as an individual but the fault of society as a whole. People are brought up with the concept of sex as a dirty act that proper young men and ladies do not engage in, he said. Thus a whole aura of mystique arises about sex.

Magazines such as Playboy, Penthouse, and Oui do not help this problem any, said Rimmer. These magazines idolize the female body, building up the untouchable aspects of the female in the mind of the male even more.

The new revolution in sexual encounter will do away with all of these taboos, according to Rimmer. By looking upon the act of sex as one to be had merely for pleasure people will become freer and lose many of the notions of sexual inadequacy they previously had, he said.

Many people who were previously lonely and embarrassed about sex will be able to free themselves of their inhibitions, he continued. By being naked in bed together, males and females will be able to open themselves to each other and establish a much better personal relationship than could before be obtained.

In a short question and answer period that followed the talk, Rimmer spoke on bi-sexuality and marriage.

Bi-sexuality was necessary to an extent in a menage a trois, said Rimmer. For it to succeed the two partners of the same sex should hold some degree of affection for each other.

On the question of whether or not marriage was really necessary, Rimmer said he felt it was only when there was the intent of the partners to produce offspring. If this intent was not present then sex would be much more open and rewarding without any ties of marriage, Rimmer said.

Henry Bubar
"After Wilson, the 'profit-gods' moved in under Harding and Coolidge."

Activist Hits Interests

BY STEVE FINE

Henry Bubar, an activist in the peace movement for over 20 years, spoke at Project 10 last night about how vested business interests can be linked to numerous political and social disturbances in United States history. Speaking before a small group of students at the project's Political Seminar in Moore House Bubar described how he thinks business interests had played a part in causing the Civil War, the American takeover of the Phillipines, the Great Depression and the war in Vietnam.

"Some people call Jackson's break-up of the United bank during his administration, 'Jacksonian Democracy' but this actually made people lose track of the Federal Government when he created "Wildcat Banks" in each state," Bubar said. "The beginnings of separate state interests were here, which led to the Civil War."

The elderly activist then explained how United States gained control over the Phillipines for commercial purposes. Bubar said that President McKinley had made a statement saying that it was bad business to give it back to Spain after gaining it in the Spanish American War.

"So now we're imperalists, and Wall Street had taken over. McKinley had said we took over the country to educate and Christianize the people, but he didn't know that most of the Phillipinos were Christians."

It wasn't until Woodrow Wilson, Bubar maintained that a President tried to sever ties with Wall Street, by breaking up the Federal Reserve.

Bubar said that "unfortunately", after Wilson the "profit-gods" moved in under Harding and Coolidge. He explained that under Coolidge everybody was getting rich and over 'capitalizing', leading the country to the Great Depression.

Moving on to Vietnam, he said, the vested interests of tin and rubber got the U.S. into the war.

He explained that after the French bombarded Haiphong Harbor, the U.S. supplied money to the French. At one time he believes the war could have been avoided but he said "we decided to exploit the poor man and look after the rich."

Bubar a peace activist for many years, supported Eugene McCarthy's bid for President in 1968, and in the McGovern campaign served as treasurer of the Northampton branch for the Citizens For McGovern.

Bubar is also a graduate of Colby College in Maine, where he spent almost 20 years being employed by the Aroostock Federation of Farmers, a cooperative of farmers in Caribou, Maine. He also served as history teacher in Maine and Massachusetts for many years and recently retired from teaching.

Faculty Senate Endorses Univ. Governance Proposals

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD

A long awaited University Governance Procedures special report received endorsement from the Faculty Senate yesterday, while meeting in a "committee of the whole" at Herter Hall.

Speeches by UMass President Robert C. Wood and Provost Robert L. Gluckstern opened the meeting, which also dealt with the election of a senator to the Rules Committee and the establishment of an Ad Hoc Committee to study the Cronin Reorganization Plan of Higher Education in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Referring to the University Governance Procedures review, Chairman of the reporting special committee, Senator Robert Wellman said, "The committee's endeavor was to write a document from the faculty point of view."

He went on to explain that the report had three main parts: "First, a policy statement about University government; then the delineation of the responsibilities, duties, and procedures of the Board of Trustees, Chancellors, and other components of the University of Massachusetts (all campuses); and finally, the establishment of two new committees to the Board of Trustees and a further study of the effects of these new procedures.

The Pan-University Study Group which is presently reviewing governing procedures, was first set up by the Board of Trustees and was composed of twenty members, including representatives from all campuses of the University. The special report presented to the Fac-Sen. yesterday was written by the faculty representatives to this group.

Of special interest in the report was the recommendation for the delegation of authority to the President to appoint Vice Presidents and Chancellors, with the concurrence of the Board of Trustees. Presently, the Board makes such appointments on the advice of the President.

In the discussion that followed the presentation of the special report, Senator Walter Denny warned, "This document should not be the cause of undue optimism on the part of the faculty. They should continue to be vigilant in these matters."

Senator James Matlack asked whether the report was clear as to its intents. "Is it codifying the existing situation or is there a real allocation and shift of procedures advocated here?" he questioned.

President of the Student Senate, Larry Ladd, urged that the composition of two multicampus committees which the special report suggested, be changed to include equal faculty-student representation. Chairman Wellman said a final decision had not yet been reached on the representation ratio in these committees.

In other business, President Wood addressed the Senate on the issues of the budget and the proposed University reorganization plan. He expressed two major disappointments in the budget, namely that financial aid and library funding would suffer budget cuts.

On the subject of the reorganization plan, Wood said, "This is clearly an effort to break up the University system in this state, and it is not a wise effort."

Under new business, Senator George Sulzner was elected to the Rules Committee, with Senators David Biddle, Steve Fletcher, and Frank Hugus named as "guests" to the same committee.

Senator Eric Einhorn introduced a motion that the Senate establish an Ad Hoc Committee to study the Cronin Report on educational reorganization as it relates to the future of higher education in Mass. After the membership of the proposed committee was amended, the motion was passed.

Want To Be Miss America?

By CINDY GONET

"Very many young ladies dream of becoming Miss America. The girl who is selected Miss Hampshire County will have the opportunity to begin working toward that goal", said Benjamin Mysorski, Northampton Kiwanis Club president about the contest for which applications are now available.

To qualify, a young lady must be between the ages of 18 and 28 on September 1 of this year. She must be a high school graduate by September 1, and must never have been married.

Talent will be considered in the judging and each contestant should possess either trained or potential talent.

In discussing the talent qualifications, Mysorski stressed that the range is varied and that no girl must necessarily be trained in any specific field. He pointed out that many entrants in other pageants did not realize they possessed talent in a certain field until considering entrance into the competition.

Poise, beauty and talent are the three major requirements. Each contestant will be judged in evening gown, in swimsuit and in the presentation of her talent.

Applications can be obtained at Northampton National Bank, Harry Daniels Mens Store, Kresconko Studios, Hotel Northampton, or from any Northampton Kiwanis member.

"Any young lady who is a resident of or attends school in Hampshire County is eligible to enter," Mysorski announced. The anticipated scholarships for 1973 are: $500 for Queen, $250 awarded to first runner-up, $200 to second runner-up, $150 for third runner-up, $100 for Miss Congeniality, $100 presented as a special judges award, and $50 for four non-finalists.

OH Discusses Future Of Academic Programs

By CHRISTINA ROSSOMANDO and JANE MASON

A meeting of the Orchard Hill Area Government committee on Academic Affairs held Tuesday afternoon in the Field House lounge ended with a plea for unity among Hill residents, staff, and faculty interested in the future of Orchard Hill as a residential college.

Joe Santoro, Field House Head of Residence said, "It's about time the university administration took a look at its commitment to the idea of an experimental residential college. The administration has led the students to believe that it is committed to such an idea while at the same time it has failed to provide the money, faculty, and power to Orchard Hill necessary to do so." He called the University's commitment to the residential college a "paper promise."

Over one hundred students, staff, and residents attended the meeting in reaction to Monday's resignation of Orchard Hill Master Christopher Hurn and subsequent action taken by the University administration.

In a memorandum on the subject, Vice Chancellor Robert W. Gage and Assistant Provost Robert L. Woodbury announced the formation of "a special committee of students, faculty, and staff made up of the Subcommittee of Academic Matters on Residential programs augmented by appointees from Student Affairs and other campus groups to coordinate a general campus evaluation of Orchard Hill and report to the Provost's Office and Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Office by April 15, 1973."

The memorandum and proposal was presented at a meeting called Tuesday by Gage and Woodbury. The meeting was attended by several Hill personnel, including Area Director Jim West, Orchard Hill Area Government President Roy Perdue, heads of residence of the four hill dorms, preceptors and staff. Several members of the Third World community also attended at their own invitation.

Another meeting which included Gage, Jim West and others was held Thursday morning. According to West, "We were told to maintain those programs already funded and in operation on the hill and not much else."

Concern was expressed by several people over the Administration's plans to re-evaluate the idea of a residential college and ultimately the future of Orchard Hill. The negative sentiment towards Orchard Hill by the University administration has built up during a period of years, said John Brentlinger, a teacher of O.H. courses for several years.

Anne Brentlinger said that in the past people have been asked to make long term proposals for the academic program on the hill. Among these proposals has been the establishment of Orchard Hill as an academic community to be headed by a dean and the funding necessary for the hiring of a full-time O.H. faculty.

As it stands now, Orchard Hill has only one full-time paid faculty member. These past proposals, among others, have been ignored by the administration, according to OHAG president Roy Perdue.

The decision by Gage and Woodbury to undertake a major re-evaluation of Orchard Hill and the idea of a residential college on this campus came in light of increasing criticism among various groups both within Orchard Hill and outside, in the Sub-Committee of Academic Affairs on Residential Programs and elsewhere. The criticisms concerned the course of developments at Orchard Hill in recent months, some of which are raised in Hurn's letter of resignation. In that letter Hurn called Orchard Hill "a bitterly divided community" and its academic program "narrowly conceived."

Gage and Woodbury cited a second reason for the study as the need to answer the question of the "appropriate goals of a residential college and what a real commitment would require in terms of resources and mandate, and whether this is a commitment the university should support." During the past ten years since the Orchard Hill Residential College was first approved as an experimental program, Woodbury and Gage contend in the February 5 memorandum, the changes in the university have been so substantial that it requires a widened look at whether a residential college is still appropriate on this campus. If so, its character should be determined, they said.

Gage and Woodbury outlined the plans for the re-evaluation in the memorandum. In addition to the special committee previously described, a team of outside people have been invited to participate in the study. Dr. George Hammond, Vice Chancellor of the University of California, Santa Cruz and Representative Joseph Rhodes, former Harvard Junior Fellow and member of the Scranton and Newman Commissions have already accepted invitations to aid in the study.

Faculty, students, and staff throughout the campus are being asked to lend their ideas, suggestions, and opinions by sending letters to the offices of Gage or Woodbury or to the committee in care of Dr. W. Leigh Short, Chemical Engineering, Goessman Laboratory.

The present academic and student affairs offices at Orchard Hill are being asked to carry on the "maintenance functions" of the courses and programs already organized and funded for the present semester.

Several people expressed concern over the fact that no plans for next semester which involve commitments may be made until the results of the study have been made known. John Brentlinger proposed that the Academic Affairs Committee continue to function in its present capacity and that a steering committee of volunteers be formed to "work out policies in reaction to the administration committee and present an account of what has happened on the hill in the past and what are its present programs."

Roy Perdue urged those present at Thursday's meeting to attend the Orchard Hill Area Government meeting Monday night. Perdue said he would ask the Area Government to allocate funds to establish a committee to confront the administration in the interests of the Orchard Hill community, as did the Residential Rebound committee several years ago.

Res. Area-Academic Fees Controversy In Rents & Fees

By DON BISHOP

No solution to the controversial issue of using dormitory room rent revenues, for residential area "academic purpose," was found at last night's meeting between the Rents and Fees Committee and representatives from the residential areas.

The revenues are in the form of area business budgets, which are established from rent revenues collected each year.

The principle figures in the controversy are the various residential areas on campus, the three vice chancellor's offices and the Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee.

While a number of important points have been raised concerning this question of using rent monies to purchase academically oriented equipment, the central issue revolves around the question of whether or not students should be forced to assume the financial burden of academically related expenses.

The Rents and Fees Committee and the Student Senate assume the positive that the state, and not the student should accept this responsibility.

In this instance the role of the state is assumed by the office of the Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs, or Provosts Office, which distributes the funds for academic purposes.

At the present time, the Provosts Office provides money for residential area academic programs for the most part only through the salaries of the program instructors. The amount of money going to the different areas varies, with the Orchard Hill Residential College currently receiving the most.

With the move in recent years towards providing more academic programs in the residence areas, the expenses incurred have naturally grown. Part of the growing expenses has come in the area of "academic equipment".

With the Provost's Office currently providing only very limited resources for the purchase of "academic equipment", and the prospects for allocating more money for next year being dim, various concerns from within the residential areas have been moving within recent weeks to allow for the spending of residential area money for this needed "academic equipment".

These concerns were represented at last night's meeting in the form of Area Directors, Masters, and Area Government Presidents.

Complicating the basic issue of whether or not students should have to assume a responsibility for academic programs area a number of related issues.

First of all, there is a question of whether or not the residential area should be allowed to allocate rent revenue money for academic purposes if their residents so desire it.

The Master of Southwest, John Hunt, and others present last night argued that the different areas should be allowed to take money out of their area business budgets for the purchase of needed academic equipment, where none is forthcoming from the administration.

The Rents and Fees Committee is presently unresolved on this question. While they continue to hope for more money from the Provost, for the purchase of the equipment, many members question whether the taking of rent revenues for academic purposes, in addition to establishing a precedent, may not effect the room rent charge in future years.

If the money for this academic equipment cannot be made up by cutting back in other parts of the area budgets, then there might have to be a rise in room rent fees to cover the costs of the academic programs.

The point was also raised by some members of the committee that some of the residential areas on campus are presently or will in the near future be in the need of the refurbishing. The money for this task they say should come out of the area budgets first, before any expenses for academic equipment are made.

Certain residential area spokesmen countered that these monies for refurbishing can be found, and that even if they couldn't, students in the residential areas should be allowed to decide whether or not they prefer to have new furniture, or academic programs.

Committee members responded to this by saying that thoughts of dorm environment and dorm rents, for the university's future students, had to be made.

While the committee last night maintained their basic opposition to the question of whether or not educational expenditures should come out of the area budgets (i.e. rent revenues), no final decision on the whole question was made.

Both the committee and the area concerns agreed at the end of last night's session to request funds from the Provost's Office for the purchase of academic equipment for the coming fiscal year, and the reasons why not, if his office cannot provide the funds.

If, as many of those present felt, these and other administration avenues for funds prove fruitless, the committee will request written rationales from each area as to why their budgets should be allowed to contain funds for educational purposes.

At that point the committee will have to decide on the entire issue.

Ted Blames Transit Funding

By MIKE SHANAHAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said Thursday the fatal fire inside the subway car in Boston Tuesday night was in part the result of a shortage of funds for mass transit.

In testimony before a Senate Public Works subcommittee, Kennedy said if more funds had been available to refurbish rail cars in Boston, the electrical blaze which killed one person and injured several others might not have occurred.

"This car and other old cars would have been modernized had federal funds requested been made available," Kennedy said.

Kennedy and Sen. Lowell P. Weicker Jr., R-Conn., testified in support of their proposal to open the Highway Trust Fund for use in improving rail and bus transportation, as well as new road construction.

Hanoi To Release 30 POWs by Monday

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) — The United States and North Vietnam have concluded an agreement on the date, sites and number of American prisoners to be released in the first group, senior American officials disclosed last night.

These officials, who have access to terms of the agreement, would not disclose its substance. But they indicated the release will come sometime between Saturday and Monday, and that the initial group to be freed in South Vietnam will number about 30.

Asked why the American prisoners are not being released immediately if an agreement has been concluded, one official replied: "What makes you think the other side had any intention of doing anything until the last minute?"

President Nguyen Van Thieu indicated during an impromptu news conference yesterday that there have been disputes in the four-party Joint Military Commission over the number of Vietnamese prisoners to be freed and the timing of their release. But American officials said any such disputes concern Vietnamese prisoners and do not involve Americans.

The Americans noted that the Communist side has agreed to a date apparently within the time frame laid down by Henry A. Kissinger. Kissinger has said the United States expects American prisoners to be released at two-week intervals in roughly equal installments from the signing of the agreement until the 60-day deadline for U.S. troop withdrawal and prisoner repatriation, which is March 28.

Under Kissinger's timetable, which is not writtzn into the agreement or any of its protocols, the first group of American pisoners should be released around Sunday, since that marks expiration of the first two-week interval since the agreement was signed in Paris Jan. 27.

Pentagon sources said Wednesday night in Washington that 27 American prisoners held in jungle camps in the South will be released Sunday near An Loc.

An Loc is a provincial capital 60 miles north of Saigon and 10 miles from the Cambodian border. One of the war's bloodiest and most sustained battles was fought there last summer.

Indications from the Pentagon sources were that the first POW release from North Vietnam might coincide with Kissinger's four-day visit to Hanoi.

Kissinger, President Nixon's foreign policy adviser arrived in Bangkok last night on his way to Hanoi and Peking. He leaves Friday night for Vientaine and cease-fire talks with Laotian leaders before flying to Hanoi Saturday for four days of conferences with North Vietnamese leaders on postwar relations and U.S. aid.

Secretary of State William P. Rogers said yesterday in Washington that the United States expects a Laos cease-fire soon and a withdrawal of all foreign troops from the landlocked country neighboring Vietnam and Cambodia on the Indochinese peninsula.

North Vietnam has identified 562 U.S. servicemen as alive in prison camps and 55 who died in captivity. Of the 562 identified as alive, 456 are in the North, 99 in South Vietnam and seven in Laos. In addition, the Communists also list 27 American civilians as captured in South Vietnam, some of them State Department officials.

The latest communique released by the Saigon military command claimed 4,774 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops have been killed in fighting since the cease-fire became effective. South Vietnamese military losses were reported as 794 troops killed, 3,350 wounded and 820 missing. In addition, at least 30 civilians have been killed and 172 wounded, the Saigon command said. It accused the Communist side of 2,045 cease-fire violations.

Sources said disputes between Communist and South Vietnamese members of the four-party Joint Military Commission still are preventing the commission from doing its job.

Communist regional teams have been unable to move freely because the South Vietnamese apparently have restricted such travel and because fighting continues in many contested areas of the country

Rogers Expresses Confidence In Viet Peace Agreement

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Secretary of State William P. Rogers said yesterday he does not believe Hanoi has given up its desire to take over the South but "I think they've given up the idea they can achieve their objectives by military means."

"I think they will attempt to achieve the objectives but by the political process and obviously that is going to make the negotiations difficult," Rogers told the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

"But I think they meant it when they signed this peace agreement and I think they've given up achieving the objectives by military means."

In his first report to Congress on progress in establishing the Indochina peace, Rogers could not clarify varying reports on exactly when Hanoi will release the first American prisoners.

But he said it will be "in the next few days" and added "we don't see any hangup."

The secretary also could give the congressmen no figures on President Nixon's possible request for U.S. reconstruction aid for Hanoi.

He suggested this will depend partly on Hanoi's compliance with the peace agreement. He said one thing presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger wants to get at his meeting with Hanoi officials this week will be "more details on what they have in mind" on U.S. assistance. Any aid to Hanoi should be shared by western allies on a multinational basis, Rogers said.

He would not accept the characterization by Rep. Donald M. Fraser, D-Minn., of reconstruction aid as a "monetary inducement" for Hanoi to keep the peace. But when Fraser asked if the aid should be withdrawn if Hanoi renewed fighting, Rogers replied, "Well, sure."

In a heated exchange with Fraser Rogers said war critics both at home and abroad, particularly Swedish Prime Minister Olof Palme, should now give President Nixon credit for winning peace.

"Do you want me to say I agree with everything he's done in the past four years?" Fraser demanded.

"No," Rogers shot back, "but with me here I'd like you to say we've done a good job and you're proud of us."

Rogers told the congressmen he still expects cease-fires in both Laos and Cambodia despite increased fighting in Laos and less definite progress toward a cease-fire in Cambodia than in Laos.

He said his optimism for peace in Laos was based on "talks now going on" and said it is natural that fighting would increase with both sides trying to win maximum territory before the cease-fire.

U.S. Dollar Faces Revaluation

By FRED COLEMAN
Associated Press Editor

LONDON (AP)-The two-week-old international money crisis undermining the strength of the U.S. dollar appeared Thursday to be headed for a climax, perhaps by the weekend.

The value of the American currency was particularly threatened in West Germany by money dealers seeking to buy marks in anticipation the German currency will be revalued, despite Bonn's resolve not to do so.

The dollar-dumping in West Germany and other money markets reflected a widespread judgment that the dollar's official value is pegged higher than its real worth, and that sooner or later the official rate will have to give.

Washington wants the readjustment to come by revaluation of foreign currencies, particularly the West German mark and the Japanese yen. But neither the Japanese nor the Germans, so far, have been willing to undercut their export chances.

If their currencies were revalued as the United States wants, imports such as Volkswagens and transistor radios would be more expensive in U.S. stores. And conversely, U.S. exports would be cheaper in Germany and Japan, giving U.S. traders an edge.

Reports from dealers in Amsterdam and Zurich said Middle East government banks joined the dollar-selling wave Thursday, putting more pressure on the U.S. currency. According to these accounts the Middle East banks, which receive heavy dollar payments for oil, were cashing in these holdings for West German marks.

Earlier in the week, the bulk of the dollar sales were said to be from funds deposited in Europe.

Partly as a result of the new influx from the Middle East, West Germany's state bank was forced to take in an unprecedented $1.7 billion Thursday, the biggest one-day amount of support buying in the current crisis.

The Germans, under international agreements, are pledged to step in and buy dollars to keep the U.S. currency from falling below the permitted floor rate of 3.1500 marks. But despite the massive support operation, the dollar closed in Frankfurt at 3.1495 marks, fractionally below the floor.

This was because the state bank, as it usually does, left the market an hour before close. It is virtually certain to step in again when the market reopens Friday. Otherwise the dollar would be in effect devalued and the international exchange rates worked out in Washington in the Smithsonian agreement of December 1971 could be wrecked. The agreement sealed an 8.57 per cent dollar devaluation decided because of earlier pressure on the U.S. currency.

Me. Ends Student Fingerprints

By DAVE SWEARINGEN
Associated Press Writer

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP)-The Maine legislature completed its sixth work week yesterday with the Senate enacting a bill to end the practice of fingerprinting school children.

The fingerprinting bill was forwarded to Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis who is expected to sign it into law.

Since the post-World War II era, state police have annually fingerprinted every fifth grade student in Maine schools.

The student fingerprints have been put into so-called civilian indentification files, aimed primarily at helping identify bodies after natural disasters. By law, the file is not to be used for criminal investigation purposes.

Over the years, the bodies of several individuals have been identified through the special file.

Rep. Theodore S. Curtis Jr., R-Orono, sponsored the bill to end the program, saying it is costly and some parents object to the prints being taken.

State police, who maintain the files, agreed with Curtis. In addition, they said the program tied up troopers who would otherwise be on highway patrol.

Officials said when parents objected to the printing, officers imply passed over the students involved rather than pressing the matter.

For the first time yesterday the legislature's joint committees held morning hearings, while the House and Senate didn't meet until afternoon.

The 33 senators and 151 representatives are due back at the capitol at 2 p.m. Monday to begin their first four-day work week.

U.S. Won't Charge POWs For Propaganda Statements

By FRED S. HOFFMAN
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — No charges will be filed against returning war prisoners for making propaganda statements over North Vietnamese radio, the Defense Department said yesterday.

But Pentagon spokesman Jerry W. Friedheim did not rule out disciplinary action against POWs for "ratting on comrades" or stealing food from fellow prisoners.

Friedheim restated Pentagon policy during a question-and-answer session with a youth group.

Former Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird had taken a similar stand about six months ago, and Friedham made it clear that the policy remains in effect under Elliot L. Richardson, Laird's successor.

When a young questioner asked if the government contemplates filing charges against any U.S. war prisoners for making statements over Hanoi radio, Friedheim said, "No."

"We do not intend to bring charges," Friedheim said. "We know why some of their statements were made."

He did not elaborate.

Later, he told a reporter that "it would have to be more than a statement on Hanoi radio" to bring government action against any returning POW.

He stressed to the youth group that the official Pentagon decision against bringing formal charges for radio statements does not bind individual members of the armed services from filing charges against other servicemen.

Some returning war prisoners may bring legal action against other war prisoners, he indicated.

The Pentagon has published elaborate plans for handling the 562 returning American POWs, caring for their medical needs and readjustment.

There has been no reference in any of this material to machinery for possible legal actions against violators of U.S. military law.

Nonetheless, it is known that the returning POWs will be questioned extensively about what went on in the POW camp. The debriefing, designed in large part to shed light on the fate of more than 1,300 Americans still unaccounted for, could well produce information on which to base charges.

Resolution Prevents Penn Central Strike

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Penn Central local of the United Transportation Union in Boston began calling in crews late last night shortly after the Western White House announced President Nixon would sign a congressional resolution calling for a 90-day moratorium in the union's strike.

Harry Maloney, vice general chairman of the union, announced action and said he was hopeful of having commuter service ready for the morning rush hour Friday. He said the first trains were due to run at 4:15 a.m.

Maloney added that the pickets "have pitched in to help call in the crews." He said the local's office would be manned until early morning.

Earlier Maloney told newsmen the union would "make every conceivable effort" to provide commuter Friday morning if President Nixon signed the resolution.

He anticipated some difficulties because Penn Central stored its locomotives at the Beacon Park yard in boston "and these will have to be unhooked and moved out to Needham and other places" where Boston-bound commuter runs start.

Unexpectedly, the one-day walkout had less impact than expected and Thursday's commuters were mostly unaffected.

The Washington White House staff got the resolution about 7 p.m. EST. It was to be flown to San Clemente for Nixon's signature. The time needed for the coast-to-coast flight indicated there was little chance trains for 300,000 daily passengers would be operating before the Friday evening rush hour. Some freights could be rolling by daybreak, however.

Under pressure that the strike threatened economic catastrophe in agriculture and massive layoffs in the auto, steel and coal industries, Congress completed approval of the back-to-work order about 5 p.m. But it took more than four hours to complete needed legal preparations of the document and get it to the White House.

The resolution rescinded, temporarily at least, new work rules promulgated by the bankrupt rail giant to reduce train crews--a dispute move, approved by a federal court, that prompted the strike.

It was exactly what the UTU demanded. The union, during 18 months of fruitless bargaining, had resisted all Penn Central efforts to eliminate 5,700 jobs by 1980--all by attrition--in order to save an estimated $100 million annually from the payroll, now $1 billion.

Under the resolution, the Nixon administration and Congress have three months to try to solve the financial woes of a railroad that claims to be losing more than $600,000 daily.

A Penn Cental spokesman said the giant r il system, covering 20,000 miles in 16 states and the District of Columbia, would remain idle until Nixon signed the resolution.

Congress acted as industry and agriculture warned that the strike threatened economic catastrophe.

Autos and steels warned of massive layoffs by Monday, effecting several hundred thousand workers.

Farmers and ranchers predicted shortages of beef, poultry, milk, fruits and vegetables in the heavily populated northeastern United States.

A special action by Congress was needed to end the strike because all legal remedies under the Railway Labor Act had been exhausted.

Import Tax Considered To Ease Monetary Pinch

By EDMOND Le BRETON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon's administration is reported to be considering seriously a special additional tax on imports to prod reluctant trade partners into early general negotiations on trade as well as monetary problems.

This assessment was made Thursday by sources who could not be named, but are close to the administratration's economic thinking.

They suggested that the threat of an import surcharge, guardedly mentioned as a possibility Tuesday by Herbert Stein, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, may be enough to speed the kind of negotiations the United States wants. But if not, they said, it cannot be assumed that Nixon would refrain from actually imposing the surcharge, which would not require congressional action.

A 10 per cent surcharge was imposed briefly in 1971 when Nixon launched his new economic program. It did not remain in effect long enough to have much impact on the flow of foreign goods into the country--but it was credited by many as a factor in bringing about the Smithsonian agreements that headed off a trade-monetary crisis.

The follow-up on these agreements, however, has been disappointing to many both in the administration and in Congress. Discussions have not proceeded as fast as had been hoped and European trading partners have pushed for considering monetary questions first, postponing the trade issues that urgently concern the United States, now facing a mounting excess of imports over exports.

The United States wants to talk about the whole complex of exchange rates, trade and capital movements at once.

The new mention of an import surcharge came against the background of gloomy trade balance predictions and waves of selling that battered the dollar on the European markets--and were continuing Thursday.

Makarios Re-elected In Cyprus

By ALEX EFTY
Associated Press Writer

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP)-Archbishop Makarios was proclaimed re-elected Thursday to a third five-year term as president of Cyprus.

In a speech to roaring thousands of his supporters, the black-robed archbishop denounced the forces of his rival, Gen. George Grivas, for their terrorist tactics and chided them for not contesting the election.

The throng jamming the square, streets, rooftops and balconies surrounding Makarios' palace was estimated at 150,000 to 200,000, which is 30 to 40 per cent of the Greek Cypriot population. About a fifth of Cyprus' population is of Turkish origin.

The bearded archbishop was proclaimed president automatically as the sole candidate for the office. Grivas, the underground leader campaigning for Enosis-the union of Cyprus with Greece at any price-refused a challenge by Makarios to contest the election and seek popular support.

"The people will never give in to terrorism...they will never allow their national cause to be handled by those who do not have their authority and do not enjoy their confidence," Makarios said.

At Makarios' frequent references to those behind the recent wave of violence in the island, the massed throng in front of his yellow sandstone palace roared: "Shame," and: "Put them behind bars."

The rally and re-election of the 60-year-old archbishop were supported by all parties, from the Communists to the extreme right, except for the tiny pro-Grivas rightwing Democratic National party.

There was noticeable relief that no violence occurred. The pro-Grivas press had threatened that the rally would be "Drowned in blood" if the general's supporters were provoked.

Equal Rights Amendment Near Law

The equal rights amendment to the U.S. Constitution is inching its way toward ratification, but has run into trouble in several states. Two states that previously adopted the amendment are considering measures to rescind approval.

The amendment needs the approval of 38 states to become law. Thus far it has been passed in 26 states. The most recent to act were Minnesota and Oregon, where ratification was completed yesterday. About a half dozen states have rejected the proposal. It is pending in the rest.

The language of the proposed amendment is simple: "Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex."

The issue it has raised, however, have been complex and often controversial. Opponents claim the amendment would create chaos in the nation's legal system and would result in women being drafted—an argument rendered moot by the recent end of the draft.

Montana State Sen. John K. McDonald, an opponent of the measure, argued during debate: "If Jesus wanted people to be equal, he would have had six men and six women apostles."

The amendment was passed by the Montana House of Representatives, killed by the Senate, revived on a technicality and tabled. Passage this session is considered unlikely.

Julia Miller, coordinator of a group of women's clubs working for the amendment, said, "I'm optimistic about its passage, but I don't think we are going to get it without a great deal of hard work."

A House committee in Georgia held hearings on the amendment on Wednesday. Martha Gaines of Atlanta, representing the Georgia branch of the National Organization of Women, claimed that opponents of the amendment were "playing on fears."

"They're saying that it would render impossible sexual privacy and that it would do away with separate public toilets," she testified. "This is simply not so. This is a smokescreen."

Idaho and Nebraska are considering rescinding ratification. The Idaho House Judiciary and Rules Committee held its first hearing on the resolution Monday and will decide on Friday whether to hold another one. Nebraska legislators have not yet fixed a date for a public hearing.

Opponents contended the bill would deprive women of certain existing rights—exemption from the draft and support from a husband. Proponents argued the amendment would simply recognize women "as people."

The 24 states that had ratified the amendment prior to Thursday are: Hawaii, New Hampshire, Nebraska, Iowa, Idaho, Delaware, Kansas, Texas, Maryland, Tennessee, Alaska, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Wisconsin, Colorado, West Virginia, New York, Michigan, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, California, South Dakota and Wyoming.

'Humanity Is The Basis Of Law'

MIAMI, Fla. (AP)-Aboard the cleanup boats that pluck trash from the Miami River are some 15 young men who would be spending their days in jail if Criminal Court Judge Alfonso Sepe didn't hold a unique view of crime and punishment.

The same is true for two young offenders who are teaching reading and writing to black inmates at the Dade County Jail and for a black man who is recruiting other blacks to be tested for sickle-cell anemia.

"I believe in the value of punishment, and I believe in maximum punishment," says Sepe, 45, who was elected to the bench two years ago. "But I also believe in leniency when it is due and in doing something besides warehousing people in jails."

In recent months, Sepe has imposed a number of probationary sentences on youthful offenders requiring them to perform some function for the community on their days off from work or school.

Some of the sentences have an almost whimsical air, as when Sepe after describing himself as "just a romantic Italian" ordered a Philadelphia man accused of trying to steal a boat to find himself a girl friend who would love and understand him.

To Sepe, that is the basis of the law-humanity.

"I think the public has become disenchanted with the law and, especially, with lawyers," he says. "The public image of the lawyer today is that of a technician looking for technical ways to beat a case.

"If you look at television shows and the way lawyers are depicted on them, the public should be brainwashed on the side of the law. The television lawyer is the one who rights the wrongs and saves the innocent," Sepe says. "But, because the public every day sees people who are factually and morally guilty go free because of what they consider a technicality, they have lost faith in their law.

"The only thing I'm unhappy about with the law is that we've tried to remove morality from the law. All good law is based on common sense, and common sense is based on our morality," he said. "It is not common sense to gag a man with a Miranda decision so that he won't make a statement. It is not common sense to outlaw the death penalty when it is a deterrent and a necessity in some cases."

Sepe is a native of South Orange, N.J., and a 1953 graduate of the Cornell University Law School. He is married and the father of four-three teenagers and a 23-month-old girl.

Asked if he were starting a second batch of offspring, Sepe laughed and said, "Having a child that age is great. I recommend it for everyone over 45."

Navy Jet Hits Apartments; Searchers Find 7 Bodies

By JEANNINE YEOMANS
Associated Press Writer

ALAMEDA, Calif. (AP) — Searchers have found seven bodies in the smoldering rubble of an apartment building destroyed when a Navy fighter jet smashed into it.

Fire Chief Ernest Servente said Thursday that as many as 40 persons may have died in the disaster. He based his estimate on reports that 42 to 45 persons were in the open-courtyard building at the time.

At least 17 persons were injured.

The A7 Corsair attack plane clipped one apartment building Wednesday night and then plunged through the roof of the four-story 27-unit Tahoe Apartments.

The Tahoe building, at 1814 Central Ave., collapsed in flames and two adjacent structures were set afire.

Disaster crews, unable to go into the burning wreckage for hours, continued to comb the debris.

Lt. Robert Lee Ward, 28, of Carry, N.C., the plane's only occupant, was flying at 28,000 feet on a short "round robin" training flight from Lemoore Naval Air Station near Fresno, Calif., when his craft plunged to earth on this residential island on San Francisco Bay.

Navy Cmdr. William D. Collins, public affairs officer with the Pacific Fleet, said investigators were certain Ward did not eject before the crash.

Eyewitnesses reported seeing only a very few occupants escape the building before it exploded, sending flames and smoke several hundred feet into the night sky.

"I heard screaming coming from inside the building," said Wayne Cook, 29. "It got worse and worse and then stopped."

Fiery debris and jet fuel spread the flames to two adjacent apartment buildings, where at least 17 persons were reported injured with burns and lacerations.

Police warded off looters who said they were reported seizing television sets and other valuables from the less-severely damaged buildings.

Racial Disputes Erupt On Florida School Campuses

By JOHN MUELLER
Associated Press Writer

BOCA RATON, Fla. (AP) — Police patrolled seven Florida school campuses yesterday following disputes between black and white pupils.

One high school was closed and tense situations were reported at eight other campuses.

Officials said many of the incidents across the state were triggered by the painting of white power slogans on school walls and the wearing of Confederate armbands by white pupils.

Authorities said several pupils were arrested after racial troubles--which started last week at Boca Ciega High School near St. Petersburg on Florida's west coast--spilled over to four nearby campuses yesterday. The situation was also reported tense at Disston Junior High School, where fighting broke out Wednesday.

In neighboring Hillsborough County, sheriff's deputies were called to East Bay High School when black and white pupils refused to go into class and to Chamberlain High School where authorities said tensions were high after racial fighting Tuesday which left four pupils slightly injured.

Across the state in wealthy Palm Beach County, police patrolled Atlantic High School in Delray Beach, a few miles from Boca Raton High School which remained closed after a week of unrest between black and white pupils.

School officials said the atmosphere was tense at Boca Raton Middle School and at high school campuses in Twin Lakes, North Shore, Forest Hill and Riviera Beach. Police were prepared to move in if fighting broke out.

In Florida's panhandle, 50 police remained on the campus of Escambia High School, torn by racial disputes since last December after blacks protested the use of Confederate symbols and the refusal of officials to ban Dixie as the school song.

Palm Beach County School Supt. Joseph Carroll said he would try to reopen Boca Raton High for a second time Friday with a hallway patrol by parent volunteers. He also vowed to suspend any pupil caught with a weapon, including chain belts and steel hair combs.

The school was first closed Monday after police had to use tear gas to break up a parking lot fight among about 200 pupils. Officials tried to reopen the school Wednesday but closed it again after trouble again erupted and pupils said they were too frightened to go to classes.

Police said six black pupils were arrested Wednesday on charges of carrying concealed weapons after they fired guns from the window of a car as they left the campus.

Sarge Blames Suppliers For Present Oil Crisis

BOSTON (AP)-Gov. Francis W. Sargent said Thursday that oil companies had held Massachusetts "hostage for lack of information" in this winter's home heating oil crisis.

In a speech to a symposium on the future of electrical energy in New England, Sargent said the oil suppliers had not given the state information about the impending oil crisis until it was too late.

"They left us virtually no aleternatives but to meet their

"They left us virtually no alternatives but to meet their demands," he said. "Through a series of desperate stop-gap measures, it now appears that we will have enough oil to make it through the winter.

"The warm weather and the lifting of the import quotas may well have given us the breathing space we so badly needed," he said.

"We will not allow a repeat performance," he said. "We will not allow the oil companies to hold the state hostage for lack of information."

"I am proposing legislation which will require the industry to give us the information we need. This information will permit us to plan properly to meet future demands," he said.

"We did not arrive at this oil squeeze accidentally," he said. "It has been coming upon us for years. Some people have even gone so far as to suggest that the oil companies are artifically creating the critical shortages.

"But I would prefer to believe differently. However, we certainly have not had a full measure of cooperation from some oil firms. They waited too long to present us with their needs," he said.

James M. Howell, chief economist of the First National Bank of Boston, told the symposium he believes New England will shift from an emphasis on manufacturing for employment to a "greater reliance on high-technology industries as well as in services."

NBC Pres. Cites Gov't Attacks On Press Freedom

FORT WORTH, Tex. (AP)-Julian Goodman, president of the National Broadcasting Co., said Thursday the U.S. Government has shown "a pattern of action aimed at weakening the press as the public's watchdog."

He noted a proposal to revoke the licenses of local television stations that carry "biased" network news, jailing of newsmen for refusing to disclose confidential sources and court orders to force newsmen to produce unpublished notes or forbidding them to report certain court cases.

"These invasions of journalistic freedom have prompted introduction of legislation that will protect against them," Goodman said. "And of course we are all for it."

"The news media, whatever their faults, are not the danger," Goodman said. "The danger is twofold. It is a government that would try to reshape the news in a fashion more to its liking, and it is public apathy to such attacks on press freedom."

Pent. Papers May Hide Errors of U.S. Officials

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A defense attorney, launching an effort Thursday to show that U.S. officials hid their own mistakes by hiding the Pentagon papers, let jurors hear passages about damaging U.S. decision in Vietnam.

Sections of the Vietnam War history were read to jurors by a key government witness, Brig. Gen. Paul F. Gorman, as he was cross-examined by attorney Leonard Weinglass at the trial of Daniel Ellsberg and Anthony Russo.

Gorman read passages that indicated that the United States discouraged free elections in South Vietnam in the early 1950s although officials knew "violence" would follow if no elections were held.

Jurors were read another passage relating U.S. disillusionment as early as 1956 with the U.S.-supported regime of South Vietnamese President Ngo Dinh Diem and his "repressive" tactics.

The passage related Diem's closing of newspapers, his jailing of public officials and private citizens who disagreed with him and told of spreading poverty and unemployment in South Vietnam.

But, the Papers add that as late as 1959 "public statements by United States officials...were of continuing progress...Diem was depicted as a strong and capable leader strongly in control of his own house, leading his people to nationhood at a remarkable pace."

Following readings of almost every segment, Weinglass introduced in evidence publicly available documents–in one case the Congressional Record–which printed similar information long before Ellsberg and Russo released the Pentagon papers.

But Gorman, whose original testimony supported the government contention that Ellsberg and Russo may have helped an enemy with the release, refused to change that opinion.

Ellsberg, 41, and Russo, 36, are charged with espionage, conspiracy and theft in connection with the leak of the Papers to news media in 1971. They allegedly copied the documents in 1969, and the government is seeking to show they would have helped an enemy then.

Among the comparisons made by Weinglass was a Pentagon papers section detailing the location of two Communist headquarters in South Vietnam in 1954--earlier described by Gorman as important intelligence data in 1969--with a copy of the Congressional Record of May, 1968 giving the same data and the name of the North Vietnamese captured prisoner from whom it was obtained.

Gorman reiterated his belief that a foreign analyst could tell from the Pentagon papers that the United States had a wiretap on North Vietnamese communications. But, in a detailed dissection of the page, Weinglass drew from Gorman the concession that no wiretaps were mentioned and that the Congressional Record page was more explicit in naming the source.

Aiken Calls For Govt. Unity

WASHINGTON (AP)—Sen. George Aiken, the Senate's senior Republican, warned Thursday against partisan criticism or praise of the origins, conduct or settlement of the Vietnam war.

In a Senate speech, the Vermonter said President Nixon's action in removing what he termed "the immediate tyranny of the Vietnam war" will make it possible for Congress to work with the President to restore bipartisanship in foreign policy.

He said it would be as wrong to dwell on the December bombing of North Vietnam or the origins of U.S. involvement as to talk about "President Nixon's peace, confusing extrication from a predicament for achievement of what may prove impossible."

Aiken called for renewal of the "generosity of view" he said has always existed in the Senate despite its frequent clashes with the past two presidents over the war.

"Let the Senate make the first move," he said, "for after all is said and done it was the Senate, not the Presidents, which imposed the 4F classification on itself."

And Aiken said a limitation on political campaigning to six months before the 1974 elections would be very useful in fostering a spirit of cooperation.

Such a spirit is necessary, Aiken said, if the United States is to deal effectively with such post-Vietnam problems as the developing relationships with China, the world's trade and money problems and continuing problems in Southeast Asia.

"I am convinced," he said, "that the American people do not want to choose sides over foreign policy issues. This is one area of government where they look for leadership to the President and the Congress almost exclusively."

But for bipartisanship to be restored, Aiken said, President Nixon must join in such "a generous view."

"If the President tries to shoulder this responsibility all by himself and ignores the legislative branch of our government, he inevitably sets Congress against him. Instead of accountability, he will get partisan investigation.

"Instead of consultation," Aiken said, "he will have confrontation."

In appealing for renewed bipartisanship, Aiken noted that most of the key post—World War II foreign policy decisions were bipartisan, including the initial steps into Vietnam such as the 1964 Gulf of Tonkin resolution.

"The real reason why bipartisanship failed," he continued, "was that the premises on which it rested were wrong," citing the "exuberant, expansive, confident and tragically over-simplified view of the world and of America's role therein" of the pre-Vietnam days.

POW Bracelets Create 'Kinship'

By TERRY RYAN
Associated Press Writer

The five million Americans who wear prisoner-of-war bracelets feel a special kinship for the men whose names are on the bands.

Some plan to meet the men whose names are on their bracelets. Others will send the bracelets to released prisoners. Many speak of the anguish and joy they felt when the names of prisoners scheduled for release were announced.

"I waited three days before he was put on a list. It made me a nervous wreck," said Linda Wolfe, 19, of DeKalb, Ill. On her bracelet is the name of Air Force Maj. William Austin of Simpsonville, S.C., shot down over Hanoi in 1967.

"I feel like a part of him and his family," said Miss Wolfe. "I plan to have my bracelet engraved with the date he is released and send it to them."

Mary Duvick, 22, of Aurora, Ill, wears a bracelet with the name of Capt. Peter Pick on it. "I have checked the prisoner-of-war lists, and he is not on them," said Miss Duvick. "I'll wear it forever in his memory and the memory of those like him."

The nickel-plated bracelets were distributed by the California-based Voices in a Vital America (VIVA) organization. Costing $2.50, each was inscribed with the name of an American military man and the date he was reported missing or taken prisoner in Southeast Asia.

VIVA said it has sold more than five million bracelets. It collected $3.6 million in the 12 months that ended last August, a spokesman said, and used the money to publicize the plight of the POWs.

Connie White, 40, an airport guide in Los Angeles, wears two bracelets. Both bear the names of prisoners to be released soon.

C.C. Fee Controversy

The Graduate Student Senate is planning to file a suit to stop the payment of the Campus Center fee by graduate students. The rationale behind this action is that people should not have to pay for what they don't use.

Presently, grad students are paying the same campus center fee as undergraduate students—$62.50 per year. The 4000 grad students here pay a total of about $250,000 per year.

It's bad enough that undergraduate students have to pay for the non-use of such a large, expensive complex. Grad students make use of one small office on the first floor, and there is even talk of moving their office to the Graduate Research Center, a plan which was discussed long before the plan to file the suit.

Student Attorney Richard Howland has said that no student's interests could be harmed by the proposed suit, and Graduate Student Senate President Veda Ross has claimed that it is not the intent of the suit to leave undergraduate students "holding the bag". Rather, the purpose of the suit is to recover monies already paid, and prevent future payments, for something which graduate students do not use, nor want to use.

The Graduate Student Senate will initiate the suit this summer or next fall. We hope they are successful in their endeavor.

'TELL ME AGAIN HOW WE DIED TO MAKE THE WORLD SAFER FOR DEMOCRACY...'

T-5: Student-Run Dorm

For a long time, John Adams Middle and Lower dormitories were having more than their share of problems-ranging from loneliness, depression, distrust, abuse of alcohol and drugs (nothing wrong with pleasure, but things can be taken too far), increasing dormitory damage, a large rate of dropouts-which inevitably led to intensification of alienation among the residents, because of the lack of resources and opportunity to exercise student responsibility within the dormitory, and of course, the powerlessness that we all feel at one time or another here at UMass, resulting from a bureaucratic and impersonal institution, which intensifies itself within a "tower" structure.

However, the problems that are endemic to a tower (especially John Adams) do not lend themselves to correction in a context that includes a traditional Head of Residence imposed on the dorm by some outside source. As a matter of fact, we found a Head of Residence to be a definite obstacle to a true democracy within the dormitory–a Southwest dorm, a tower, which would inevitably suck into its bosom people of all styles and persuasions, rather than any one style of student. The structure had to be flexible, lest all be suffocated in their collective and singular individuality.

Thus, T-5 Project was born from the union of two dorms, actually compounding a problem, but also giving new venues for the solutions to those problems. We now have two lounge floors open for the collective residency -one allocated for study use, and the other a games area. Removal (or non-existence, if you prefer) of a Head of Residence helped pave the way for direct interaction with the administration, and new methods were adopted, not to meet some arbitrary, imposed standard, but rather to meet internal dormitory needs as they were felt.

Both representatives and counselors help maintain the dormitory. Counselors are not in their traditional roles however. Representatives run the dormitory, and dormitory needs are brought back to the floors for discussion. Thus, representatives--fellow students--make up the administrative capabilities of the dorm, and it is, in reality, up to the individual student to decide on things which affect him or her directly. Nevertheless, and for a better interpersonal relationship, the counselling staff of the dormitory is led by a graduate student, who was selected-not imposed-by T-5, and who now resides in the tower. Counselors and representatives are now making themselves responsible for improvements in the dorm. And therein lies a tale.

T-5 is not a traditional type of dormitory, as I have already said. However, in order to meet the needs of some 600 individuals, the dormitory has at times been viewed as chaotic, and with very little visible progress since its inception (1970/71). However, if the structure is to be made to fit the individual, and not vice versa, the organization must necessarily be amorphous and vague, so that a truly solid, organic, and natural structure may evolve.

So far, things have been run on a fairly small scale. Nothing extravagant. But things have been happening. We are currently running different types of living experiences, which are student originated. The Black Corridor on the eleventh floor and the co-ed tenth floor (J. Adams is an all male dormitory, with that notable exception.). But, again, remember that these were ends fashioned to fit the needs of T-5 students, and to solve their own problems.

Fine, you might say, but wouldn't such looseness of structure lead to ineffectuality. Yes, in some cases it has, but that's not the main point--it's one of many. If these monolithic structures in Southwest are to be something more than a dumping ground for students who want to live in Southwest, but as of yet don't know where, they will have to be re-examined from every possible angle, and the administrative angle must be the first covered. The dormitory now has facilities. Recreation rooms, coffeehouses, dorm parties, are all small steps, but important ones. Before the dorm can begin dealing with bigger problems, it must deal with itself. Disagreements are a basic part of this, and in truth, there were internal difficulties at the beginning of this year.

However, a new spirit is rapidly overtaking this dormitory structure. Marathons and retreats are being planned for the dorm; modular credit concepts are being used so that a aresident may be able to receive information on concepts he may not be aware of–and get credit for it. Encouraging the diversity of interests, not by benign neglect, but by active participation, will be attempted. Unified diversity? It's a possibility.

Most important, however, will be the furtherment of true democracy and freedom in a dormitory structure. And with this freedom, responsibility is implied. A Head of Residence can no longer take the blame, just as he should no longer give the orders. T-5 is not an attempt to copy any other dormitory structure, although it is being copied in many facets of its innovations by other dorms. We are not Pierpont (Project 10) or Mackimmie (Humanity House). Rather, to state the obvious, we are ourselves and we do not have a selected clientele. Just to succeed on our own is enough. The dream lives.

A Latin America Policy

President Nixon has said that after the war in Vietnam is "over," he will devote his attention in the foreign affairs field to Europe. This would be a tragic mistake. The problems Nixon sees in Europe definitely exist, but they are not nearly as pressing as those in Latin America. No other region has received less intelligent attention from the U.S. except Africa and perhaps Canada. Our attitude towards our southern neighbors has been that they will always be there, so why worry.

Whoever briefed President Nixon on Latin America must have shown him Woody Allen's movie, Bananas, as a documentary. The president has not shown much more understanding about the region than he did in 1959 when he recommended a warm embrace for elected leaders and a distant handshake for dictators. The last major foreign policy initiative towards Latin America was during the Kennedy Administration, probably caused by the Cuban fiasco.

Kennedy, like Woodrow Wilson, thought he could teach South and Central Americans to be good Democrats; both men failed miserably. Some countries can handle a democracy or a republic, but others can't. In this century, the U.S. has been engaged in numerous policing activities in the Caribbean, some to make the area safe for U.S. industry, others to make the area safe for democracy, and lately to save the region from Communism. The last such adventure was in 1965 when LBJ saved the Dominican Republic from the Reds. For a time it appeared that some people were trying to turn the Carribbean into the sixth Great Lake.

President Nixon has made no serious policy initiatives with regards to Latin America, he has also taken no overt military actions against any government. Relations with Cuba are as strained as ever, even though the Cuban government appears willing to discuss the hijacking problem. The Nixon Administration has made overtures towards the People's Republic of China, and the USSR. Why not Cuba? Sometimes we are told that the US doesn't recognize Cuba because Fidel is not such a great guy. He has murdered, exiled, imprisoned and expropriated. But many of the governments we recognize have done the same. The governments of Brazil, Guatemala, Haiti, the Dominican Republic, and the USSR have all taken some or all of those measures, yet we have relations with them.

The real reasons that the US does not have better relations with Cuba go a lot deeper than what we are told. Cuba is a thorn in the side of the US—it's the only Communist country in the Western Hemisphere. There are lots of Cuban exiles living in the US who are now citizens, and better relations with Fidel would mean the loss of their vote.

Chile passed through a grave crisis in the election of her president, Allende. He did not receive the majority of the popular vote but was elected by the Congress, dominated by another party, because he received a plurality of the vote. The United States did not greet Allende's election with joy because of his political affiliation, but we weren't even polite. Jack Anderson discovered that ITT had some desires towards the Allende government.

Panama has developed a real nationalist feeling regarding US control of the Canal. The United Nations will meet in that country at its next session. One of the topics of the Security Council will be the Canal. The government and people of Panama want more say in how the Canal is operated and who gets the benefits.

The time has come for a new policy towards Latin America. We should recognize all existing governments but not offer support to keep any in power or withdraw aid to help topple one. We should not play the legitimization game, where we refuse to have relations with a new government until it meets our basic requirements. We cannot hope to police the hemisphere, if for no other reason than that it's impossible. Parts of Argentina and Chile are farther away from New York City than Moscow. Brazil is so large that any attempt to intervene would be a major military mission. There are small countries close to the US that we could effectively occupy, but to do this would just foster a strong anti-US feeling. I don't believe that President Nixon will take any overt military action against any other country in our hemisphere but he should adopt a policy more in tune with the reality of the situation.

Are Draft Resisters Exiled Forever?

By Howard Bloom and Steve Ferber

On January 31, 1973 President Nixon set the tone for the ensuing debate on amnesty when he told a group of newsmen, "Those who deserted must pay their price..... the price is a criminal penalty for disobeying the law...."

All told, 50,000 men would be affected by a grant of amnesty, but the notion is that most are not waiting with bated breath, nor suffering from the pains of exile.

Amnesty derives from the word amnestia, meaning no remembering, obliviousness, intentional overlooking. Many deserters claim that the American government are the ones to whom forgiveness should go. Ultimately though, the power of decision will rest with the U.S. government, not the draft resistors.

Upwards of 60,000 draft resisters and military deserters are said to be in Canada and Sweden. 10,000 more men are in military prisons, while resisters and deserters underground in the U.S. number close to 80,000.

The largest contingent represent Vietnam veterans who received less than honorable discharges. This groups numbers 300,000 men.

Working diligently in the U.S. Congress are three representatives and one senator, each of whom has a somewhat different proposal involving amnesty.

Representative Bella Abzug of New York has proposed a blanket amnesty, meaning an unconditional amnesty with no alternative service. Similarly Senator Robert Taft Jr. has proposed amnesty for these "however misguided" young men who are "entitled to a second chance."

Edward Koch is a representative who believes in conditional amnesty. The New York City representative called for limited amnesty with two years of alternative service.

Peter Harrington, the Massachusetts Representative, has the most novel idea of the four. His bill would require any draft resister who returned home and faced prosecution.

Following on page 11 are pro and con arguments on the issue of amnesty. Read them both, then decide.

The Divine Miss M

Bette Midler comes on like the technicolor in the old Forties musicals: garish but irresistable. She is a phenonemon who has risen from the depths of performing in New York's Continental Baths to two sold-out New Year's Eve concerts at Philharmonic Hall in one year's time. Her story has been told and retold in recent editions of the Sunday New York Times and Rolling Stone and the long-awaited debut album has sold close to 200,000 copies in the two months it has been in release. With her Carmen Miranda tutti-fruiti hat and her ten-inch platforms she has shown herself to be more campy than any Joan Crawford movie. She flaunts tackiness, then knocks you dead with the richest, most expressive, most exciting voice since Streisand. There is nothing Bette can't sing; from the Andrew Sisters to Shangra-Las, from Ethel Waters to Patti Page, from Blues and Rock to Show and Pop tunes. Her album on Atlantic is a dazzling sampler of this range. She sings old Fifties (a panting, sensuous "Do You Want To Dance"), pop blues (the tender "Am I Blue?"), brilliant parodies (the driving "Leader of the Pack") and her technically superb Andrews Sister imitation ("Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy"), and rock (her bravura showpiece "Delta Dawn").

The album is adding huge numbers to the previously devoted elite who discovered Bette in the Baths a little more than a year ago. Bette came to the Continental Baths through a friend and her act consisted of her singing for $50 a night to predominantly gay male audience dressed only in towels. The word of her talent traveled quickly and enthusiastically. She soon became the Our Miss Brooks of the gay world. But the campiness was only part of it, she could sing as few could. Reporters soon attempted to scoop her, labeling her "trash with flash" when her legion of fans dubbed her "The Divine Miss M." Soon curious straights began appearing at the Continental and the baths soon became one of New York's innest havens. Next came the Tonight Show and Bette, dressed in the tackiest Forties dress imaginable, even had Ed McMahon wiped out on the carpet. The word of mouth and her subsequent appearance endeared her to greater numbers than would dare enter the depths of the baths. She began to tour and at clubs like Lennie's in Peabody began building a substantial audience. "You should hear her," friends told me; they spoke of Garland, Streisand, and Billy Holiday when they described her styling of a song and her holdover and audience. She was destined for a super-stardom that was almost predetermined: her mother named her for Miss Davis; but achieved it in a most unlikely way. Bette was born in Paterson, New Jersey, then moved to Hawaii when she was a child. She was miserable there, she simply waited and dreamed. Finally she landed a part in the film "Hawaii" which entailed a paid stay in Hollywood. She left the Pineapple factories and the clerical work behind and saved all her pennies while on studio contract for her final move to New York. Once settled in Manhattan she found it difficult to find a job, but finally landed in the chorus of "Fiddler On The Roof" for three years. When this wasn't enough, she began to sing and then came the baths.

It was a brilliant dramatic stroke for her to appear at midnight at the second of her New Year's Eve concerts dressed as the baby bringing in 1973, for she is certainly destined to be the performer of the year. But she also embodies the welcome trend in the arts towards both parody and self-parody (the same way the Busby Berkeley musicals did in the Thirties and Carmen Miranda did in the Forties). There's a hard, brassy put-on quality to Bette Midler, and also a soft, human underside, which makes her an infectious blend of low camp and high style.

A Hollow Victory?

The Supreme Court recently made a historical decision concerning abortion and it is a satisfying achievement for the women in the movement who have fought long and hard for such an opinion. But what does this opinion mean? What effect does it have in nullifying anti-abortion laws passed by state legislatures? How will the anti-abortionists react and what action will they take to have it changed? The war has just begun and, although this was a stunning victory, a long and bitter struggle looks to follow.

Arthur Mitchell and the Dance Company of Harlem will appear on campus next week under the auspices of Terry Schwartz and the Fine Arts Council. The group is the realization of dancer Arthur Mitchell's dream to establish workable outlet for black dancers in America. Mitchell burst upon the American dance scene as the only black dancer in the New York City Ballet some fifteen years ago, but, as he sardonically points out, he still remains the only black in that company. Hopefully the Dance Company of Harlem will change this. For more on the formation and evolution of the company, see pages sixteen and seventeen.

And Sinking Fast

How can a movie that stars Gene Hackman, Shelley Winters, Jack Albertson, Ernest Borgnine, Carol Lynley, Stella Stevens, Arthur O'Connell, and Roddy McDowall go wrong? Easy. Just have the escape plan of a group attempting to escape from a capsized ocean liner be muddled down with needless religious overtones. Can't adventure movies be fun anymore? "The Poseidon Adventure" is the film and it is currently one of the top grossing films in the country, although its only worthwhile moments are supplied by the obese Ms. Winters who, if you haven't heard, gained forty pounds for the role.

AMNESTY

Let us forget, not just forgive

George Washington. Abraham Lincoln. Richard Nixon. All have been the leader of our country at one time or another, and each has had to grapple with a moral question of devastating implications- should amnesty be granted to draft evaders?

Washington pardoned those who participated in the so-called Whiskey Rebellion in 1794, and just weeks before the Civil War ended, Lincoln granted amnesty to all Union deserters, with the stipulation they return to their units within 60 days and serve out their enlistment periods.

On January 31, 1973, Nixon made his position regarding amnesty crystal clear: "Amnesty means forgiveness. We cannot provide forgiveness for (the draft evaders). Those who served paid their price. Those who deserted must pay their price, and the price is not a junket in the Peace Corps . . . The price is a criminal penalty for disobeying the laws of the United States. . ."

Washington and Lincoln have been recognized by historians and two of the greatest Presidents in this country's history. Both men realized that the only way to completely heal the wounds of war was to completely forget, not just forgive, the deserters. Let us learn by their example.

The Vietnam War is unlike any other in history. Many Americans have long been against the war, but, because they were ineligible, they were not forced to back up their beliefs with their lives and careers. Why persecute those who because they were young and eligible were required to put their lives behind their convictions? Those now in jail or exile include some of the most intelligent, best educated and most passionately concerned men of our generation. Why should the country so willingly suffer such a drain on its talent and spirit?

The opponent of amnesty might argue about the individuals' right to decide which wars he will support. If he does have this right, can the United States survive? The Draft evaders and deserters claim that they are serving a higher law, than the Selective Service law- the law of morality. The principle that a man's conscience takes precedence over the dictates of his government was reinforced at the Nuremberg war crimes trials, which rejected the claims of Hitler's higher officials that they were only following orders. There are some laws, even in a democratic society, that are so unjust that any man of conscience cannot obey them. It is just as wrong to follow the wishes of a government which asks its citizens to fight in an immoral war as it is to obey a law enforcing segregation.

Perhaps 70,000 men evaded the war. What about the 3 million others who fought in it, 50,000 of whom died? Opponents of amnesty question whether would it would be fair to those men to forgive those who refused. This argument pits victims against victims. It is the Vietnam policy that has made casualties a:d mercenaries and POW's of an entire generation of young Americans. They are all casualties. But now one victim, the Vietnam dead or the Vietnam returnee, is used against another, the refugee.

No one is asking the mass of Vietnam veterans if they want their sacrifices used in this manner. The point is somehow missed that young veterans groups are the most active antiwar element on campuses today. Opponents might argue that members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars organization have already taken a direct stand against the granting of amnesty to draft evaders. However, on Christmas Eve, the 104th anniversary of Andrew Johnson's Universal Amnesty Proclamation of 1868, young veterans from New York, Pennsylvania, and North Carolina presented petitions for universal amnesty to the White House with nearly 35,000 signatures.

As to the argument that amnesty might lower the morale of our armed forces or discourage enlistments, history has shown that past amnesties have not had that effect. And granting amnesty would not encourage resistance to future wars on the assumption that forgiveness would be again forthcoming. After the Civil and Spanish wars there was no discernible impact. Hoping for amnesty is hardly an incentive for resisting the government during a war.

The war is over, and it is time to ask those who fled to return. We may have to beg.

Those who fled must pay the price

"On every ground I can think of," declared Vice President Spiro Agnew, "historical, legal, moral and practical -- the idea of general amnesty without penalty or alternative service is totally without merit."

Indeed it is. In August of 1972 President Nixon in a concurring statement spoke these words, It is my view, and I hold it very strongly, that those who chose to desert the United States or to break the law by dodging the draft have to pay the penalty for breaking the law and deserting the U.S. ... before they can obtain amnesty and pardon... I say pay a penalty, others paid their lives."

Amnesty should not be granted because:

1) DRAFT DODGERS AND DESERTERS HAVE BROKEN THE LAW.

Granting amnesty would undermine the law. It would be a step toward anarchy, chaos and a breakdown of all discipline so necessary for the survival of all democratic institutions.

"We cannot believe that the Congress," vocalized one outspoken statesman, "will ever decide that those who violated the law have the superior moral position to the President... if we establish this as the correct view, the day will arrive when there will be little further use of the Presidents, the courts and the Congress.

2) GRANTING AMNESTY WOULD ENCOURAGE RESISTANCE TO FUTURE WARS. With deserters and dodgers thinking along the lines of forthcoming amnesty, the problem of increased resistance is a real threat. Senator John Stennis, head of Senate Armed and Services committee fears that amnesty would set a precedent that would be remembered in future crises and would encourage mass evasion.

Selective Service director Curtis Tarr expressed his concern: "(Amnesty) would pave the way toward what, in effect, would become selective conscientious objection. Anyone could opt out of a war he didn't want to fight, secure in the belief that he would win amnesty later.

> "Draft resisters are lawbreakers. They must be treated as such."

3) GRANTING AMNESTY WOULD LOWER ARMY MORALE. A natural consequence of amnesty would be a lowering of morale in the armed forces. Imagine the feelings of men who have served against their wishes or the men who were drafted in recent years; they would be highly offended and resentful of the resisters getting off scott-free.

4) GRANTING AMNESTY WOULD BE DISRESPECTFUL TO THE DEAD. Many Americans have served and died in Vietnam. Granting amnesty would be irreverent to those Americans who were killed, wounded or made POW's. Many American families have suffered through the tragedy of a son killed in Vietnam. To these and many others an act of amnesty would be insolent.

5) GRANTING AMNESTY WOULD INCREASE DESERTION RATES. As of 1972 the desertion rate in the armed service reached 98,000 men. The belief is that with amnesty this rate would soar even higher.

6) AMNESTY WAS NOT GRANTED IN OUR PAST THREE WARS. In neither World War I nor World War II was amnesty special Christmas amnesties were granted, but there was no general amnesty.

Veteran groups (specifically veterans against foreign wars), the department of defense, conservative politicians and the President of the United States oppose amnesty.

What is it that they oppose? The Supreme Court stated, "(Amnesty) obliterates an offense before conviction, and in such cases (one whom is granted amnesty) stands before the law as though he had committed no offense. In fact, draft dodgers HAVE committed a crime; they have broken the law.

President Nixon spelled it out clearly, "Many Americans paid a very high price to serve their country... those who served paid their price. Those who deserted must pay their price. The price is a criminal penalty for disobeying the law of the United States."

Elegy To A Friend

By Carl Greenberg

"Johnny, We Hardly Knew Ye" by Kenneth P. O'Donnell and Dave Powers with Joe McCarthy
Little, Brown
434 pages, $8.95

The authors of this book were personal friends of John Kennedy from the start of his political career, his successful campaign for a congressional seat from Boston in 1946. It's nice that they get to add their memories of the late President to the dozens of other such books by the dozens of other people who had their own certain views of Kennedy.

There is not, however, much that is new (which is not surprising) although there has not been, in most of the other books, as much information as in this one about Kennedy's early days. There is competent discussion of Boston politics of the forties and of Kennedy's rise into and within the Senate until he suddenly became nationally known at the 1956 convention.

O'Donnell was Kennedy's appointment secretary during his administration, and of course, as certain people in appointed posts tend to be, he was a great deal more intimate with the President than his title would lead one to believe.

Powers had some rather vague title, I forget what it was, and there was no question of his official position. He was simply Kennedy's best friend. He swam with him every day and kept him company when Jackie was away with the children. He is now the Curator at the John F. Kennedy Memorial Library.

These men knew very nearly all of what was happening during the Kennedy administration, O'Donnell a bit more than Powers, and perhaps it is significant that there are no startling revelations in their book. It is a very simple, and, as a personal book should be, at times quite emotionally sensitive.

There is certainly a great deal more about Kennedy's administration in, say, Schlesinger's A Thousand Days, more about his election in White's The Making of the President, 1960, more about the Cuban Missile Crisis in Bobby Kennedy's Thirteen Days. "Johnny, We Hardly Knew Ye", of course, is not at all a political book. There are statements of politics in it, but they are not earthshaking and are fairly well based in the rest of the Kennedy literature. For instance, a point is made of making sure the reader knows that Kennedy had orders on the books to start bringing troops home from VietNam (we had about 16,000 there when Kennedy died). It seems unnecessary, since nobody can honestly blame Kennedy for the war, and though it may be a shame, we cannot give him credit for what he might have done. (One of the authors' favorite quotes is that of James Reston who said, "The heart of the Kennedy Legend is what might have been.")

If we do not see politics in detail, we certainly here about the Irish. There are Irish jokes, Irish songs, the book has an Irish green cover.

We are reminded that Kennedy had a very bad back and often was in terrible pain even while exuding confidence and charm during public appearances.

We are shown Lyndon Johnson as a rather silly and petty man, and the authors defend themselves against charges that they may not have been very hospitable to the man few people really wanted as Vice-President.

There is also a good deal of myth "shattering". The Kennedy father did not really buy any of John's elections, did not have such great control over him. Some legends most of us may never have even heard of are brought to light and extinguished. It is not true, for example, that after the older brother, Joe, (who was to be The politician of the family and fulfill the promise of a Kennedy President) was killed, that the family had a formal meeting to hand over the torch to John.

For those of us who can't quite believe that the man Kennedy beat so long ago is now the President and that he seems to be such a complete zero, it is interesting to hear what the authors say Kennedy's reaction was to him. Kennedy found him dull, did not respect him as a political adversary and, say the authors, "... paid little serious attention to anything he said."

One of the things that may separate this book from other Kennedy books is the frank admission that the authors, close friends as they were, do not claim to have really known Kennedy (as indicated by the title). Perhaps it is only our closest friends about whom we realise that we know very little. And that is the way O'Donnell and Powers seem to want us to remember him, as an unpretentious man and a friend.

The Fight Isn't Over

SUPREME COURT RULES AGAINST ANTI—ABORTION LAWS "WE MUSTN'T THINK THAT THE FIGHT IS OVER"

NEW YORK (LNS) —— "I'm thrilled," said Nancy Stern, a lawyer for the Center for Constitutional Rights, commenting on the January 22 Supreme Court decision on abortions. "(It's) a tribute to the coordinated efforts of women's organizations, women lawyers, and all women throughout this country."

In one of its most controversial decisions to date, the Supreme Court, by a vote of 7-2 ruled that all state laws that prohibit or restrict a woman's right to obtain an abortion during her first three months of pregnancy are unconstitutional. The decision will substantially affect abortion laws in all but four states.

Throughout the country, women and particularly women active in the women's movement–have voiced pleasure at the Court's decision. But the pleasure was guarded.

"The law is only the beginning of the struggle," said Susan Reverby who works with the Health Policy Advisory Center (Health/PAC), a group of people in New York who do research on the health industry. "We got a desegregatin law in 1954, and look where we are now."

The basics of the Court's decision are as follows:

For the first three months of pregnancy, the decision to have an abortion lies with the woman and her doctor, and the state cannot interfere.

For the next six months of pregnancy, a state may "regulate the abortion procedure in ways that are reasonably related to maternal health." (For instance, licensing, and ruling on who gives an abortion and where they can be given.)

And, for the last 10 weeks of pregnancy, any state may prohibit abortions if it wishes, except where they are necessary to preserve the life or health of the mother.

The first question that comes to mind is just how the individual states will be affected by the Court's decision. As a result of the Court's ruling, 46 states and the District of Columbia now have no abortion laws. Their legislatures must pass laws that conform to the Supreme Court's ruling. New York is the only state that fully complies with the ruling. Washington, Hawaii and Alaska conform in all details except one–they have residency requirements that where struck down by the decision.

Said one woman who works with a Women's Health Clinic in Somerville, Massachusetts, "We really don't know what the ruling means for Massachusetts right now. We'll continue to send women to New York for abortions until hospitals here open up. We've heard that the Church is already mounting a campaign to determine the state law."

The other influence, and the one that caused the most debate, was the 1972 opinion of U.S. District Judge Jon O. Newman that overturned Connecticut's anti-abortion statute. Newman ruled that a fetus is not a person until it is born and that it has no constitutional rights.

Students observe abortion information at an on campus display

Therefore, reasoned Newman, abortion "must remain a personal judgement, one that they (women) may follow in their personal lives and seek to persuade others to follow, but a judgement they may not impose upon others by force of law."

In addition to these legal precedents there where the relentless challenges to the abortion laws in many states–most often by women lawyers–on behalf of women groups. These challenges emphasized that women should be able to control their own bodies without interference from male-dominated courts or hospital boards. These court cases helped to achieve liberalized laws in 4 states and provided concrete examples of how liberal abortion statutes could work.

Anti-abortion advocates argued vociferously that a fetus is in fact a person and to allow a woman the right to an abortion is equal to murder.

The Supreme Court's decision does not entirely accept the "Abortion on Demand" position. Judge Blackman, in the majority opinion, states that "the word 'person' as used in the 14th Amendment, does not include the unborn." However, a state may acquire "at some point in time" of pregnancy, an interest in the "potential human life" that the fetus represents.

That "interest," as translated by the Court, means that a state is permitted to prohibit abortions during the last 10 weeks of pregnancy, if it wishes (the period during which the fetus is judged to be capable of surviving if born).

"I'm really quite surprised that the decision is as good as it is," said Nancy Stern, who has worked on several abortion cases in the courts. "For instance, I was expecting a flat 12 week limit on all abortions. This is really quite good, and reflects all the work of women who have been trying to educate the Courts on the subject of abortions."

"My feeling, and the feeling of most of the women's movement, is that abortion should not be a law at all. It should be strictly a medical issue–between a woman and her doctor. But this is a first step," said Susan Reverby.

"One thing I'm worried about," said Nancy Stern, "is that women will now say, 'OK, it's all over. Now I can get an abortion if I want to and that's that.'

"But there's a real possibility that a state pressured by anti-abortion forces will pass abortion laws, under the guise of protecting a woman's health, which will actually succeed in restricting her right to an abortion.

"For instance, a law could be made that would require women to stay in a hospital for 4 days after a saline abortion (usually done after the 4th month of pregnancy, a saline solution is injected into the uterus to stimulate contractions). Not only is that an unnecessary precauision, but it would also successfully limit the number of women who could have abortions because of hospital space.

Or, a law could force abortion clinics to satisfy impossibly rigid requirements in order to operate; or require a registered MD to perform abortions, rather than a well-trained intern–all of which will limit the number of women who will be able to get abortions."

"Women are going to have to pressure for quality," continued Stern, "A lot of schlock operators could pop up. Woman could, for instance, demand that their city set up a program to train doctors in abortion techniques–even give diploma when they walk into a doctor's office in order to protect themselves from low quality care.

"We're going to have to pressure to keep the price down too. If the law has any chance at all, women are immediately going to have to demand that doctors, hospitals and city governments start opening clinics to provide abortions for women who want them at reasonable prices."

One black woman from the New York-based Third World Women's Alliance raised another important point about the ruling. "We see plenty of problems with the law. Naturally, we support the right of a woman to have an abortion if she chooses. But the key word is choose. We know from bitter experience, that injustice in this country is not color-blind; that what is good for middle class white women is not always good for Third World Women and poor white women.

"The fact that black women, for instance, have in many cases been told that they must be sterilized before they can get welfare, makes us distrust how abortion will be used against us. Women should also be able to choose to have children. So Third World women are going to have to be vigilant."

Now, women across the country must watch and wait for the next step. One woman in New York summed up reactions to the Court's decision this way:

"You know, it's a lot like the peace settlement in Vietnam. You're happy at the prospects of peace–or in this case, the prospects of more liberalized abortion laws throughout the country. But it's really too early now to tell how it's all going to work out, and above all, we musn't think that the fight is over."

The Abortion Opponents: Who Are They!

"Our sentiments at this hour are saddened," said Edward J. Golden, chairman of the New York State Right to Life Committee, commenting on the Supreme Court's decision, "not only for those unborn infants who will never taste birth but also for our society that has soured with permissiveness."

The Right to Life Committee is a front group for the Catholic Church, traditionally the prime mover behind the anti-abortion ranks. In New York City, Right to Life's organizational headquarters are provided rent-free by the Archdiocese of New York, right next door to the chancery offices.

The Catholic Church's position has always been that life begins at the moment of conception. "Can we tear a child apart limb from limb because of accident of fate that he has not yet been born?" asked Dominick L. Di Carlo, a New York State legislator, during the heated debate over repeal of New York's liberal abortion law in May, 1972.

In addition to the Catholic Church (which should be distinguished from Catholic women–more than 50% of whom are in favor of abortion according to a Harris Poll in the summer of 1972.) There are those politicians who support the anti-abortion stance either out of their own religious learnings, or who woo the support of the church at election time. Most notable in the last category is Richard Nixon. On the eve of the New York State legislature's vote on repeal of the state's abortion law, he sent a letter to Cardinal Terrance Cooke that was carefully timed and clearly gratuitous since he had no control over the state's decision.

"You (and the anti-abortion forces) have my admiration, sympathy, and support...The unrestricted abortion policies now recommended by some Americans and the liberalized abortion policies in effect in some sections of the country seem to me impossible to reconcile with either our religious traditions or our Western heritage. One of the foundation stones of our society and civilization is the profound belief that human life, all human life is a precious commodity–not to be taken without the gravest of causes.

Yet in this great and good country of ours in recent years, the right to life of literally hundreds of thousands of unborn children has been destroyed–legally–but in my judgement without anything approaching adequate justification."

In April, 1971, when he ruled against a liberalized abortion law for all military personnel, Nixon stated: "I cannot square with my personal belief in the sanctity of human life–including the life of the yet unborn (with abortion on demand). For surely, the unborn have rights also, recognized in law, recognized even in principles expounded by the United Nations."

The Supreme Court's two dissenters on the abortion issue, William Rehnquist and Byron White, called the decision "an exercise of raw judicial power..by interposing a constitutional barrier to state efforts to protect human life and by investing mothers and doctors with constitutionally protected right to exterminate it."

"Apparently," wrote White in the dissenting opinion," (the Court) values the convenience of the pregnant mother more than the continued existence and development of the life or potential life which she carried."

Clearly a basic assumption behind the anti-abortion position is that women who do not wish to have a child are not "normal"; that they are veering dangerously away from the role of motherhood that a woman is supposed to assume. The Supreme Court dissenters used "whim" and "caprice" to describe a woman's motives for seeking an abortion.

Constance Cook, the New York State legislator who led the fight against repeal of the liberal abortion law, once described herself as "the only person in the Legislature who has born a child," and she said the liberalized abortion law meant "a freedom from fear you gentlemen will never know."

Reluctant Star Brockett To Perform

By Ed Bryant

There's no question that the jobs are available. It's just that Jaime doesn't feel like spending his entire time traveling and gigging. New Hampshire is a very pleasant place to live, a place where you can stay high with your friends; and Jaime likes to stay high. As a consequence, it's a long time between Jaime Brockett concerts.

Tonight there will be a Jaime Brockett concert in the Campus Center Auditorium at eight o'clock. Jaime, along with his backup which includes a bass player and a guitar, will demonstrate why the voters in Folk Forum Poll voted him the best male performer in folk music, ahead of such major talents as Gordon Lightfoot, Arlo Guthrie, and the rest.

It is unlikely that Jaime Brockett needs much introduction. Long before the record companies, and subsequently the public, were aware of his talent, Jaime was already well known around the New England area. He is the creator of the Boston Sound. Take a joint, inhale deeply, and listen to the sound your inhalation creates. You have just recreated the Boston Sound.

Jaime Brockett probably enjoys being known for the Boston Sound as much as he enjoys as much as anything. He likes to get high, as I said before. On his second album, entitled simply Jaime Brockett 2, he gives to both the Candy Man from Philly and pure clinical Coke as well as to P.T. Barnum and George Custer, both of whom are really Jaime Brockett.

One thing Jaime Brockett doesn't seem to enjoy is being a star. Many performers spend hours complaining to trade and fan magazine writers about how much they miss their privacy. This litany, chanted by so many entertainers, does not apply to Jaime Brockett. His is an alienation that runs much deeper, and rings much truer.

The most revealing glimpses of Jaime Brockett can be obtained from his album covers. Here he includes various poems, notes, and messages which display a contempt for much of American life. Contemptuous of authority, Brockett spent time in jail for refusing the draft. As he tells it, on the cover of the second album, in a poem entitled Third Option (Existance):

White River Junction --
I hid there once --
When I was an outlaw --
(Not knowing what I was before) --
My Body For Something --
Or Other --
The government was --
Herding Sheep (Lemmings) --
And Wanted To Use --

Another part of the album cover features an interview between Jaime Brockett and "Howard Holysuch," who knows "everything in the world, especially about music," and who writes for INTO THE DARK. In the interview, Brockett puts him on and then puts him down. Jaime Brockett doesn't like stupid questions; he dislikes them even more than most people do.

Brockett likes to try different personae. In addition to being Jaime, George Custer, and P.T. Barnum, he also finds room to be a pinsetter in an old bowling alley, a kamikaze pilot, and projectionist of his own movie. His rich fantasy life seems far more attractive to him than his life as a performer.

Not that he has always been so hard to convince, back when he didn't have the same freedom. A few years ago he used to play all the time, with people like Van Morrison, Joan Baez, Tom Rush, Joni Mitchell, J. Geils, Pete Seeger, Seals and Croft, and his good friend, Arlo Guthrie and Brockett particularly have appeared together frequently.

In addition to sharing billing, Arlo and Jaime both have shared the same albatross. Arlo spent a long time seeking acceptance for his ability as a folksinger; too many "fans" wouldn't let him forget for a minute that they knew he knew "Alice's Restaurant." Jaime Brockett is voted the best male performer in all of folk music and people still try to make him play one of his early talking blues song, "The U.S.S. Titanic." Arlo doesn't remember the words to "Alice's Restaurant," but there are still people who think he should play it every single day. As for Jaime and "Titanic", he says "It's like living in Rome for five years and seeing the same movie every day. It might be the best movie in the world, but it's still the same movie, and it's in Rome." Rome has a million wonders; Jaime Brockett has many more than one song.

There is no more pleasant experience for the casual follower of popular music than to have someone of local fame succeed nation-wide, with records and concert tours, and all the accompanying nonsense. It's always exciting to know that you were aware of something long before most. Picking McGovern in 1971 would be an example. For the music listener, the reward for his or her foresight comes whenever the performer in question plays before a local audience. Being charitable, he or she supposes that the audience is an old and loyal one, and plays better than he or she might on the road in front of strangers. Particularly a performer like Jaime Brockett, who says defiantly to the aforementioned Howard Holysuch, "I just play music for myself and my friends." Even up in New Hampsire, Jaime Brockett has Boston in his blood.

His poems are scattered with reference to local phenomena, including this poem called In Boston Airport:

Mingle rush afternoon --
The absurdity --
Of their medals --
Fresh from Nam --
Newton-Wellesley white --
Mississippi black --
All loved (Somehow) -- (Somewhere) --
(Somebody) --
All young --
All capable --
All fighting --
All Brothers --
All wrong --

There is a peculiar pride going around these days which is not wholly earned. This pride comes from the recognition of Boston in Life last summer as the place to go, and from Massachusetts being the only state and all that. This transient nonsense aside, Boston and Massachusetts are fortunate enough to occupy the Northeast Promontory of the United States, which is also called New England. Jaime Brockett, one of the leading alumni of Boston 1960's folk music era, is playing tonight for a local audience full of his friends. He'll be high and ready to play.

Congratulations

Looking Up From The Bottom

by Nathan Gorenstein

Once you get out of the plastic and steel newsrooms with their formica desk tops and pastel shades you run headlong into the ass-end of the newspaper business.

There the plastic and steel is sheetrock and the desk tops are rubber. The walls are silver wood panel and the typewriters are cast-offs.

It's a bureau. Ever pick up a big city daily and see the little fillers in the corners of the page:

The Rehoboth town council appropriated 26,000 dollars last to pave . . .

The bureaus do that. You might not want to read it but the folks in Rehoboth are charmed and the man on the layout desk is overjoyed it came in on the wire to fill that three inch hole he had a half-hour before press time.

Down 91 through the gap past the power station past the "scenic view" and onto the second Holyoke exit. 10 more miles southwest on 202 and you're in center of Westfield.

On a side street in an old storefront there's a bureau office of the Springfield newspapers. Those are the Daily News, Union and Sunday Republican.

Five people work there. Two reporters for the Daily News, one for the Union and two advertising secretaries. And a kid who fills in for the Union and Republican on weekends.

The two Daily News reporters have been there for 40 and 20 years. The man for the Union is in the hospital with double pneumonia.

Westfield, according to the 1970 cencus has 32,000 people in it. In 1960 it had 26,000. That's 19.5% more people. It's part of what the Federal government calls the "Springfield-Chicopee-Holyoke urbanized area." The average male in Westfield has 12.2 years of education. The average female has 12.3. The average salary is $8,188 and $3,506 respectively. One guess who gets the respect.

There are 7,786 families in Westfield. 823 make under $5,000. 26 make over $50,000. All those in the middle read the Springfield newspapers.

Most people who walk into the bureau stop at the front desk. They take out an ad, drop off a news release or come with a hot tip, or to work. Not too many other people come by. On a cold night the cops on the beat stop in to warm up and call home. Otherwise, the office is occupied by the reporters.

Chet Canterbury is the bureau chief. He's been with the Daily News for 40 years. All of that in Westfield.

Milt Reach has been there 20 years. He works for the Daily News too.

The Union man is in the hospital with double penumonia and was unavailable for comment.

The secretary smiled alot, ribbed Canterbury and tried to pick up the photographer.

Canterbury and Reach send to Springfield about 20 stories a day. They range from re-written press releases to out and out reporting assignments. They cover the basics of city reporting. Fire, police, city hall, city council and the school committee. After that it's anything. The unusual, the unlikely, the bizarre. You need that nose for news if you want to make a bureau work.

The Westfield office of the Springfield newspapers. Ever notice the stories from the towns you've never heard of?

Not everything they do sees the press room. Canterbury estimates only 50% of all they send down to Springfield, but God help the reporter who misses something big. Ever hear the story about the network newsman who was taking a piss when George Wallace was shot? A week later they sent him to Alaska to do a special on migrating penguins.

For a quiet town the Canterbury has had his share of harrassment. A month ago the Daily News ran a front page story on a Westfield Vietnam vet turned park commissioner who was arrested and charged with defacing a war monument, (with an anti-war slogan after being a gung-ho supporter on his return from that little hell) busting up the chapel in a town church and an arson charge. Well, after it ran in the News Canterbury got a call informing him that if he wasn't already he would soon be dead. I can reliably report Chet Canterbury is alive and well.

Canterbury, by his own admission is an old-time reporter. He believes bylines have ruined the newspaper business, giving reporters the leeway to write opinion instead of fact, and claim responsibility because their name is on it. He claims when bylines started becoming the thing to do in newspapers 20 years ago he and Reach resisted the trend.

He also believes you can write an objective story.

This reporter--who fills in on weekends--and Canterbury had a long debate over that little nugget, disagreeing only in their disagreement. Canterbury believes a reporter need make no judgement about what he puts down on paper, the order he puts it in, the facts he emphasizes, what he puts in and leaves out--perhaps not because he wants to but because that deadline is 15 minutes away and the editor in Springfield only wants two takes. All you have to do, he says, is write both sides and tell what you saw or what the people say they saw.

He believes in that the way a southern fundamentalist believes in heaven, and the touring revivalist.

Working on the weekends it's quiet. No one knows who you are, or even that you're there so there's no threats, no visits, and not much work, just boredom, until you learn to come with the Sunday Times.

You write the obits, the bain of every newsman's existence. On good newspapers everyone takes obits, on bad ones you sit in the corner writing them all day. There's a story about a girl who got a job with the Washington Post right out of college, a coup in the business for a recent college grad. Problem was she spent two years writing obits and marriage notices.

In Westfield the funeral directors call and tell you who has died since the day before. You follow the form and work with the information the funeral director sends you. Age, place of birth, cause of death, living relatives and a brief summary of the person's life. Obituaries are probably so popular because it gives everyone a piece of immortality. Microfilm forever.

You call the police, fire and state police barracks once or twice during the night, re-write any press releases that need it and generally kill time. For which you get $15 a night.

That's what you call breaking into the journalism business. Through the back door.

Mozarteum Orchestra Of Salzburg To Play At Smith

On Thursday, February 22, at 8:15 p.m., the Smith College Department of Music will present the fourth offering in the 1972-73 Concert Series: a concert by the Mozarteum Orchestra of Salzburg, under the direction of Leopold Hager.

The Mozarteum Orchestra of Salzburg is named for the famous private orchestra in the service of the Prince-Archibishops of Salzburg, with which Leopold Mozart and his son Wolfgang Amadeus, as well as Michael Haydn, were all associated at one time or another. The original orchestra was dissolved early in the 19th Century, and it was not until 1880 that the "Mozarteum" music school was established. This in due course gave birth to the "Mozarteum" orchestra, composed of teachers and graduates of the school, and members of the Cathedral Music Society's orchestra. The orchestra took part in the Mozart Festivals of those days, which eventually grew into the Salzburg Festival in its present form.

From the very earliest days of the Salzburg Festival, the Mozarteum Orchestra has taken part in the operatic performances as well as in the serenades, matinees, and concerts of church and chamber music. The Mozarteum Orchestra has been independent since 1938, and after the turmoil following World War II was reorganized to include exclusively professional musicians. In 1958, the City and Province of Salzburg took over the patronage of the orchestra.

For many years, the orchestra has given an annual series of symphony concerts in Salzburg, as well as taking part in operatic productions in the Salzburg Landestheater. It has also undertaken many successful tours of America, Africa, and Europe, its authoritative interpretations of the works of Mozart being hailed with great enthusiasm.

Leopold Hager has been chief conductor of the Mozarteum Orchestra since 1968. A native of Salzburg, he studied music at the Academy Mozarteum, as well as with Egon Kornath, J. N. David, and Bernhard Paumgartner, who was himself Director of the Mozarteum Orchestra after World War I. In 1962, he was appointed first conductor at the Landestheater in Linz. In 1964 he took over the same position at the Cologne Opera House, and the following year he became the General Music Director of the City of Freiburg/Breisgau. Since 1967, Mr. Hager has been leader of opera production in the Residenzhof at the Salzburg Festival, and has appeared regularly since 1968 as a guest conductor at the Bavarian State Opera House in Munich.

The program for the concert at Smith will, of course, be composed entirely of works by Mozart. The first piece will be Symphony No. 34 in C major (K.V. 338), and the next, the Divertimento No. 7 in D major (K.V. 205) for bassoon, two horns, and strings. Following the intermission, the orchestra will perform the Pasticcio-Klavierkonzert (K.V. 41), with Maestro Hager at the piano. The program will conclude with Symphony No. 38 in D major (Prague) (K.V. 504).

The Mozarteum Orchestra of Salzburg, an ensemble of 45 musicians, is the only authentic Mozart orchestra which programs all Mozart works.

Tickets may be obtained from the Smith College Department of Music by mail until February 12, or by telephone (584-2700, ext. 261). For those who wish a choice of location, the John M. Greene Hall Box Office will be open on Wednesday, February 21, and during the afternoon and evening of February 22.

Arthur Mitchell And The Dance Company of Harlem

"Why should not a black dancer be a ballet dancer?" he demanded.

"Ballet is the noble way of dancing; is nobility a virtue of the white dancer alone, and not of the black? Ballet is the classical theatre dance, but have you seen African dances--what could be more classic than a Watusi dancer? In the Dance Theater of Harlem we will prove that there is no difference, except color, between a black ballet dancer and a white ballet dancer."

The Negro dancer Arthur Mitchell was talking to me in the Church of the Master, an apt place in which to expound a gospel, and Mitchell, in immaculate white turtle-neck shirt, looked like a priest in mufti. No ordained man could be more passionately committed to a cause, with more evangelistic fervor than Mitchell for his black ballet. Three months earlier, Mitchell and his Associate Artistic Director, Karel Shook, had moved their faculty and students from temporary quarters in Greenwich Village to a home in the Church of the Master on Morningside Avenue, and the Dance Theater of Harlem was born as school and company. "It had to be in Harlem," says Mitchell. "The arts belong to the people and we must carry the arts to the people, not wait for the people to come to the arts. We are training black dancers for a black ballet. Where else would it be, if not in Harlem?"

Mitchell has found an ideal site, facing the park, adjacent to the new annex into which the Church of the Master will move, leaving the Dance Theater to occupy the old building as studios, work rooms and theatre--and when the theatre opens, converted from the church, Mitchell will have returned it to its oldest, profoundest function. Where a congregation sat, an audience will gather, for the Dance Theater of Harlem. In December, when I visited Mitchell, his Dance Theater had already assumed a magical, and blessed, aura for a great many persons in Harlem.

Currently, the classes and weekly lecture-performances are in one large studio. "When the Church moves into the annex, we will expand our schedules," said Mitchell. "I feel that everyone should be allowed to dance. A certain category of students, whose gifts make them suited to professional dance, will be developed for the company. But other students, young and adult, want to dance for personal pleasure. Besides, we need to develop American ballet audiences, while we are developing dancers and companies...Eventually, we will have total theatre here and our students will train in every aspect of it. We have projected classes in stage lighting, sewing for costumes, carpentry for making sets, and the Kodak people are planning to set up a lab to teach photography."

The Dance Theater came into being, Mitchell told me, through a Ford Foundation grant ($151,000 of which he must match) and the help of Lincoln Kerstein and George Balanchine, with whom he is closely associated in the New York City Ballet. "I went to them for help; who else? When you are hungry, you go to the hand that feeds you, right! And they are the best in our business, as is Betty Cage, the company manager, so who could better advise me on a ballet school and company? Lincoln is Chairman of our Board; Balanchine is Vice President." The Board, Mitchell mischievously remarks, is fully integrated among black and white members (some famed in the theatre— and in related arts: actress Cicely Tyson is an active Board member, singer Leontyne Price is on the Advisory Board. The school is integrated. "This school did not need to prove itself; only look at the faculty!" Under Mitchell, Shook, Mary Hinkson, Tanaquil Le Clercq, Thelma Hill, Pearl Reynolds, Mirielle Brianne and James Truitt, a human rainbow is being taught to dance. Students in skin shades ranging from alabaster through honeyed beiges and browns into the rare ebony stand at the barre as replica of innumerable other classes, the world over, in the danse D'ecole. Mitchell advocates ballet, the danse noble, as the professional dancer's primary and most important training. He has incorporated other forms (as is obvious in the faculty) because he believes that virtuoso training is the dance heritage of the 20th century American dancer.

"With our specialized training and approach to dance," he explained, "our dancers will command a repertory that includes the most sophisticated classicism, as in Balanchine ballets, and the 'primitive' forms. Our dancers will be complete ballet artists!"

Realistically, Mitchell prefers to discuss what he has accomplished, since September, rather than describe potentials, although they appear great.

"Arthur has already realized a great dream, for many of us," said Karel Shook. "It is the culmination of my own thirty years of work, in dozens of little studios, with black children. For the first time I am working with dancers who accept the stage as the goal of the classroom. For the first time, the black American ballet dancer can see ballet as a performing art."

Shook, a well-known dancer, choreographer, ballet master and teacher, left a lifetime of work in the United States in 1959, to become ballet master and choreographer of the Netherlands National Ballet. On a summer vacation in 1968, he was guest teacher at the Harlem School of the Arts, the project headed by Negro singer Dorothy Maynor where Mitchell headed the dance division. Shook and Mitchell are close friends, from years past when Mitchell studied under Shook (who then headed the ballet wing of the Katharine Dunham School). "I was immensely impressed by what Arthur was doing," said Shook, "all the more because he is one of my pupils. A teacher's only immortality is in his pupils. When one of them succeeds in accomplishing what Arthur has, then that is the teacher's reward!"

"Karel is truly important to this project," said Mitchell. "I have a very great commitment to the New York City Ballet; that is where Arthur Mitchell the danseur was made. For fifteen years I have worked under a genius, George Balanchine. That's where I got the authority, and the sense of the artist's personal dignity, without which I could not direct the Dance Theater of Harlem. When I have to leave it, I know that it is safe in Karel's hands – we share the same principles and aims.

"Each member of our project, in his or her way, is necessary to it! For the dancers, this is not a place to take class – it is their true home. They do everything that is needed, from answering the telephone to sweeping the floor, and they exist on pittances. Although our grant allows me to maintain a salaried company, they work more for love than money. Our scholarship students attend Professional Children's School, so that they can work at their ballet training six hours a day.

"Work never harmed anyone, providing the work was toward something you aspired to. Our dancers have every incentive to work hard, and they are lucky in having very fine teachers. I think that Karel Shook is one of the greatest ballet teachers alive. And we work in a very healthy atmosphere, psychologically. We are here only because we love ballet and because we love each other. The Man upstairs loves us, too! I have never seen a greater outpouring of love than is being given to the Dance Theater of Harlem. People come through that door and say to me: 'Arthur, what can we do to help?' Miraculously, God has sent us everyone we needed. Poor people come up to me and put a dollar in my hand and say: 'Use it for the Dance Thwatre.' All this makes me know that Harlem can be beautiful again. Harlem was once beautiful, a cultural magnet through the great jazz artists who influenced American dance and music so much! That is why I mean to involve the whole community in this project, to make one world for our dancers and the people out there in the streets of Harlem..."

Can he? Well, he has succeeded in everything to which he has turned his hand, not to mention a deft foot, since he broke upon us, a dark, dazzling star, in the New York City Ballet fifteen years ago. Mitchell is the first black dancer to become a principal artist in a wolrd famed ballet; he is a senior premier of America's greatest classical company. A virtuoso, with mercurial temperament, he has danced, choreographed, acted and sung through every theatrical media, from classical ballet and opera into musicals, in several countries. In 1968 he smashed the American telebision tabu against a black dancer partnering a white one, when he and Suzanne Farrell appeared on the "Tonight Show" ("and in living color, darling!"), in the sensuous pas de deux from Slaughter on Tenth Avenue, which Balanchine mounted on them in the New York City Ballet. Still with his alma mater, Mitchell worked in Brazil as premier danseur, choreographer and company director, of a company brought into being for him by a Brazalian millionaire. "But here "two blocks from where I was born!"

What has made Arthur run, or dance, out of the ghetto into the white ballet and back to the ghetto, again? Arthur Adam Mitchell's childhood was classic for his race, in his time and place. The eldest of five children, of an absent father and an over-worked mother, he went to work early ("as soon as I could carry a shoe-shine box") and depended on himself for everything, even his entertainment. "I was the main support of our family before I was into my teens, but I always loved to sing and dance. Those were the only recreations of poor people, before TV!" At ten, his elders in a Police Athletic Glee Club urged him to seek training but no real encouragement was given him until his junior high school guidance teacher suggested he try for a scholarship at the School of Performing Arts. Mitchell throws back his handsome head and shouts with laughter at the memory. "All the kids had prepared nice little dances but I had guts! I went on in a routine an old vaudeville man, Tom Nip, taught me: Steppin Out With My Baby. The SPA judges certainly didn't expect it. I stunned them!" They gave him a scholarship.

He was no sooner a student than he was a bona fide dancer, in the modern dance troupes of Natanya Neumann and Shirley Broughton, and in his senior year went to Paris in a revival of the Gertrude Stein-Virgil Thomson opera Four Saints in Three Acts. On his return home, he was faced with the most crucial decision of his eighteen years. He was offered a scholarship to Bennington College, then the arbiter of modern dance training, where he would have been the first male student. And Lincoln Kirstein, a director of SPA, offered him a scholarship to study ballet at the School of American Ballet, under a faculty that was a facsimile of the Russian Imperial Ballet School.

"Like every black student, I had been shoved into modern dance class. I didn't know much about ballet, had never thought of becoming a danseur. Lincoln put it to me with brutal frankness. He told me I would have to work twice as hard as anyone in my class, to prove that I could meet the requirements. And that if I hoped to get into a company like New York City Ballet I would have to recognize how high the standards were. So I took the challenge!"

He continued to perform in modern idiom and was in Europe with the John Butler Company in 1955, when the New York City Ballet wired him an invitation to join the company, as soloist, replacing Jacques D'Amboise (who had gone to Hollywood) in Western Symphony. A casting novelty, perhaps, in the first season, Mitchell very soon demanded respect as the danseur. In 1957 he created a role, which Balanchine choreographed for him, in Agon, the most precedent-shattering classical work of the era. Since then, Mitchell has dazzled American, European and Russian audiences, partnering every major ballerina in the New York City Ballet from Diana Adams to Suzanne Farrell.

Sometimes, his very presence (as the Dark Angel in Balanchine's Orpheus) has infused a singular quality; often, he has given a ballet and a ballerina new dimensions, as in John Taras' Piege de Lumiere, with Maria Tallchief. On occasion, Mitchell's personal brillance has ignited his company, and won for it tumultuous applause, as in Moscow with Allegra Kent, and, more recently, in Paris with Suzanne Farrell.

Mitchell candidly admits that he likes to be first, likes to create roles, as he has done in Agon, and, an incomparable Puck, in A Midsummer Night's Dream. He delighted in appearing in Bugaku and Metastaseis & Pithoprakta because, he says, "I love Balanchina's choroegraphy; it is beautiful and difficult." Always, he has leaped to meet a challenge. It matters, more than he will freely admit, that he has been cast in Allegro Brilliante, Divertimento, and The Four Temperaments, and that he, unlike the majority of black American dancers, is not relegated to jazz roles. He may have longed, especially after dancing the lead, most beautifully, in Afternoon of a Faun, to become another Apollo, to take part in Liebeslieder Walzer, to partner the Sugar Plum Fairy...But he is not pining now. Having brought a black ballet school and company into existence, Willie Mae Mitchell's eldest is on top of his world. And the driving ambition that lifted Arthur Mitchell to the highest ranks of his profession is now urging the Harlem dancers.

His extraordinary vitality, his engagingly sunny disposition, have always made Mitchell an Ariel, to me. I was not meeting a new Mitchell, serious, almost patriarchal, leader of a devoted flock, and, it was very obvious, a growing band of astute admirers. The Wednesday "Open House" lecture-performances, begun to lure the Harlem community into the Dance Theater, have grown so popular (especially with neighborhood schools) that Mitchell is now obliged to carefully schedule them. Here, two worlds meet – as in December when, while infants from a Head Start program sat on the floor of the gallery, chairs accommodated, among others, the dowager Mrs. Gimbel, Mrs. Dorothy Hammerstein, actress Benay Venuta, and director (The Damned) Luchino Visconti.

Mitchell is on easy terms with the elite of society and theatre, and he says: "I am not ashamed to brag about the Dance Theater of Harlem, and I love to show it off! We already have good reviews, from appearances we have made (reported monthly in Dance Magazine), and I have been asked to stage a season. But we are not ready for a proper season yet; when we are, I hope to have it in our own theatre."

"There is only one danger, as I see it," said Mitchell soberly, "and that is the temptation to move too fast. I have to resist it all the time, from well-meaning people to whom 'black is beautiful.' For us, it is Ballet that is beautiful! I will never let this company capitalize on its uniqueness as a 'black' company. It must stand as a ballet company. My standards are very high. Look what I belong to: the New York City Ballet! I will not lower my standards, or betray the standards of the people who made Arthur Mitchell the ballet artist. I am very demanding of my dancers but they want high standards, because this is their company..it was not formed to feed one dancer's fat ego. Fortunately, we have many professional dancers, who set a good example for the younger ones.

"The professional dancers in the company came to me of their own accord, when they heard that the Dance Theater was forming, from American and European companies, where they felt themselves to be 'novelties,' without a chance of performing in real repertoire. Some of them had given up ballet altogether and gone into other forms of theatre. They were like fingers without a hand; now we have the hand...

"A certain success has come to us very early, and that makes us aspire to greater things. White dancers have asked to join us and I tell them we must first prove that there are black ballet dancers; when we are accepted, then we will integrate the company, as we have integrated the school. We have to prove beyond the shadow of a doubt that it is talent and training, not color, that makes a ballet dancer."

The irrepressible Mitchell humor wells up, in explosive laughter, but now and then there is somber regret for black dancers "wasted in American ballet, because they never had a chance to prove themselves as artists."

"I have taught for a long time," mused Mitchell, "at Dunham's for Karel, at the Jones-Haywood School in Washington, D.C. (which has a big Negro enrollment) at the Harlem School of the Arts, before teaching in our own school. I know that little black kids, from the worst slums in this country, love ballet; it's the first order and beauty to come into their lives. And I believe that there are black dancers with the physique, temperament and stamina and everything else it takes to produce what we call the 'born' ballet dancer. The babies from the Head Start program will come to us when they are old enough, because we are here, right where they live in Harlem. For now, my chief concern is with the older dancers, because for them this is the last chance, while their bodies are still pliable, to be trained in ballet. We are breaking the rules in this school because we have to...we are making dancers in much less time than the book tells you it takes. When people tell me it can't be done, I invite them here, to show them dancers performing in my ballets who, in any other school in the country, would still be standing facing the barre. I feel that if we can put men on the moon, then we can make ballet dancers, because ballet is a man-made art. There are 22 million black Americans and I believe that in 11% of our population there is enormous potential for ballet dancers. Until now, no one has gone looking for them and when they themselves tried to become ballet artists they were told they had no opportunity in America.

"The biggest problem for the black American ballet dancer has been a lack of identity. People have to identify with something if they aspire to it! I would see black children at the ballet and hear them say: 'But there are no black people in it!' and mothers would try to comfort their kids by saying: 'O, wait!One will be coming out soon...' But I was the first black dancer in New York City Ballet in 1955 and fifteen years later I am still the only one. When I was teaching in Washington I encouraged a marvelously talented boy, Sylvester Campbell, but he could not get work at home, so he went to Europe--and in the Netherlands Ballet he was cast in premier roles, Albrecht in Giselle and Prince Siegfried in Swan Lake. If Swan Lake was the only classical ballet, it would prove that there are Black Swans! What is there in the terminology that implies that a 'ballerina' and a 'danseur noble' must be white in color? It's talent and training, not the shade of your skin, that makes a ballet dancer!"

Before we parted, Mitchell told me: "I helped organize an interracial dance company with Paul Taylor and others for a Spoleto Festival once, and I tried to take a black American company to participate in the first World Festival of Negro Arts in Senegal, in 1966, but we could not raise the money for the trip. After Martin Luther King was assassinated, and there were all the eulogies, I asked myself: Arthur Mitchell, what can you do? When you pay homage you do the thing you do best: if you make music, you beat your drum, if you are a singer, you sing; if you are a dancer, you dance.

"Once I made up my mind to it, all it needed was money, work, –and love, to get the Dance Theater of Harlem started. We are so very lucky, not only in our grant, and the help individuals have given us, but in the dedication we have inspired. Tanaquil Le Clercq, who had never taught before, came to work with us. Miracles keep happening! When I was teaching at the Harlem School of the Arts (which Mitchell left, when his project became too big to be contained in another organization), one day a substitute pianist came to us. As soon as I heard her play I cried: 'Who are You? Where have you come from?' (ejaculations that have been made to Tania Leon since she arrived from Cuba) and I found that she was an accomplished musician and composer. Now Tania is one of us and my ballet Tones is set to her original score.

"So much love and work have gone into starting the Dance Theater of Harlem that, with God's help, it will succeed. We have to prove that a black ballet school and a black ballet company are the equal of the best of their kind, anywhere in the world. I am giving the dancers the same chance Kirstein and Balanchine gave me, and on exactly the same terms: they have to match, and maybe surpass, the standards set for white ballet dancers."

I left Arthur Mitchell standing in the doorway of the Church of the Master, which will soon be the entrance to the Dance Theater of Harlem. And I thought: if he is right, and he may well be, this is the beginning of a dark and brilliant splendor in American ballet.

Mothers

By Mike Kostek

In the beginning pesky young Frank Zappa did a lot of things. He made greasy music. He made pretty music. He made ugly music. He made all kinds of music. Reels and reels of it. What Frank would do then was to slice up all these different reels of different music and patch them together into one organic hole. Yes, and what we'd get would be integrated, demonic platters of every type of music and noise, such as Uncle Meat, Lumpy Gravy, Absolutely Free, Freak Out, We're Only In It For The Money and Weasels Ripped My Flesh. Somewhere between 1969 and 1970 Frank stopped making these smorgasbord records and began putting out albums featuring but one aspect of his music. Some were vocalized rock: Live At Fillmore, Just Another Band From L.A.; some were instrumentalized rock: Burnt Weenie Sandwich, Hot Rats; some jazz: King Kong, Waka/Jawaka; and some were various combinations that didn't have the internal construction of earlier albums: 200 Motels, Chunga's Revenge.

Grand Wazoo is a further refinement and exploration of the smooth 'jazz' and sleek 'rock' first found on Waka/Jawaka. The music on these two albums is strikingly different from Just Another Band's raunchy sound. Instead of one set cast of six characters throughout, Grand Wazoo features some twenty or so musicians drifting through these sessions, all of whom, except for Don Preston, Aynsley Dunbar and George Duke, have never carried the Mothers' mantel before. Many of these people played on Waka/Jawaka, and are responsible for that 'big band sound' and expansive woodwind section.

Grand Wazoo starts off beautifully with a creeping, crawling, dusky intro subdued by a vocal sneaking over the murky music. "For Calvin (And His Next Two Hitchhikers)" features the same type of strange, fragmented lyric found in "It Just Might Be A One-Shot Deal" (from Waka/Jawaka):

"Where did they go?
When did they come from?
What has become of them now?
How much was the leakage from the drain in the night?
And who are those dudes in the back seat of Calvin's car?
Where did they go when they got off the car?
Did they go get a sandwich
And eat in the dark?"

Frank's big band swings into action and runs through some strange changes (as to be expected). While it all is far from being straight, it remains as the most respectable sounding combo Frank has ever assembled (No, he didn't assemble the orchestras he used in the past). However, the changes Frank takes them through assure you that it's Frank still playing his expensive Comedy Music. Beautiful.

"The Grand Wazoo" fits into Frank's usual Long Piece Formula, in which the basic theme is stated, then restated a different way, and then the band is off and running through 13:34 of solos. Here, Frank starts off by playing one of his feisty guitar solos, then Tony Duran gets in a short shot bottleneck guitar solo followed by a subdued Bill Byers trombone solo. In between solos the band forms bizarre bridges leading to the next solo, which happens to be a muted trumpet spot by Sal Marquez. The band then plays together for a few bars, developing the theme further before macrobiotic Don Preston gets to insert some precise mini-moog ramblings. Sal Marquez gets in a few more "Waka/Jawaka" trumpet toots and then side one is over. Fine, fine side.

It's obvious that Frank's long pieces like "The Grand Wazoo" depend in large part on how good the solos are, and while most of the solos aren't divinely inspired, they all are solid and interesting. Perhaps Frank just wanted to get down one long cut without a lot of obvious novelties.

Side two begins with Frank's latest single release, "Cleetus Awreetus - Awrightus" b/w "Eat That Question". "Cleetus" is a fine little dummy vocal-instrumental featuring a superlative sax break by Ernie Watts whose squealing, reversing solo is the best on the record.

"Eat That Question" begins with a beautiful electric piano duest by George Duke and himself. Out of each speaker come the same notes from two distinct tracks, the only difference between them being that on one side he holds the vibrato on one note while on the other speaker you hear the note drift away. Then he shifts to the other speaker to hold the next vibrato note, and so on, back and forth, making for a very strange and exquisite up and-down effect. Frank gets in a good, heavy echo guitar solo on this spacy rocker. Either of these cuts might have permanently deformed Top 40 had they gotten any airplay.

"Blessed Relief" is reminiscent of "Toads Of The Short Forest" (Weasels) in its feel, but has a dash more of class, with Sal Marquez's samba trumpet. Dare I say it? No. (It's pretty mellow in the middle)

Grand Wazoo is mature music, played by an excellent assortment of sober Mothers. I say mature. I mean acceptable. Accessable. Ten years from now I'll still be putting this on.

McCoy Tyner

McCoy Tyner
"Sahara"
(Milestone MSP 9039)

By Gary Gomes

Tyner's contribution to the music of the past decade - a contribution that is still expanding - should make it impossible for any to deny his genius – all those who listen, that is...

For those of you who might find Tyner's name familiar but can not place it – well, he was the pianist in the John Coltrane Quartet. Coltrane's genius is all but readily apparent. The Coltrane group that Tyner played in often had Eric Dolphy before HIS untimely death in 1964, and Elvin Jones, rhythmic innovator. That group, with Coltrane pushing both his soprano and tenor saxophones to outer ranges, Jones' adding drum dimensions that were seldom dreamt of, Jimmy Garrison, pushing the group with his solid and inventive bass playing, and Tyner throwing around incredible sparkles from the piano keys, is really something to hear. After changing the personnel around a bit (Raschied Ali for Elvin Jones; Pharaoh Sanders on tenor sax, as an addition, and Alice (McLeod) Coltrane on piano), he developed into a wide reaching, all-encompassing musician, leaving a legacy of art which is near unparallelled in music.

Tyner is more than due credit for the groundbreaking he did on piano. Cecil Taylor is probably the only contemporary pianist I've heard surpass Tyner for energy and speed. In addition, Tyner is one of the few pianists about that can force musicians out of comfortable patterns, due to his own large and expansive style of playing. When you see him live, you have to gape in awe at the energy and inventiveness that Tyner evokes from his instrument.

Be that as it may, Tyner's new album, "Sahara", is a gem. It's very folk-oriented – that is, not in the American "folkie" tradition, but rather in the context that it uses an orientation to melodic intervals (such as the pentatonic scale - try running your hands over the black keys of the piano sometime, to see what I mean). The group has a very reliable Sonny Fortune on saxophones and flutes; Calvin Hill pushes well on acoustic bass. However, one of the joys of this album is hearing Alphonse Mouzon's incredible eruptions from the drums.

The album starts off with the 9 minute "Ebony Queen, dedicated to McCoy's wife Aisha. A grand and majestic opening, the melody stated and restated by Tyner, with Mouzon scurrying about in the background. Fortune rounds it up by taking the melody line, developing it into a searing solo with Tyner adding forceful comments in the background. Then Tyner comes in with a rumbling, earflipping solo. Back home again.

Two other songs "A Prayer for My Family" and "Valley of Life" are primarily solo ventures, the former featuring Tyner on piano, beautiful yet abrupt; flowing and turbulent at the same time. "Valley" again features Tyner, this time on a "koto", a Japanese instrument that Pharoah Sanders plays a larger version of. The sound gives on the impression of open air while the clear flute of Sonny Fortune adds to that impression.

"Rebirth", the cut that closes side one, is an explosive, driving piece, accentuated by Mouzon's propulsive drumming (by the way, Mouzon is a refugee from "Weather Report - -he is truly amazing to watch in action, and he often plays so ferociously that he splinters his sticks – or at least he did here at UMass last year, and in the Jazz Workshop in Boston, a few weeks ago). The excitement generated by the four players is amazing.

"Sahara", is, as its title implies, is a long (23:28), expansive piece that begins with a trumpet cry from Mouzon, augmented by various percussion devices and flutes, which then ripple into a long development of the theme. The theme itself has a lyrical quality to it – somewhat reminiscent of the first "My Favourite Things" from Coltrane's "Giant Steps" LP. Tyner isn't Coltrane however, and the effect becomes piercing in intensity, but it is Tyner's sort of flowing stridency which colours the entire side. The track seems to go by faster than its allotted length, what with Fortune's sax burning, Calvin Hill's bass solo showing originality and speed, and Alphonse Mouzon's lashing and biting attack on the drums.

Tyner's conception of the piano is big and full-bodied, leaving the listener with the impression of suspended space at some times, and speeded up intensity at other times (and come to think of it those two ideas aren't really that far apart), and he and Mouzon work well together. The melodies are sharply pronounced and clear. The master pianist has influenced many others (Steve Winwood's piano playing – in spots – reminds me of Tyner. Lonnie L. Smith – Sanders' current pianist – also owes a great deal to Tyner. And the list goes on and on...).

The album "Sahara" is fine stuff, lyrically powerful and rhythmically steady, though explosive at points.

Once long ago, a musician named Edgar Varese wrote a composition entitled "Deserts" which he claimed did not necessarily envision physical deserts but the deserts within a person's soul. McCoy Tyner's meaning behind "Sahara" is pretty much the same as Varese's explanation behind deserts, except for one major exception – the expanse Tyner envisions is not loneliness, but open-ended possibilities which are open to human being – if they do have the heart which is as great as a seemingly endless expanse - such as "Sahara".

Grateful Dead

(Europe '72 – The Grateful Dead (Warner Bros. Records))

By Steve Feld

I. The Dead Dichotomy

Introducing a paradox known as the Dead Dichotomy whereby the solid mass of Dead Heads becomes divided and splits into two, creating two steadfastly distinct schools of musical thought that clash with a resounding dissonance. The first side of the argument is held by the concert-goers who'll swear by their warped copies of Live Dead that the group does their best work in concert. Any one of these mind-boggling shows, in addition to a Quaalude with wine, or a chemical facsimile, can easily qualify for the "ultimate trip." "What could possibly be more outta sight than this new album?", asks the travelling Dead freak, "two hours of live Dead on three ever-lovin' records. Especially because The Grateful Dead, the group's live three-record set of last year (which, incidentally, Jerry Garcia wanted to call Skullfuck; record company wouldn't allow it!) is just beginning to wear a little thin. Europe '72? Gimme, gimme, it's good for my head."

Side number two of the Dead Dichotomy claims the opposite approach. This type of species will pledge on his brand-new copy of Workingman's Dead (his warped copy has been replaced with the money he saved not goint to their concert) that studio Dead is the best Dead. He will exalt in the inherent beauty that these studio recordings possess and will admit to Gracia being the best Dead record since American Beauty. "Why this live Dead mess?" he asks, "The records are of such poor quality, they sound like bootlegs. The group's singing has never been very precise; in the studio they could work on their harmonies, get a better sound. These live recordings", he hangs his head, lump in his throat, "they don't do the Dead or their fine material justice."

If you haven't guessed by now, I'm a staunch member of the latter legion. I've never experienced firsthand the overwhelming true enlightenment of a Grateful Dead concert, as my yawns for Live Dead and scowls for The Grateful Dead can very well testify. It is a fact, though, with which no one is willing to disagree with: The Grateful Dead are one of the best bands performing today. But I like my Dead in the can, where they are at optimum efficiency, where they don't sound like an AM transistor radio. Modern man, dammit, has developed the capabilities to record a concert with maximum fidelity. This has been proven with the Stones' Ya-Ya's album and, recently, with The Bands' Rock of Ages. So why does the Dead end up sounding like they're coming through a telephone receiver? This is their third live album, and every one has a trashy far-away sound, with the drums especially sounding like tin cans. Optimum efficiency?

This is important for the Grateful Dead. Garcia is the only member who can sing with any emotion, and when he does it leaves Bob Weir (ol' Iron Pipes) for harmonies. Check the studio albums, Workingman's Dead and American Beauty. It has Garcia's over-dubbed harmonies everywhere. This is the only way the Dead can be known as a vocal group – in the studio. In concert, they just don't make it. It hinders the group and their songs.

II. Europe '72

The new album – Europe '72 – is an extremely fine one, the recorded results of their European tour last spring. The group's first time overseas, they covered six countries -- England, Denmark, Germany, France, the Netherlands, and Luxembourg. The recordings themselves originate from London, Amsterdam, Paris and Copenhagen. The Dead entourage consisted of forty-three people, ranging from the roadies to the wives to the management. First reports of the album had it aptly titled 'Overseas/Or Europe on Five Thousand Dollars a Day, but the Dead, prefering a simplistic documentarial title over a sensationalized one, settled for Europe '72. A marathon three-record set, it comes with a handsomely photographed booklet and the usual trippy stoned-out graphics that embody every Dead offering. Seventeen songs in all, there are seven oldies already recorded by the group, including extended versions of "Morning Dew", "Sugar Magnolia" and a rock-em sock-em thirteen-minute performance of "Truckin".

All spiteful and antagonistic feelings to the contrary, this is the first live Dead record I've ever enjoyed. While Live Dead proved to be a group ego trip, and The Grateful Dead, three-fourths filled with indiscriminate and unimpressive songs, Europe '72 happily possesses none of these drawbacks. Jerry Garcia is upfront again - the brain as well as the braun. His four new songs, written with underrated lyricist Robert Hunter, follow in the fine tradition of "Uncle John's Band" and "Casey Jones". They're all great - "He's Gone" (written for Duane Allman), "Brown-Eyed Woman" (not to be confused with Van Morrison's "Brown-Eyed Girl"), "Ramble On Rose" and "Tennessee Jed". Many sound uncannily like the Band (and "Get Up Jake" could fit in easily among them).

Not to forget Ron (Pigpen) McKernan who sings two barrelhouse beer-belly blues. Pigpen's vocals are similar to Ringo's with the Beatles, comparatively few and something special we've come to expect. "Mr. Charlie" especially resembles the Beatles doing "Boys" – same beat and call-response vocal pattern. Garcia-Weir-Lesh pull a McCartney-Lennon-Harrison on back-ups with what is essentially the same song. His companion piece on the record is an Elmore James song, "Hurts Me Too", where he plays organ. Keyboard dominance is given, however, to the group's latest addition, Keith Godchaux's tingling piano.

Bob Weir comes through (hah!) with some style on his new song "Jack Straw", along with the finest guitar playing he's ever done. Phil Lesh's bass playing is noteworthy throughout, but unique on "Truckin'", the song where everything comes together. The group's female back-up vocalist Donna Godchaux, wife of Keith, shines on "Sugar Magnolia".

Europe '72 is the group's best live album, which is an accomplishment of sorts. What makes it so is the new material, firstly, with everything else subservient. The album is one worth having but nevertheless, a plaintive request for some studio recording follows.

Starvation City

By Fred Beaver

Were you one of the hapless thousands who turned out for James Montgomery last Saturday? Did you get off? Not on the show, that was predictably great, but how great was the 45-minute squash getting in? My retinue pulled up at the Union about twenty minutes to showtime, expecting a line out to the steps or so, and there it was, but with a difference; it was so THICK it choked the lobby. The first floor was solid with anxious, frustrated people trying to spend their money on tickets. If everyone there got half a ticket, some of us would still have been empty-handed. There were no advance sales because advances on the last concert had been disappointing (this makes sense?), so we stood like a sweaty carpet of hairy balls with center-parts (see accompanying photo) in the tightest bunch since Steve Miller played the Cage, like pigs in a poke, like weenies in the collegiate bun, like unknowns in a breadbox we were bigger than. As I carved my way through a wall of human flesh, a single thought occupied me: shit... shit... shit... it seemed right at the time.

Had not my doll been holding my place for an hour and a quarter, I would have drifted to a choice spot behind a post in the next room or something, because the Ballroom itself was FULL, and they were still filing in like donkeys behind my back. Naturally the house was oversold; a choice capper on a prelude of bummers. A late show was hastily declared to sooth the savaged expectations outside, but it didn't do much for the bad vibrationists inside who had forked over their big bucks and wanted to settle in and drink and scratch and shuffle all night long.

Great numbers of these kids showed up from all over the surrounding area, which meant that equally great numbers of Aggies got the Shunt of the Unjust and vanished into the night. Meanwhile, perservering ticket holders were wondering if they were having a better time themselves. Hot, stale air was rising off a thousand dewy carcasses as the spicy smoke from a series of satisfying Pavolvian joints began to collect in a lowering cloud-vault overhead. It happens every time, and every time I wonder why. It's not like you have to smoke dope at concerts, guys, it's just a sort of a lame, aimless custom we have, like dips before dinner. Be creative. Go straight. Veteran heads in the audience, it's true you're better behaved than drunks, but at least someone who wraps himself around a bottle isn't releasing his favorite chemical into the atmosphere to be shared by everything that breathes. I wouldn't waste a tear if the last patch of hemp on earth turned to dacron and sank into the ground. We can make our rope of something else, as well as our dreams. Fuck you too.

So we all sat for awhile, thinking our thoughts while our undercarriages cried out for blood, and then it was time for the first band. They called themselves Sageworth and that tells just about the whole story, ladies and gentlemen. They were a sort of jellyfish country-rock dance band, condemned to a lifetime of bar-spots and opening shows for better grops. This is not to say they don't have balls of a sort. Lead vocals were by a pint-sized scrappy-looking female in balding velvet pants whose presence and voice compare to Joplin's, and who would be smart to grab the drummer and hire some guitars who can write. The melody instruments were all good musicians and so forth but so Very derivative. They write small-time tunes about rising suns going down the road, which is sort of a doomed genre from the start. No flash, no direction; for some reason they kept losing the meter and looking at each other. They were trying real heard, but whatever they needed, they didn't have it.

On the other hand James Montgomery and his band had it to spare. They invite comparison with J. Geils because they too are a no-nonsense crowd-whipping group from Boston with traditional roots and grease overtones. At this time, its easy enough to tell why J. Geils is rolling in dough and James M. isn't. It's mostly because James is outclassed in musicianship and showmanship. Where harmonica is concerned, he is not no Magic Dick, nor is Speedy Pete the guitar player a J. Geils, nor do they get half so craza as the immaculate Mr. Wolf. But this is the kind of stuff that comes with age, a bank account, and large halls full of screaming people, so because the Montgomery band is pro-minded and original I expect them to peak fast, and I look forward to heir first album which is somewhere in the pipe between the studio and the store at this very moment.

Back at the Ballroom they cooked good-shape; as low-key as they are, their music rolls on like its steam-engine contemporaries. Vintage electric blues and Boston hybrid vigor had us on our feet from start to finish, and everytime James slipped in a Boston place-name we responded like patted dogs.

It Would Be Great On TV

by Bob Nesti

written for the screen by Sterling Silliphant, from a novel by Paul Gallico; directed by Richard Neame; with Shelley Winters, Gene Hackman, Ernest Borgnine, Red Buttons, Roddy McDowall, Jack Albertson, Carol Lynley, Pamela Sue Martin, Stella Stevens, and Eric Shea.

The Poseidon Adventure is an all-star adventure epic brimming with allegorical nonsense and trashy dialogue. It's Dinner At Eight capsized and vulgarized. Vincent Canby describes these catastrophe films as "Ark films", but this one represents a hybrid form of recent years. Like Airport and Skyjacked its derivitive base are those glossy, episodic, star-filled entertainments of the Thirties. In the Sixties they were grafted with the straight adventure epic. Poseidon's producer Irwin Allen pioneered this sub genre with the enjoyable Voyage To The Bottom Of The Sea and Fantastic Voyage, but here the formula has been heavily influenced by the pretentiousness of Airport. You question why adventure movies must have a message--can't they simply be fun on their own terms? This turn for the worse ruins the keen sense of entertainment found in the Voyage films. You never once thought the submarine in Voyage To The Bottom Of The Sea was a tubular representation of Earth or the patient's body in Fantastic Voyage was a cosmic Everyman, but here the S.S. Poscidon capsizes with all the muddled seriousness of a humanized Noah's Ark. The passengers are initially introduced in two--by--two fashion; the retired Jewish couple traveling to Israel to see their grandson; the tough-but-soft-hearted policeman and his new bride, an ex-hooker, honeymooning on the ship's final voyage, two ministers, two sets of brothers and sisters, etc. Even the singles on board fall victim to scriptwriter Sterling Silliphant's passion for matchmaking. You begin to believe the Poseidon's some sort of floating Grossinger's. At the film's conclusion this pairing has a curious redemptive quality that draws neat little lines between those who were saved and those who weren't. It's a Calvinist doctrine made to fit a pop adventure story which illuminates it with wretched soppiness. To survive in The Poseidon Adventure is to suffer. The mechanics of this sentimentality works to knock you back from the edge of your seat with a tear in your eye. At the screening I saw a young lady was so moved that she cried uncontrollably; I looked twice to see if it was Pamela Sue Martin or Carol Lynley or another female member of the cast weeping at seeing the film for the first time, but it wasn't. Rather she was a dramatic testament to the curious hold this film has if taken seriously. Allegorical films don't often work, but few are work as crassly as this one. From the start certain obvious and annoying connections are made. The Poseidon isn't simply a luxury liner, it's a metaphor for a world in chaos; the passengers are simply struggling to survive, they are acting out what appears a bowlderized morality fable with all this nonsense. The film is filled with many dumb assumptions about life that the drama inherent to a crisis situation sinks in pretentiousness. The escaping troupe fit together like a well greased cog. Each time they reach a major obstacle one of them conveniently find a way out, as if to pull solutions from the magic hat of human experience which only exists in the minds of scriptwriters.

The characterizations are woeful. Shelley Winters and Jack Albertson, the best of the lot, play the Jewish couple with such exaggerated caricature that their dialogue sounds like song cues lifted from Fiddler On The Roof. Ernest Borgnine and Stella Stevens as the trashy honeymooning duo are shamelessly vulgar imitations of Wallace Beery and Jean Harlow in Dinner At Eight. We meet them arguing suppositories, and it slips downward from there. The focal character, a hip preacher, (Gene Hackman) comes on like the ship's social director sent from on high-Gale Storm in preacher's vestments. He sets the tone of the film's higher aims. When the passengers find themselves capsized he leads the rescue party with a fervent life spirit that would put Auntie Mame to shame. You tend to hope that the silly introductory scenes, such as Hackman shouting humanistic doctrine like he was a liberated Elmer Gantry and Winters and Albertson cooing in Anglicized Yiddish, would dissipate once the boat capsized. Instead they are restated for all their emotional, psychological, and social worth. The escape attempt becomes a soap opera chronicling the adventure of a what seems a lost boy scout troupe, and their journey through the innards of the Poseidon becomes a perverted guessing game of which star will be next to go. To divert your attention from this final count are a series of dramatic confrontations between Hackman and Borgnine which are so loaded on Hackman side that even if Borgnine walked on water he couldn't save the day. I never for a moment believed any of the escape, it was too pat, each situation programmed. The Poseidon Adventure begins with a spontaneous catastrophe that falls into tired predictability. We were always led to believe that God worked in strange ways, but this film belittles that truism. The presiding moral force here works with a computer's efficiency and its homogenized, paiatable palp. He also works with an all too clumsy hand--passengers live and die with a single-mindedness found only in pulp fiction. Life never dictates such literal justice as wielded onboard this ship.

The special effects would look great on television. They have an economy which makes sense on a small screen, but blown up here they look anemic and characteristic of a palcry budget. Hard times have hit Hollywood and The Poseidon Adventure is the first super-spectacular of the new studio austerity programs. Again the money is spent with an efficiency that passes for creativity. The film tauts an exact recreation of the Queen Mary which amounts to an unspectacular boast considering our escaping passengers spend most of their time ducking pipes and climbing ladders and ramps. Considering the amount of time we spent in the passenger's quarters any stateroom from any ocean liner film probably would have sufficed. Why didn't the producer expend his precious money on a first rate cast instead of assembling one of the most spectacular second rate casts in years. The publicity blurbs read the film combines the talents of fifteen Academy Award winners, and five of the actors have won Oscars; but what's particular distinguished about a cast comprised of Shelley Winters, Gene Hackman, Ernest Borgnine, Red Buttons, Carol Lynley, Jack Albertson, Roddy McDowall etc. Most of these actors successes have been in supporting roles and if there's one thing this film doesn't need is an assemblage of character actors overacting a foolish script.

The only two who emerge relatively unscathed are Shelley Winters and Jack Albertson. Ms. Winters underwater swim is the highlight of the film and Jack Albertson is moving even when the situation doesn't merit his sincere interpretation. Hackman and Borgnine are terrible--it was a toss-up as to whom should go first but that moment happened so late in the film that it hardly mattered anyway. Stella Stevens is given some bitchy retorts, but is shown to be such a fool that she hasn't the sense to remove her spike heels while attempting the difficult escape. And Borgnine and her certainly aren't Harlow and Beery, even at the dimestore variety.

Richard Neame, a competent director, handles situations all too methodically. He seems to slide through with boring professionalism. The Poseidon Adventure may eventually find its right home on a Sunday night television special at some future date. Then perhaps its stellar cast may sound exciting, its story hit home between Ford and Excedrin ads, its special effects have a terse excitement; in short be the kind of experience it clearly isn't on the screen.

The Film Column

Midway Through The Awards Season

By Brian Dailey

The year 1972 has come and gone but it's films are here to stay. In the case of a very large number of the films which emerged in the last year this is a very unfortunate fate for us to bear. But only time will tell which films hold up to the changing tastes and mores of Society. All we can do now is to see what films win what awards (and try to understand why!) At this point all the major awards have been given out except for the coveted Oscars. A recap of the already presented honors might help you in predicting the Academy Award nominees and probably winners.

The two most important awards next to the Oscar are given out by the National Society of Film Critics and the New York Film Critics. These two groups of the most highly respected film critics usually have their own special favorites in each category and end up disagreeing completely with each other. This year was no different.

In many cases it is very hard to make a definite choice as to your top ten films of the year no less your "Number One" as most movie fans undoubtly know but that's what makes the awards so important and many times controversial. The Golden Globe Awards, given to movies and television alike, takes the easy way out and refuses to choose the one best for their awards and as a result their awards loss any value or prestige they might otherwise have had. In order not to leave anyone out (or to hurt anyone's feelings!) the organization gave four Best Picture Awards. They went to The Godfather, best Drama; Cabaret, best Comedy or Musical; Young Winston, best Foreign Film in English Language; and The Emmigrants, best Foreign Language film. Likewise they gave Best Actress Awards to Liv Ullman (The Eminigrants) in a Drama; Liza Minelli (Cabaret) in a Comedy or Musical and since Liza received one they couldn't forget Diana Ross so she was awarded the Most Promising Newcomer (female) for her role in Lady Sings the Blues. Best Actor awards were given to Marlon Brando (The Godfather) for a Drama, Jack Lemmon (Avanti!) for a Comedy or Musical and the Most Promising Newcomer (male) went to Edward Albert for his debut in Butterflies Are Free. Supporting acting awards went to Shelley Winters for The Poseidon Adventure and Joel Grey for Cabaret while Francis Ford Coppola won awards for Best Director and Best Screenplay (the later with Mario Puzo) for The Godfather.

The National Society of Film Critics and the New York Film Critics choices are much more definite and as a result are taken more seriously. The National Society honored The Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie and its director, Luis Bunuel, as Best Film and Director. Al Pacino received Best Actor award for The Godfather while Cicely Tyson won the Best Actress award for Sounder. The Supporting acting awards went to a tie between Eddie Albert (The Heartbreak Kid) and Joel Grey (Cabaret) and to Jeannie Berlin (The Heartbreak Kid.) Ingmar Bergman won for his Screenplay of Cries and Whispers.

Society of Film Critics on only two categories and these were Best Supporting Actress (Jeannie Berline) and Best Screenplay (Bergman). Their remaining awards went to Cries and Whispers and Ingmar Bergman as best Picture and Best Director. Laurence Olivier received the Best Actor award for his role in Sleuth and Liv Ullman won the Best Actress honor for her role in Cries and Whispers while Robert Duvall won Best Supporting Actor for The Godfather.

Among both groups of critics The Godfather and Marlon Brando came in second choice as Best Pictuer and Actor which might give you some indication of the way the Oscars will go. The Academy choice of Best film will undoubtedly different than the Critics because of their various rules and catesories. The Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie is the French entry for Best Foreign film and Cries and Whispers isn't even eligible because it hadn't opened in Los Angeles for at least a week before the end of the year; an Academy rule!

As far as I can and want to predict these will probably be the films and stars to be nominated and to have the best chance of winning. Best Picture nominees will most likely include The Godfather, Cabaret, Sounder, Sleuth; best director will include Francis Ford Coppola (The Godfather), Bob Fosse (Cabaret), George Roy Hill (Slaughterhouse Five) Best Actor nominees will undoubtedly include Marlon Brando and Al Pacino for The Godfather (unless one or the other receives a Supporting Actor nomination) and Laurence Olivier and perhaps Michael Caine both for Sleuth

Best Actress is wide open to either Cicely Tyson (Sounder) Diana Ross (Lady Sings the Blues), Liza Minelli (Cabaret), Liv Ullman (The Emmigrants or Cries and Whispers) and Susannah York for Images. For the real Academy Award nominations we'll just have to wait one more week.

Theater

A Play Is As Strong As Its Weakest Link

By Joseph Arsenault

After seeing The Crucible, I feel like an old villain who just saw his son's high school performance and doesn't know how to confront his son.

First off, to situate you, The Crucible is a perceptive historical allegory: Arthur Miller has an American puritan ethic confront the invisible lust for the unknown. It is a play of intense heat where the Law, the Bible and the Country Folk attack each other on such questions as the Devil, the World, and the Flesh. Miller's hot lucidity reveals the utter painfulness of the dilemna which men must tackle when the foundation of their lives is put into question. Where is a man before his conscience? What a dangerous thing is the soul because no one really knows what to do with it, whether to give or keep it, defend or substitute it. There remains the unsolvable problem. Besides this, the puritan nature with its white-washed religion is pitted against an age old need for theater and mystery. The premise is that if there is a God, then there must be a Devil. If you take away the beauty of God, and if you only preach of hell's inevitability, then, inevitably, the imagination must conjure up this rich, vibrant demon to repaint the parched walls of the mind, left vacant by an austere religion. Salem becomes the locus where the melting oven bursts. Under all this is John Proctor, the Common Man who in the past remained expediently quiety until he was smoked out of his silence by the intensity of the flame. And yet, the Devil who has brought chaos to Salem has brought with him a comic madness, seeing that he came as a prank, he becomes blood and death. Miller's dealing with a superstitious period where a pack of children's lies becomes a serious threat to the security of the community, showing perhaps the shallowness of its structure.

To choose God is to betray life, to admit to the Devil for self protection is to compromise one's name and honor, to not be worth living, all because of a moralistic dualism imposed by a Yes or No attitude towards life. The strait jacket of the puritan ethic has bound the ever-evolving American pioneer until the pressure became too great and a war of cruelty and injustice resulted; and to think that it all started with the nasty apple of passion, as potent then as it was in The Crucible.

Now that you have a bit of what it deals with, how did they do it? At first, horribly. There was a general weakness on the part of most of the cast to really convince us that they were real and not line reciters and puppets in their own right. One can only recall that the saving element was the comical Giles Corey, (P. Tauger), who managed to vividly present the awnry old sailor here, and much later.

The Crucible has a list of adult roles each demanding a total repertoire of mature experiences; these people have scratched out a living from their meagre existence, from their private battles with the land. It is society and religion immersed in the story of mischievous children, led by their traumatized "medium", Abigail that will reduce these solid farm people into a united flock of wild lunatics. In this act, very special attention should have been paid on their simplicity. This is where a young troupe could not help but tumble into the pitfalls. Spraying one's hair does not make one old. Rebecca Nurse (J. Jacobson) who would have ignored the children's tale had a basic core of believability that enamoured me to her immediately. John Proctor represents the Common Man, but she represents the Experienced, Simple Woman with knowledge that comes from living. Elizabeth, John's wife, becomes her counterpart. Sam Parris, (S. Collins) lacked something in the parson. His impotence, his weakness as a character were fine but he oftentimes seemed unsure of his body. This lack of control, this missing discipline gave a peculiarly confusing appreciati. As to Tituba, her exotism should have been played up by darker makeup, for she seemed more like a backwoods lady of outside Salem, rather than Barbados, but besides this, her portrayal was fine.

A word about costumes, which were scanty at best -- long skirts and leotard tops, or for the men, regular pants with turtlenecks. Though it looked like a group who didn't have much money to deal with, this brought a certain timeless quality somewhere between 1679 and 1967. It managed to create an in-between realm, and allowed for a certain temporal universality. But speaking of language, and diction, it was often garbled, without enough projection so that one experienced a kind of tidal wave effect, at times loud and then gone, as if the burden of talking like pilgrims was impossible.

With the second act in the home of John Proctor, there began some solid acting. The opening frigidity that permeated the kitchen was marvelous. John Proctor, (J. McGee) brought a mal e strength, a presence that was integrated and imposing throughout the play. His handsome animality opposed his correct, Christian wife, Elizabeth, (B. Shine) and served to bring a great tension. As for John Hale (S. Mosca), he, at first, brought a distinct charlatanism to his character but which developed into a more complicated middle man caught in the midst of the whole problem. At first, he was naive, later he matured. All this was done sympathetically.

To be brief what has happened is that a bunch of girls were caught dancing by the parson. He accuses his niece of bedevilment which they cannot deny. Denial would bring hanging as witches, seeing that dancing was a sinful enchantment. By the end of the second act, John's wife, Elizabeth is accused of witchcraft by Abigail, herself in love with John and jealous of his wife. Elizabeth must appear before the court to acknowledge her complicity. The problem comes in the fact that to lie is to be damned and would also indict their neighbors which a few (the heroes?) refuse to do.

In the third act, the famous trial scene was well done basically because it is highly emotional and mostly hysterical. The cast was careful not to overact. Judge Hathorne was marvelously portrayed by M. Longo showing the absolute rigidity and overbearing callousness inherent in the role. The governor acted like a cardboard windup doll and showed a marked acting problem. One can be stiff-like without being mechanical. By the end of the act, the children, led by a tremendous Abigail bedevil the whole court to such a point that John is accused of being Lucifer, and Elizabeth is convicted.

The stage was elementary, causing many amateurish entrances. One sensed that the actor felt as intimidated as we did at the many sudden, but sloppy appearances of the characters.

By the end, everyone is bewebbed by the Lie.

The fourth act was perhaps the best, seeing that it didn't involve as many on the stage who didn't know what they were doing. Here was the core of the play, its strength -- John and Elizabeth, Abigail and Tituba, Rebecca and the Parson, Rev. Hale and the Judge. Pregnant Sarah Good and Tituba return to the cursed Barbados; John struggles beautifully with his conscience and Elizabeth has matured in love and compassion but remains firm in her strength. John wins his soul but loses his life. The universal elements were not undermined, rather they were sensitively and purely realized.

The problem with the play was not the central roles but the many minor roles that were often weak and embarassingly distracting. A play is as strong as its weakest link. It often seemed that the cast was still too young, that it had not really internalized what they wore and were often overcome by the necessary maturity, demanded by Miller... and yet it was a great effort.

DON GIOVANNI

A number of the area's outstanding singers and stage experts are involved in the production of Mozart's opera, "Don Giovanni," which will be presented by the Holyoke College-Civic Orchestra at Holyoke High School auditorium on Sunday, Feb. 11 and Tuesday, Feb. 13 at 8 p.m. Crete Liadrakis, who has performed with the Pioneer Valley Sumphony, will sing the part of Zerlina. William Norris, a theatre major at UMass, is supervising costumes and is a dramatic coach for the production. David Hartwell, known to area residents for his work with the Amherst Community Opera, will sing Don Ottavio, and Rod Gisick of Amherst has the baritone role of Masetto. Leslie Phillips of Amherst is the drama coach for the fully-staged production, which will be done in modern dress. Judith Oberholtzer of Belchertown will sing Donna Elvira, and Thomas Weber, also of Belchertown, will play Leporello in the opera. Tickets will be available at the door and can be reserved in advance by calling the music department at Holyoke Community College.

CHRISTINE WALEVSKA

Young, California-born cellist Christine Walevska will appear at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst for two recitals in early February, marking continuation of the 1972/73 Celebrity Series. Tonight, recital in Bowker Auditorium will be at 8 p.m. While not particularly well-known in her native United States, Christine Walevska has amassed an impressive record throughout Europe and South America-performing as soloist with leading orchestras, and as a recitalist. Word of this young talent filtered back to the noted impresario, S. Hurok, who went to Europe to hear her play and signed her to a three-year contract, with a $200,000 guarantee. Miss Walevska, accompanied by pianist Herbert Rogers, will offer "Pieces en Concert" by Francois Couperin, Sonata for Cello and Piano by Debussy, Sancan's Sonata, the Prokofiev Sonata in C major, and Tchaikovsky's "Rococo Variations". Reserved tickets are available from the University's Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, Amherst, telephone 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available one hour before the recital, in Bowker Auditorium. Noted Soviet cellist Mstislav Rostropovich has characterized Christine Walevska as "a gifted cellist with a creative personality of her own. Her artistry and vast repertoire make her a great success with the public. Musicianship as well as the lovely tone round out her image as a performer, making her one of the favorite cellists of the younger generation."

THE DANCE THEATER OF HARLEM

The Dance Theatre of Harlem will be in-residence at UMass Feb. 12-14 under the Massachusetts Coordinated Dance Residency Project.

As part of its three-day visit to the University, the company headed by Arthur Mitchell and Karel Shook will offer two master classes Monday, Feb. 12, at 3:30 p.m. in the Women's Physical Education Building. The classes will be open to the public, without charge. Mr. Mitchell will teach an advanced ballet class, and ballet master William Scott will lead a class for intermediate level ballet students. Participation will be limited, but those interested in observing either class may do so.

Persons interested in taking the classes are asked to contact Mrs. Barbara Aldrich of the Fine Arts Council staff (545-0202) by 4 p.m. Wednesday, Feb. 7, with an evaluation of their technical dance proficiency. Recommendations from dance instructors will also be helpful. Due to the limited size of each class, those accepted as participants will be notified of their acceptance Feb. 9.

The Dance Theatre of Harlem will give two different performances in Bowker Auditorium Tuesday, Feb. 13, and Wednesday, Feb. 14. Full program and ticket information may be obtained by contacting the Fine Arts Council Ticket Office, 125 Herter Hall, UMass, Amherst. Telephone (413) 545-0202.

FRANKENSTEIN

The scene: A gloomy laboratory. A stormy night. An obsessed scientist. A huge covered form on an operating table. The storm rages. The machinery crackles. At last the covering is pulled away. A hideous creature made up from pieces of the dead. The master switch is thrown. The noise is deafening. The light is blinding. The monster is alive; This is the familiar opening of Frankenstein; the archetypal gothic horror tale. Now, for the first time, Frankenstein has been adapted to the stage and will be performed by the University of Massachusetts Theatre. The adaptation has been made from the Mary Shelley novel by Dallas Murphy who is also directing.

Murphy has managed to maintain the flavor of the original while making it work within the conventions of stage melodrame. The experienced cast of students has been working since early January to realize an appropriate and convincing style of performance. The setting by Paul Wonsek is one of the most elaborate ever designed for Bartlett Theatre. It includes three revolving units which allow quick changes from the elaborate and cluttered laboratory of the mad Doctor to other rooms and tombs and back again. The scene shifts are wonders in themselves. Katy Reed has designed the appropriately horroritic costumes. The play will be performed Feb. 14-17 and 21-24 at 8:30 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium. Also, spend midnight with the monster! In keeping with the nature of the production, there will be special late night performances of Frankenstein. Feb. 17 and 24 at 11 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday nights will be Dollar Night. o reserved seating).

THE GHOST SONATA

Arthur Strindberg's obscure fantasy play; unique, bizarre, and disturbing will be performed this evening and tomorrow evening at 8 PM in Theater 14 on the Smith College campus. The play is difficult, and the production has been given mixed opinions by those who have seen it. All reports say the decor and costumes are extraordinary, and the production itself is elegantly displayed; but one tends to wonder why it was chosen in the first place.

Films

AVANTI!

Billy Wiler's anochronistic comedy is reminiscent of the romantic comedies he made in the mid-fifties and somewhat at odds with his hard-edged social comedies and dramas. The story concerns a square American businessman who goes to Italy upon his father's accidental death only to learn that his father had been romantically involved with a British widow for years. He meets the widow's daughter, a chubby British girl, and they repeat their parent's story. Wilder adapted the Broadway flop by Samuel Taylor and mistakenly allows it to lag for some two hours and a half. It's something of windy trifle; with Jack Lemmon and Juliet Mills. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

BELLE de JOUR (1967)

Luis Bunuel's elegant sexual fantasy in which Catherine Deneuve plays a bored housewife who moonlights her afternoons in a brothel. A strange, beautifully photographed, and genial film whose depth is elusive, if at all there. Academy of Music, Northampton, with A Man and a Woman.

THE BLUE ANGEL (1930)

In 1929 Emil Jennings asked the young American director Josef von Sternberg to come to Germany and direct him in an adaptation of Henrlech Mann's novel "Professor Unrat." A blistering indictment of the snobbishness of 1905 Germany, the novel concerned a prudish, repressed professor who sets out to stop his young students from frequenting the Blue Angel, a cabaret, and the charms of its star, Lola Lola. Instead he becomes attached to her and what remains is what some have called a classic. It is the most famous portrayal of sado-masochism ever filmed as the ugly, coarse affair between the singer and the professor became imbued with a heavy Freudian flavor. Sternberg is a master of detail and atmosphere and the scenes in the Blue Angel, one can almost sense the body odors and smell of stale beer. The film brought about a rennaissance in German filmmaking but is best known for making a star of Marlene Dietrich. When Paramount saw her coarse, alluring Lola Lola, she was immediately signed for a Hollywood contract. Her plump, heavy style exhudes a strange magnetism, especially on the stage of the cabaret when she sings "Falling In Love Again." It remains her chief glory in a long, triumphant career and the film is Sternberg's finest; an expertly assembled drama which avoided the clean superficiality that plagued his later films. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke, Saturday, 2/10, 8.

THE DAMNED (1969)

Germany immediately following the burning of the Reichstag: the family of steel industrialist, Baron Joachim von Essenbeck (Schonhals), is divided politically in its support for the Nazis and in a power struggle for control of the firm by his scheming family. This film is dominated not so much by decadence although Visconti's portrayal of this is powerful enough, but by the amoral manner in which all the characters use each other and in the end are destroyed by an evil stronger than their own. Visconti's view is fatalistic: once society begins to slide, nothing, not even the small "!!" liberal character, can prevent its ultimate collapse. Visconti uses a baroque, almost rococo, expressionist style. The strange, non-naturalistic, colors and make-up are perhaps the only ones appropriate to his theme. With Ingrid Thulin, Dirk Bogarde, Helmut Berger, and Helmut Grien. Student Union Ballroom, Sunday, 2/13, 7 and 9:45.

DELIVERANCE

A superior adaptation of James Dickey's novel about four men on a canoeing trip who find themselves caught up in a whirlpool of catastrophe, murder and rape. The film was directed by John Boorman, who made the crackerjack gangster flick of the late sixties, Point Blank, and it is filled with the same ferociously tense quality of man struggling against an alien environment that enriched the earlier film. Whatsmore, while the movie stands up as a tremendously engrossing adventure story, it also has an intriuginglyambiguous viewpoint regarding its violence and the morality involved. John Voight gives a highly controlled, intelligent and precise performance in the lead role. Showcase Cinema, West Springfield; Campus Cinemas, Hadley; Calvin Theater, Northampton.

DERBY (1971)

The world of the roller derby is explored in this "cinema verite" documentary that follows one man's determined quest into the sport. The film is often malicious satire on the attitudes and behavior of lower Middle Class America. It often has you laughing in spite of your better judgement. Director Robert Kaylor slips into situations like a voyeuristic sociologist and infers judgements of a Eastern, sophisticated bent. It's the old case of the educated academian both fascinated and repulsed with his subject matter. Some have found Kaylor's judgement fr'ghteningly accurate and painful, but they do seem altogether superficial. An interesting behind-the-scenes portrait of the Roller Derby. Student Union Ballroom, Saturday, 2/17, 7:30 and 9:30.

THE ENDLESS SUMMER (1965)

Bruce Brown's beautiful documentary about surfing with the chills and spills of that sport captured with all the fun and excitement the sport possesses. Brown traveled the world filming the adventure of two young surfers' quest for the world's best surfing and the visuals of the African; Asian; Pacific; and North American beaches are quite breathtaking. Student Union Ballroom, Friday, 2/5, 7, 9, 11.

All McGraw play a latter day Bonnie and Clyde who rob and murder the most viscious group of decent folk to appear on the screen. The stars are mismatched, (her head is bigger than his) and both give mannered, boring performances. McQueen always manages a withdrawn sensuality that's always captivating on the screen, but Ms. McGraw better hide behind her footprints in Grauman's Chinese Theater as being her acting credentials. Sally Struthers is fine as one of the bizarre accomplices. Peckinpah again revels in violence, for those who remember "Straw Dogs" with extreme distaste evade this one—it's more of the same simplistic and nasty dribble. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield. Campus Cinemas, Hadley; Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampson.

GIMME SHELTER (1970)

The Rolling Stones 1969 American tour is incisively dissected in this powerful documentary by the Maisles Brothers. The two used a piecemeal style to fuse the Stones in concert with the planning behind Altamont concert in commenting upon the larger themes the violence of the Altamont concert raised. The concert portions show Jagger as the master showman he is often called and proves the group to be the best rock and roll band of The Sixties. The film has the final effect of a nightmare, filled with chaotic incidents and ambiguous meanings. Student Union Ballroom, Thursday, 2/15, 7 and 9.

HIS GIRL FRIDAY (1939)

The story behind this film is one of the most famous (and reported false) stories in Hollywood history. It's a remake of The Front Page, Lewis Milestone's 1929 classic comedy-drama about life behind the scenes of a big city newspaper. What Hawks did was to bet he could equal the film's earlier success by changing the sex of one of its two major protagonists. The comedy is frantic, heartless, and inhumanely wacky; the characters are either unscrupulous or stupid (or both). The pace is breathless, the film contains the fastest dialogue in the history of Hollywood films. Hawks's premise works and he succeeds in getting a dazzling performance from Rosiland Russell as one half of the reporting duo who attempts to get the story on an escaped murderer and a corrupt city administration. If anyone ever doubted that she was once one of the screen's finest comediannes, this film should prove them otherwise. Hawks also elicits a superbly funny and driving performance from Cary Grant. One of the best-remembered Screwball comedies of its day with a first-rate script by Charles Lederer. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College, Tuesday, 2/13, 7:30.

KLUTE (1971)

Jane Fonda gives the finest performance of her career as a high class call girl being terrorized by a perverted murderer. Donald Sutherland plays Klute, a mid-western detective who helps track down the murderer. The script is taut and evokes memory of the best of Hitchcock; unfortunately the direction, by Alan J. Paluka, is overly stylized and too melodramatic for the film to be exceptional. Still well worth seeing for Fonda's performance and its excellent evocation of New York's freaky milieu. Ms. Fonda won both the New York Flim Critics Award and an Academy Award as Best Actress of the year and justly proves her title as the best American dramatic actress currently in films. Sage Hall, Smith College, Saturday, 2/10, 7:30 and 9:30.

THE LADY FROM SHANGHAI (1948)

Someone wrote recently an oblique statement that this is the closest film equivalent to suggest the moral world of Shakespearean tragedy. It is a dazzling film that can (and is) taken on a number of different levels. Peter Bogdanovich has written: "(It) is a morality play without preaching, it can be taken as a bizarre adventure yarn, a bravura thriller, a profound drama of decay, or all three." It is certainly one of Orson Welles' best realized films, although a daring commercial failure when first released. The story concerns an Irish adventurer and sailor who is persuaded by a beautiful woman to join her and her crippled husband on a Pacific cruise. Once on board he becomes a dupe for everyone's murder plans. Some have written that this was the film which finally drove Welles from the Hollywood establishment. Its commercial failure is due to a number of curious factors which may have influenced audiences at its time. Welles has fashioned a number of memorable sequences, especially the final shoot-out and chase through the Hall of Mirrors. His script, adapted from the popular novel by Sherwood King, is filled with memorable lines, especially the final soliloquey: "Everybody is somebody's fool sometime. . .Maybe I'll live so long to forget her. . .maybe I'll die trying. Certainly one of Welles best performances with the sensuous support of Rita Hayworth. Hampden Dining Commons Southwest. Tuesday, 2/14, 7:30.

LADY SINGS THE BLUES

The film biography of the popular pop singer from the Thirties and Forties Billie Holiday is mounted with care and style in this enjoyable throwback to the three-handkerchief Hollywood bio's of the Fifties. It is reminiscent of I'll Cry Tomorrow and The Helen Morgan Story in its tragic story of an entertainer who slowly destroys herself from problems not truly her own doing its fascinating performance by the female star. A star is born in Diana Ross who may not be Billie Holiday, she is a pop singer not a song stylist as Ms. Holiday was, but is an enchanting screen personality. What is best about her performance is that we are never reminded that Ms. Ross was once the plastic queen of Motown. She performs with a spontaneity in the early sections then admirably the intensity of Ms. Holiday's struggle with heroin. Her acting is the film's best point. Her singing is good, it has a tight, raspy, sensuous quality; but it doesn't suggest Billie Holiday's reading of a song. Diana Ross sings all the Holiday standards, but you have to return to the originals for their definitive interpretation. Director Sidney Furie makes the entire mess very agreeable and, in the end when Ms. Holiday stands on the Carnegie Hall stage, quite moving. Campus Cinemas, Hadley; Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton.

historical epic about the sole survivor of Custer's Last Stand has the flavor and style of a Dickens' novel. It's an expansive and intelligent treatment of a number of folk and social themes. Penn is worst at moments of dramatic intensity and sharply barbed satire, they tend to be either misdirected or misinterpreted. Otherwise this ambitious American epic holds together well. Dustin Hoffman plays Jack Crabbe, a white man brought up by the Indians and rejected by both cultures, who chronicles the brutal extermination of Indian culture during the latter part of the last century. Penn sets up an allegorical base as a thematic linking device which gives this bustling epic a pensive, almost brooding quality. With Faye Dunaway and Chief Dan George whose humorful and humane portrait of the Indian chief was richly deserving of the acting awards it received. Campus Center Auditorium, Sunday, 2/11, 7 and 9:30.

A MAN AND A WOMAN (1965)

Pauline Kael describes this film as a great make-out movie, it is certainly that. The story is of the romance between a young woman and a race car driver and takes place in the world of the elegant Jet set in the South of France. Claude Lelouch has a sweeping style, the film reads like the best romantic magazine stories. He is best with the action sequences. The performances are fine, especially Anouk Aimee (who should have won an Oscar over Elizabeth Taylor's blowsy Martha in Who's Afraid Of Virginia Woolf) and Jean Louis Trintignant, certainly one of Europe's best actors. A sumptuous music score. With Belle de Jour. Academy of Music, Northampton.

MEET ME IN ST. LOUIS (1944)

The story of the Smith family of St. Louis during one summer, autumn, and winter at the turn of the century. The father says they have to move to New York, but, after a minor family tragedy, everything ends up happily. Minnelli's first major film is a delightful integration of songs and dances with the nostalgic, gently comic stories of childhood by Sally Benson. The dialogue of these stories was retained almost intact in the film. Judy Garland is at the peak of her talents in the memorable songs. This film's blend of story and songs in the style of The Love Parade was to become almost a trademark of the postwar MGM musicals. Garland sings "The Trolley Song" and Margaret O'Brian is charming with "The Boy Next Door." The recreation of St. Louis at the turn-of-the-century is superb and the Technicolor is far superior to what was generally used in the mid-Forties. One of the most endearing and memorable musicals of all times, with an excellent cast. With Showboat. Student Union Ballroom, Monday, 2/13, 9:30.

NIGHT OF THE LIVING DEAD (1968)

This coarse horror film has the curious distinction of being the best film ever made in Pittsburgh. It began with $6000 and a vague idea director George Romero had of transforming an allegorical story he had written into "a real blood and guts film." The results overwhelm the viewer with a series of grotesque images unequalled for their sheer audacity by any film within memory. The major distinction is that the film makes explicit the gore we've always wanted horror films to show, and without exaggeration has claims to being the most gruesome and frightening film ever made. See ad for time and place.

THE OMEGA MAN (1970)

Charlton Heston as one of the Last Men on Earth is pursued by horrible mutants. This science fiction tale has Heston and the talented Rosalind Cash (as, what else, the Last Woman) up against the wall which, considering the film, is probably where they deserve to be. Student Union Ballroom, Sunday, 2/11, 7 and 9:30.

PETE N' TILLIE

Directed by Martin Ritt (Sounder," "The Great White Hope") from Pete DeVries' novella Witch's Milk is a movie of many "firsts." It can boast to be Ritt's first comedy, Carol Burnett's first starring role in a feature film and Walter Matthau's first nude scene but unfortunately none of these "firsts" are enough to make this movie a winner. Television's "Queen of Comedy", Ms. Burnett (Lucille Ball has definitely past her prime!) plays a straight man to Matthau's continual merriment and putdowns. She does well with what she is given but for most of the movie you have the sense that she's making her dramatic debut as a guest on a T.V. medical series only this time around the good Dr. Welby is no where to be seen and so Burnett's nine year old son ends up mysteriously dying which affords Ms. Burnett her big scene in which she curses God calling Him a "bastard". Burnett and Matthau work well together but one can't help wishing that Ms. Burnett would let herself go as she always does in her own television show (and as she does for one short but riotous scene in which she has a knockdown no holds barred fight with Geraldine Page. The film itself is an enjoyable low-keyed comedy which tries to be too dramatic at times but the supporting performances of Ms. Page and Rene Auberjenois adds up to some easy fun. Paris Cinema, West Springfield.

Judy Garland in Meet Me In St. Louis, Monday evening in the Student Union Ballroom

THE POSEIDON ADVENTURE

A harmless pop epic that aims to please but tends to disappoint. The film faults an incredible roster of second-rate stars playing passengers on board a luxury liner which, on its final voyage, becomes capsized in the Mediterranean. The suspense is built on who will escape and how they'll do it. It's the latest in the series of assinine entertainments made popular in recent years, like "Airport" and "Skyjacked." At the start the situations and relationships are contrived; the film picks up once the boat capsizes, but not much. The special effects and the capsize itself would look great on television. On the screen it has the anemic look of a production burdened with a tight budget. The insides of the Poseidon are recreated from the Queen Mary and its great if you possess a fetish for the deep insides of luxury liners. The script plays off the worst sentimental responses and pretentions about life. As a hip preacher who attempts to save the day Gene Hackman appears to be a waterlogged Auntie Mame. The whole thing sounds like a wretched musical comedy -- you keep expecting Hackman to break into a rousing revival number called "Let There Be Light." Shelley Winters sparks the film with a sympathetic caricature of a Jewish grandmother travelling to Israel with her husband, Jack Albertson; but their scenes together are filled with song cues out of "Fiddler on the Roof." The remaining ensemble is strikingly mediocre; Ernest Borgnine and Stella Stevens are vulgar prototypes of Wallace Beery and Jean Harlow in "dinner at Eight". The film's best moments are the obese Shelley's underwater rescue attempt. Richard Neame directed, all too methodically. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE SHOP ON MAIN STREET (1965)

A beautiful performance by Ida Kaminska is the chief reason for seeing this Czech film set in the Second World War. In a small provincial town in German-occupied Slovakia in 1942, a man and his wife have difficulty making a living because he does not sympathize with the regime. He makes him "Aryan controller" of a button shop owned by an old Jewish lady who is nearly deaf, but finds he cannot explain his position to the woman and gradually accepts her belief that he is her "assistant." The first Czechoslovakian feature to win an Academy Award, this film is not only an engrossing study in guilt and the failure of a generation to fight anti-Semitism, but also an affectionate and often lyrical portrait of life in a small provincial town. However, the film is not entirely successful. The first half, detailing Tono's domestic life, meanders and the film in general often falls into sentimental whimsy. Wright Hall, Smith College, Thursday, 2/15, 7:30.

SOUNDER

Time magazine says this is a compassionate and loving film about being black in America. It has the strength of subtlety and the power of emotional commitment to its subject though not the kind of inchoate fury that can blister and blind. It manages as no other movie has done to take the special pride and trial of being black and work it into an experience that can be shared and felt by anyone." Pauline Kael in the New Yorker said of the film "It is extraordinarily simple, yet deeply, emotionally rich. The first movie about black experiences in America that can stir people of all colors. Cicely Tyson plays the first great black heroine on the screen." The film is directed admirably by Martin Ritt, and the screen play is by Lonne Elder III which he adapted from a children's novel by William H. Armstrong. The film concerns a family of sharecroppers in Louisiana during the Depression and in its moving portrayal of poverty and struggle transcends all labels. Ms. Tyson has won two major film acting awards and is in contention for an Oscar nomination. Music by Taj Mahal. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

STRANGERS ON THE TRAIN (1951)

A stranger, Bruno, meets Guy on a train and suggests that he will kill Bruno's wife if Guy will kill his father in exchange. Since they are strangers to each other, both will have perfect alibis. This otherwise conventional thriller contains many typical Hitchcock themes and his typical development of suspense. Some of its editing effects (the crosscutting between the tennis match and Bruno with the lighter) and photographic images (the murder reflected in a pair of glasses with one lens shattered) are famous and the dramatic final chase and climax are among Hitchcock's most unforgettable sequences. Robert Walker gives a memorably disturbing performance as the unbalanced killer, especially in the scene at the party where he discusses murder and demonstrates silent strangling techniques. Hampden Dining Commons, Southwest, Sunday, 2/11, 7:30.

TUMBLEWEEDS (1925)

William S. Hart's last film (at the age of 55) is not only his own masterpiece and a summation of everything he felt about the West but also one of the greatest silent Westerns. The opening sequence in which Hart laments the passing of the wilderness is one of the silent western's most lyrical sequences. The evocation of the actualities of the Old West and of the frontier code is clearly by a man who understood and felt deeply about them and not by the hack director, King Baggot, assigned by the producers. The climactic land rush is one of the cinema's most bravura action sequences, impeccably constructed and edited and with some virtuoso trick riding by Hart. The pure morality of Hart's character may seem naive, but the authentic flavor of a "wild, lost America" and the evocation of the pioneering spirit gives this film a sense of poignant poetry. The re-release version has an introduction by Hart himself, extremely moving in its revelation of Hart's personal feelings for the West. Thompson 104, Tuesday, 2/13, 7 and 9

If people who are skilled at growing gardens have "green thumbs", then people who are skilled at grape stompin' must have "purple toes".

Letters To The Editor

Where Do We Go From Here?

Last weekend I had the opportunity to attend a series of workshops on Student Government. The workshops, all held under the general Program heading, "Student Government—A Midyear Evaluation: Where do We Go From Here," encompassed a variety of subjects including Racism and Sexism in Student Government, Student Co-Ops, Student Fees and Budget Control, Controlling our own Education, Area and Dorm Governments, and SATF Funding.

Everyone attending seemed to derive a tremendous amount of benefit, in terms of new insights into Student Government, from the workshops, yet the turnout was dishearteningly small. Of hundreds of students contacted directly and indirectly by Denise Magrell, the coordinator of the program, in the past four months, including over seventy students who on the very morning of the first workshop said they would attend, only about forty actually showed up.

But it is not my purpose to speak of apathy on this campus—that has already been written and spoken about through the Collegian and other student news sources, ad nauseum. Rather I would like to share with you some of the ideas that were brought up in the various discussions, and some of the perspectives I personally gained about student government at UMass:

—First, the question was raised, "Do we even need a Student Government?" It was proposed in all seriousness at one point, that all Student Senate services and staff funded activities be cancelled for a week—which would include, among other things, campus bus service, the Senate Lecture Notes Program, the Daily Collegian, and WMUA. I think if such a vacuum of services was created, we would realize that Student Government and student interest in government is a continuing necessity—not a process or machinery to be dragged out from under the cobwebs only in times of crisis, or highly visible issues such as the recent Rhetoric requirement debate.

—Students often feel intimidated and overwhelmed by the great "Combine" (to use Ken Kesey's term from One Flew Over the Cuckoos Nest) that this University can be. If one has gripes (and who doesn't?) Student Government is one means of addressing these problems. Being active in Student Government isn't narrowly defined by holding an elective office, or being a member of a committee or judiciary, however desirable and beneficial to the student community that may be. Just giving "feedback," just giving personal opinions, even just complaining to student representatives—just caring (i.e. giving a shit)—is the vital first step necessary to make our UMass community a better place to live.

—Student Government on campus has often been put down as the workings of a small "elite." Maybe it is—I really don't know for sure. But if it is, it is certainly an open elite. There are a tremendous number of committees which desperately need and want students. In the Student Senate last fall, no one even bothered to file nomination papers for sixteen seats, as well as the fact of countless dorms where students ran for the Senate or other offices, unopposed. There is no lack of opportunity for anyone who wants to get involved—we're all in this together as students!

George Weisslitz

Hanoi Hospital

To The Editor:

The Vietnam war is over. We in the Young Workers Liberation League (YWLL) share the feelings of and congratulate the Vietnamese people for their victory. No longer are bombs raining down on these peace-loving people. For the first time in many years there are clear skies over the divided country. The NLF has won.

The victory of the Vietnamese, who led the call for unity against U.S. imperialism, has demonstrated that aggression can be defeated. The United States, with all of its barbarous weapons, its computerized genocide, its high flying planes, its vast resources, the United States still could not hold back a righteous people following the science of Marxism-Leninism, and steadfastly supported by the rest of the world—especially the socialist countries.

The effects of the war continue and the peace movement continues to be vigilant. Nixon must be forced to follow the treaty to the letter, to the comma, to the period. Also the land is still devastated. The cities are still in ruin following the 12 days in December and the many years of bombing. Now, more than ever, aid is needed for the people of Vietnam—concrete aid such as medical aid, technical aid, money for the construction of the Hospitals.

Along with other national organizations the YWLL is raising funds for the construction of the Nguyen Van Troi Hospital for Children to be built in Hanoi. The fund drive will culminate in the 10th World Festival of Youth and Students for Peace, Solidarity, and friendship: Berlin GDR the summer of 1973. Following the festival work teams of youth from around the world, including the U.S., will go to Vietnam to actually work on the construction of the hospital. Any person wishing to work for the hospital can contact The Nguyen Van Troi Hospital Committee, P.O. Box 546 Amherst, Mass. 01002 or Paul 546-6808.

All-American Spirit

To The Editor:

I realize that fraternities have many different reputations. And I realize with what care they try to uphold a healthy public image; it's with their All-American spirit that they have their clean fun. That may be. I'm sure that many are beneficial to the community, fund-raising for good causes. However, please excuse me for being so irate but a recent experience with a frat left me with a rather repulsive image.

The Kappa Sigma Frat invited my dorm to a party Wednesday night. On that night some member called me on the phone and when he was done asking (politely) why I didn't come, he tried to humiliate me by using gross language that his buddies in the background found most amusing. Is this typical of our "brotherly" fraternities? And they wondered why no girls would come to their party, I was not the only one who experienced this "kind invitation".

At my expense, Kappa Sigma, I met your All-American spirit but, at your expense, UMass will see you as you are.

For The (Public) Record

To Governor Sargent:

It was with great interest last week that I read the sources and amounts of incomes received by State employees above and beyond their regular salaries as full time employees of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. (Boston Globe, Jan. 1). It was with even greater interest that I noted the absence of statements from two of the most prominent men in the Sargent Administration, Peter C. Goldmark, Secretary of Human Services, and Dr. Milton Greenblatt, Commissioner of the Department of Mental Health.

I personally feel that the public has a right to know this information. I am aware that Dr. Greenblatt has submitted his resignation, to be effective March 1, and that at that time he will be leaving public service to continue his research. However, I am also aware that for the last six years Dr. Greenblatt has received monies from various colleges and universities in the Boston area to carryout research and other activities. The sources and amounts of these monies should be a matter of public record.

It is a matter of record th[illegible] Secretary of Human Services, Peter C. Goldmark last year was r[illegible]sible for "padding" the salaries of high level state employees con[illegible] to state employment regulations. It is now time to make these disclos[illegible]es public. Reluctance to do so can only be interpreted to mean that these two men have indeed something to hide. I feel that it is your responsibility as Governor to see that these men comply with their directives or considerable damage will be dealt to the waining public confidence in state government.

MIT Prof. On Nuclear Safety

Dr. Henry W. Kendall of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (M.I.T.) will speak on NUCLEAR POWER: THE LATEST ON SAFETY PROBLEMS at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, February 13 in Room 29 of the Hasbrouck Laboratory at UMass. His talk is the first in the spring series for the Distinguished Ecologists Lecture Series.

Dr. Kendall is a Professor of Physics at M.I.T. and is prominent in the Boston-based Union of Concerned Scientists. He co-authored, in 1971, two reports which seriously questioned whether the vital Emergency Core Cooling System of nuclear power reactors would actually protect the public from radioactive exposure in an accident. Subsequently, he became one of the chief witnesses representing the National Intervenors, a coalition of 82 groups from around the country, in the Atomic Energy Commission (A.E.C.) hearings in Washington, D.C. These hearings have been in progress for a year and have exposed a rift among A.E.C. staff on safety questions.

Recently, Dr. Kendall was joined by Ralph Nader in calling for a moratorium on licensing nuclear plants until safety problems are cleared up.

Dr. Kendall has become a leading participant in a second set of A.E.C. hearings which began February first, on the dangers of the entire nuclear "fuel cycle," from the mining of uranium to the reprocessing of spent fuel and the long-term storage of high level radioactive wastes.

Dr. Kendall graduated from Amherst College in 1950 and received his doctorate from M.I.T. in 1955 in Atomic and Nuclear Physics. He has been a post-doctoral fellow at Brookhaven National Laboratory; a faculty member at Stanford; and a consultant to the Departments of Defense and Transportation through membership in the Jason Division of the Institute for Defense Analysis.

His publications include numerous articles in professional journals and less specialized magazines; defense-related writings (all classified); and two books on underwater diving and underwater photography. He is an active mountain-climber, bicyclist, and a licensed commercial pilot.

Dr. Kendall's talk—which comes on the heels of recent operating problems at the nearby Vernon Vermont Yankee nuclear power plant which has had leaking fuel rods, excessive radioactive releases and a transformer fire—is sponsored by the Coalition for Environmental Quality at the University of Massachusetts. The public is invited at no charge.

Harlem Dance Theatre To Perform At UMass

The Dance Theatre of Harlem will be in-residence at UMass next week, Feb. 12-14.

During this period, this young ballet company will offer two different performances in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. (Tuesday, Feb. 13 and Wednesday, Feb. 14) and free master classes at 3:30 p.m. Monday, Feb. 12, in the Women's Physical Education Building.

This program is part of the 1973 Massachusetts Coordinated Dance Residency Project which is supported by The National Endowment for the Arts and the Massachusetts Council on Arts and Humanities.

Since its founding in 1968, the Dance Theatre of Harlem has emerged as one of the most important classical ballet companies in the country. An integral part of its success has been its school where students are provided instruction)from 50¢ a week to $2 for teenagers in public school, $4 for college students) and where every student is permitted to take as many classes each week as he can work into his schedule. Students are auditioned by either Arthur Mitchell, the Dance Theatre of Harlem's founder and executive director, or Karel Shook, associate director.

Founder Arthur Mitchell is a product of The New York City Ballet which has technically assisted him in establishing his company and school for black people of Harlem and everywhere. Clive Barnes, writing in The New York Times, summed up the uniqueness of this concept when he wrote, "There is, I know, a comparatively large section of the black community who feel that the essentially European orientation of classical ballet is totally remote from the black culture. Basically that is probably a true bill . . . but then I go to see Mr. Mitchell's dancers, and I note how good they are and how happy they seem, and say to hell with it. This dancing is meaningful to these people . . . The company has proved its point . . .all those white classic ballet companies that consistently found it impossible to get suitable black dancers have been proved wrong. I love the company."

Reserved tickets to the two evening performances are available at $4 (half-price to UMass undergraduates). Contact the University's Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, Amherst, Mass. 01002 for complete program and ticket details. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium one hour prior to each performance.

Grady To Study Congress Operations

Gerald J. Grady, Business Manager of UMass has been appointed to the staff of the Select Committee on Committees of the House of Representatives in Washington. The recently established Select Committee will make a study of the House committee jurisdiction and operations; the bi-partisan committee is headed by Congressman Richard Bolling of Kansas City, Mo.

Thomas B. Campion, Vice Chancellor for Administrative Services, announced that Grady has been granted a leave of absence to participate in the study which is expected to take about fourteen months. He will begin working for the committees on a full-time basis on May 1, 1973.

At the University, Grady has been responsible for labor relations and various auxiliary services, and teaches in the Political Science Department. He came to the University in 1959 from the Univerity of Maine where he was a member of the Government Department. In 1956-57 he served as a Congressional Fellow in Washington, D.C., and in 1958 was a candidate for Congress. He is Secretary-Treasurer of both the New England and Northeastern Political Science Associations, and is a member of the American Political Science Association, and various other professional and civic organizations.

The study committee could recommend the most sweeping Congressional reform in decades. It comes at a time of widespread concern over the internal structure of Congress, and its ability to fulfill its proper role in the government.

Health Services Wants Help

Would you like to help to guide the health program at the University of Massachusetts? Would you like to work with physicians and staff members of the Health Services in planning their policy? In improving communications? In selecting new staff members? In responding to student suggestions and complaints?

The University Health Service exists to serve students. Students pay for personal health services and should have something to say about the kind of care and types of service they receive. The Health Service needs student ideas, suggestions, and feed-back.

The Student Advisory Board will probably meet twice a month. You can participate in policy decision-making activities only or become further involved in carrying out various projects. Come to the first meeting. Wednesday, Feb. 14th at 5:00 p.m., Rm. 904 CC.

Student Senate Releases New 'Code Of Conduct'

(Editor's Note: this document was approved by the Student Senate and is pending approval by the Board of Trustees. If passed by that body it will replace the present Code for the Fall, 1973 semester.)

PREAMBLE

The University of Massachusetts is dedicated to learning and the advancement of knowledge through free inquiry. The University seeks to achieve these goals through a sound educational program and meaningful policies governing student conduct that encourage an atmosphere of mutual trust, respect and responsibility. The ultimate values that should govern behaviour in any community are a loving concern for ones brothers and sisters, and kindness in our dealings with each other.

In order to fulfill these values and to insure the well being of the community, each member of the community must be guaranteed certain securities. This code is intended to set minimum standards of behaviour that are essential for the protection of each individual and to provide a recourse for those who feel that their rights have been violated.

I. Responsibilities

A. Personal Security

All persons have the right to be secure from threat, physical abuse and offensive contact by any other person or by any object or substance in the control of another person.

1. It shall be a violation of this code for any person to intentionally threaten another person with physical contact or violence or violence to their person by any means whatsoever and for any purpose.

2. It shall be a violation of this code for any person to intentionally touch or strike any other person with or without any instrument.

3. It shall be a violation of this code for any person intentionally or by reason of neglect to do bodily harm to any other person.

Any violation under this article may be aggravated by reason of the use of any instrument or weapon or by reason of the furtherance of any otherwise unlawful purpose by the offender or by any actual injury caused, including the degree of such injury or by any combination of the above.

Any violation under this article may be mitigated in whole or in part by reason of self-defense or protection of another person.

B. Security of Property

All persons and their institutions have the right to be secure in their property against loss of value, theft or unreasonable search and seizure.

1. It shall be a violation of this Code for any person to intentionally damage or otherwise injure the property of another person or institution resulting in a reduction in the value of the subject property whether real or personal and by any means whatsoever.

2. It shall be a violation of this Code for any person to intentionally and wrongfully deprive another person or institution of the beneficial use of his, hers, or its property by any means whatsoever; including specifically, but not exclusively, unwarranted search and seizure under color of law and invasion of privacy.

3. It shall be a violation of this Code for any person to intentionally and wrongfully take and convert the property of another person or institution or to attempt to do so by any means whatsoever.

Any violation of this Article may be aggravated by the fact of a violation of any section of Article A of this Code, or by the fact of fraud, deception and concealment, or by the degree and amount of the property so involved.

Any violation of this Article may be mitigated in whole or in part by mistake or by need in the care of the necessities of life.

C. Right to Assemble

All persons have the right to peacably assemble and petition for the redress of their grievances. There is a competing but relatively less protected right under this code for all persons and their community to be secure from unreasonable interference by other persons without regard to the nature, validity, sincerity or intensity of their reasons.

1. It shall be a violation of this code for any person whether or not in conjunction with one or more other persons to obstruct or block any egress to a building or other area so that egress is not possible.

2. It shall be a violation of this code for any person or persons to obstruct or block more than one-half of any sidewalk or passageway or entrance way provided such obstruction does not effectively prevent egress altogether; or to obstruct or block more than one-half of any sidewalk or passageway by any means. (In no event shall there be less than six feet of unobstructed passageway).

3. It shall be a violation of this Code to engage in picketing of any kind except that the foregoing rules are observed as applicable. And further provided that all persons engaged in such picketing activity are walking at a regular pace in a circular line within the boundaries provided by the aforesaid rules.

4. It shall be a violation of this code for any person or persons to force any other person or persons to accept any written or printed material.

For all purposes of this article "passageway" shall include all common areas and corridors in all public buildings of the University but shall specifically not include the residence of any person nor the office assigned to any person or organization for any purpose.

Any violation under this article may be aggravated by a physical blockage of any door to any such office or residence whether in such a passageway or not. A violation under this section of this article may be mitigated only in part if such office or residence is not occupied at the time of such blockage.

The purpose of this Article is to permit the freest possible exercise of every individual's natural and Constitutional rights within the context of the University. Pursuant to this principle it is the policy of this Code to permit the free exercise of speech while reducing direct physical contact between persons and protecting a inviolate a person's residence and office. It is a policy of this Code as well that it does not speak to the question of disagreements within the classroom.

D. Academic Integrity

It is the policy of this Code that each person is responsible for his or her own work and is entitled to credit for his or her own work of whatever nature or kind.

1. It shall be a violation of this Code to intentionally or wrongfully submit work not the product of the person making the submission for the purpose of obtaining or enhancing academic credit or for the purpose of making profit.

2. It shall be a violation of this Code to adopt or convert the original work product of another to one's benefit either for academic credit, or public approbation or for monetary gain or any combination thereof.

IF YOU HAVE AN ANALYTICAL MIND, ANALYZE THE FOLLOWING CAREERS AT ÆTNA.

We're looking for securities analysts. Actuaries. Accountants. Computer programmers. And people who like the challenge of figures, finance and money.

But we're also looking for people who have a bit more than analytical skills to offer. Because though we're a big company, we've made quite a few departures from the "big company" way of doing things.

For one thing, we've made action our byword. Not only action in terms of our relations with the public, but also action in recognizing and promoting talent within our own company.

Stop by your college placement office and read our brochure "The Whole Truth." It spells out how Ætna works, and the many specific opportunities we have for people of all talents.

Then think about what you want from a career. If it's something more than the average, think about Ætna.

After all, we're not your average insurance company.

Ætna

You get action with Ætna.

Northern Ed. Service To Resume Tutoring

Despite many financial problems, the Northern Educational Service in Springfield is ready to start tutoring once again. Because of cutbacks in Federal Funds, NES at present has virtually no money. However, A.I.C. has consented to lend a room of their Campus Center for tutoring and also a church in Winchester Square has offered their facilities to be used for tutoring.

Because many other Social Service agencies have folded due to lack of Federal Funds, there are many children in Springfield who need and want to be tutored, but at present there are very few resources available. NES is fortunate, however, in that they have places to conduct the tutoring and they have some materials. All they need now is people to do the actual tutoring.

Starting Wednesday, Geb. 14, the NES busses will begin running again. One free afternoon a week is all that is necessary. There will be one organizational meeting to discuss the details. Please check today's notices for the time and place of that meeting.

Art work, like lettering, calligraphy, graphics, posters!, poems, invitations!, paintings, handmade clothing, etc.

By SYDNEY OMARR

The Gemini man is restless, has great sense of humor, alienates those who are envious, can have more than one affair of heart going simultaneously. Gemini persons, men and women, will be making important changes in 1973—those who are single could be hearing wedding bells. March and December are indicated as significant months for Gemini during upcoming year.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Financial status improves. You get what you need. Investigate. Don't be satisfied merely that something happened. Find out why it occurred. Ask questions. Dig for information. Gemini, Virgo persons could be featured.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Lunar cycle is high; take initiative. Your judgment, intuition are apt to be on target. Lead the way. Make new contacts. Bring forth creative resources. Emphasize appearance, personality. Wear bright colors. Shake off lethargy.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Action occurs behind scenes. Be discreet. Clandestine meeting could be featured. Don't tell all. Keep something in reserve. One you deal with is being less than candid. Subtle approach should be advocated.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent is on friends, hopes, special desires. Reward through occupational efforts is indicated. What you did in past will be appreciated. Check investments. You have something coming to you—be aware, alert enough to protect interests.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Obstacle should be regarded as constructive challenge. Refuse to be discouraged by temporary setback. Keep sights set on ultimate goal. Professional superior is impressed. You will soon be rid of burden.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Look to future instead of worrying about past. Good lunar aspect now coincides with long-range planning, travel, publishing, spreading of information. Gain shown through written word. Leo is involved.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Build for future. Get agreement in writing. Take cash and let credit go. Insist on factual information. Discuss legal procedure with mate, business partner. You unearth factor which had been obscured. Aquarian is in picture.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Lie low. Don't force issues. Your judgment may be off center. Permit mate, partner to lead way. Time is in your corner. Don't feel you must make immediate decision. Wait and learn: absorb knowledge. Taurus, Libra persons are involved.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Check details. Take nothing for granted. One who seems progressive may merely be foolish. Key now is to be discriminating. Guard health. Maintain balance. Avoid extremes. Be aware of diet resolutions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Good lunar aspect now coincides with romance, creative changes, special relationships with children. Give of yourself. Emphasize individuality. Member of opposite sex plays important role. Your personal magnetism soars.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Accent on home, family, the end of a project. Key now is to utilize experience. Draw to your family resources. Make conciliatory gesture. Know what is important, what merely glitters. Message will become increasingly clear.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Study Aquarius message. Avoid jumping to conclusions. Perfect techniques. Tendency is to try doing too much at once. Give ideas a chance to develop. Short journey, visits and visitors are featured. Be kind to talkative relative.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have sense of what people want, what they will respond to—and you are capable of giving it to them. April is indicated as your most significant month in 1973. You have an affinity for those born under Aries. You are inventive, creative and stubborn.

Men Gymnasts Take On Tough Cornell in Boyden Tomorrow

By MDC STAFF

Now really—what are you doing tomorrow afternoon at 2:00? You remember watching gymnastics on the television this summer during the Olympics—and didn't you enjoy that! Well, you can be assured that watching gymnastics in person is even better. And tomorrow you'll have the chance to see some top-notch bodily exertion and gyrations.

The UMass men's gymnastic squad will meet an immensely improved Cornell University team in Boyden Auxiliary Gym. It is expected that UMass will take the meet, but things could get exciting. Injuries have been a problem—especially because of the sprains of all-around Gene Whelan and the bad knees of star vaulter Jay Thomsen. Doug Salisbury is out too with injuries sustained in motorcycle accident last Sunday night.

But believe me, things are not all bad. Encouraged by an excellent showing against No. 1 Penn State, the Minutemen will be putting up a versatile group. Back on floor after some time is Jack Berner, sometimes faster than the speed of light. Jay Thomsen will still be there along with all-around men Rich Seikunas and co-captain Steve Scuderi. Look for Rich to improve on a real nice routine. Cornell's Apple should also look good here.

Pommel horse action is always exciting and maybe Steve Nelson will show his best form. Brian Hassig will go in one of his first varsity meets. Again, Seikunas could hit a nice set. Two Cornell men could look good in the event.

Jay Aronstein, star of many meets this year, is expected to turn in another high score on still rings as is Dan Spier. Co-captain Aronstein should have no trouble with Cornell's Eisenberg, but surprises are always possible. Jim Battista will also be getting a crack at Cornell.

Now, vaulting, which has been a weak spot for UMass.' Cornell has some fine vaulters, especially all- around Dawson. Other all-arounds, Schergren and Van Dyke, aren't expected to be much of a threat, however, so vaulting may not hurt our men much. Jack Fabricante and Roy Johnson will see action here.

In the last two events, UMass will be using some relatively inexperienced men. Bill Brouillet, who is the most experienced of the group has been looking good, as has sophomore Tim Beasley, who's going varsity for the first time. We'll be looking for Dan Spier to match Cornell's Hanscom who turned in a strong 9.1 against Army. Scuderi could also put out here.

Finally, the event on which UMass could win the meet (if Scuderi and Spier can hit and if newcomers Earl Roy and Roy Johnson come through) is high bar. This is Scuderi's best event, hitting 9.3 this year; Spier came close to that.

So folks there you have it. It will be a close and exciting meet. Coach Tom Dunn is looking for another win.

UMass Matmen Beat Dartmouth On Ireland's Pin in Finale

By JOHN BOCK

HANOVER, New Hampshire—The UMass matmen may be 10th in the East, but they would have had a hard time convincing anyone of that Wednesday night as they blew an 18 point lead, and had to have a win at heavyweight to save the day.

It is certainly the truth that Dartmouth had a few scrappers on the team and most of them appeared in the heavyweights. The lightweights didn't fall over and play dead for the Big Green, however (if one doesn't count their 118-pounder who was taken down in ten seconds and spent the next two full minutes on his back.)

Dave Amato picked up his second pin in the last two matches as he stuck Bob Ryan in 2:48. Larry Reynolds ankle picked his way to a 13-6 victory over Dartmouth's John Lagnese at 126 pounds. Reynolds had his chest bandaged to cushion any impact to the damaged cartilage and seemed to move very well.

The 134-pound bout saw Mike McGlaughlin get back on the winning track with an 8-3 decision over Bob Goodman. Mike was all over Goodman and put him on his back a few times but couldn't hold him.

Two of the best matches of the evening came at 142 and 150, as Steve Rome and Cliff Blom found the going pretty rough on the way to their wins. 'Tony' Rome met John Burke and, after the dust had cleared, it was Rome 6-2 by virtue of some back points and stalling ponts. Cliff Blom handed Big Green Captain Steve Morelli his first loss of the season 3-1. It was very, very close for the whole match and Blom pulled it out in the last minute as Morelli shot in on a takedown and then lost it because Cliff tenaciously clung to Morelli's leg.

The team score was 18-0 at this point and it looked like the Minutemen would run it higher as Chris Cadwallader was beating Rick Clark 8-6. But Chris made one fatal mistake, got caught on his back, and that was all she wrote as Clark collected the six points at 6:15 in the match.

Steve Benson was definitely feeling the effects of the flu as he lost to Darryl Gibson 7-3. Gibson was a Delaware State Champ and definitely strong but didn't do much for most of the match. It was all Benson could do, though, to fend off Gibson's strong double leg while trying a few of his own.

The roof really fell in at 177 as Dartmouth's Charlie (Chuckles) Estin put his record at 11 wins and 11 pins on the season when he put Doug Rumpf down in 1:33. At 190 in a revenge-is-sweet match Jim Conterato bested John Connolly 13-3, being motivated by the fact that Connolly pinned him in last year's match.

The team score was now 19-18 Dartmouth and George Ireland redeemed his name by showing the ceiling to Reggie Williams in 3:17. After a scoreless first period Williams gave Georgie the position of advantage and was regretting it from his shoulders a minute later.

The final score was 24-19 UMass and the Minutemen left thankful—and apprehensive because they see the Big Green again in two weeks for the New Englands.

Tracksters Face Wildcats In Durham Tomorrow

By WALT POWERS

With the Yankee Conference championship meet only a week away, the UMass indoor track team will take on a relatively unknown. graduation-weakened team from UNH, tomorrow in Durham. New Hampshire hasn't done especially well this season, and unlike the last two meets against Northeastern and Dartmouth, tomorrow's outing could turn out to be a real ho-hum affair.

UMass is still feeling the effects of a rigorous test against Dartmouth, and the distance runners haven't recovered completely in the three days since. Losing to Dartmouth produced an emotional letdown, and, because of this, Coach Ken O'Brien doesn't expect a great, all-out effort.

The meet should be a good one for the weightmen and sprinters, though. Because of poor facilities and lack of available practice time, these meets give weightmen Carmen Letizia, Kevin Hall, and Bob Bocash their major opportunity to throw.

The short straightaways on the Hicks track have never allowed the UMass spring and hurdles squad to develop proper timing in the short indoor races, and this meet will give them a good competitive workout on the site of next week's conference championship meet.

Injuries will hurt the Minutemen, but shouldn't affect the outcome of the meet. High jumper John Osborne's sprained ankle will keep him out of this meet, but not the conference championships, and long jumper Pete Ryan will be bothered by a back injury. UMass will be bolstered by the return of miler Paul Catano, but another miler, Rick Barry, will be lost for the remainder of the indoor season with a knee injury.

UMass-UConn in Cage Showdown

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

It's the biggest game in the conference for both of us. If they win, we're two down. If we win, then we're even.

–Jack Leaman

Memories of a missed basket amidst two early season nightmarish losses (to Boston University by two and UConn by three) can be forgotten with a win tomorrow in the Cage. The conference leader at 5-1 (UMass is 4-2), UConn presents the possibility of muddling the picture and throwing the race wide open between the big four in the conference (Conn, BU, UMass and Rhode Island).

Channel 3 broadcast UConn's takeover of the Yankee Conference lead last December. The Huskies used the wizardry of Jimmy Foster combined with the multi-talents of Earl Wilson to eke out a 71-68 victory. Since that time they have managed to squeeze by New Hampshire (60-59) and Rhode Island (74-72), while trouncing Vermont and Maine. Wednesday marked UMass' fourth straight win, but more than that it marked UConn's first conference loss and it was at the hands of BU (107-99).

The shoot-out in Boston is indicative of what to expect tomorrow. Leaman said, "I think tomorrow's game will be an offensive show as they are a fine team with a lot of people who can shoot and score."

The twisting, driving antics of Foster were absent for the first time this year from the Huskie line-up at Boston and his presence tomorrow is doubtful. As a replacement, Coach Dee Rowe inserted a freshman named Al Weston into the line-up and the sub came through with a 43-point performance. (Foster was averaging 15 points.)

Weston was termed by Leaman as "very impressive, very quick, a fine shooter who is tough to defend." The 5'11 guard will be joined in the backcourt by Al Vaughn, a streak shooter who is both hot and cold at times.

The frontcourt averages 6'6 and boasts two tough rebounders in Earl Wilson and Cal Chapman (each are averaging 10 rebounds a game). Wilson presented problems in Storrs for the Minutemen and has the potential (37 points last year in the Cage as a frosh) to go on a scoring binge.

The past three games between these two clubs illustrate the evenness of competition. UConn has taken the last two in Storrs (one by two and the other by three), while UMass won in the Cage by two.

The Minutemen will start the same winning combo of Rick Pitino, Bill Endicott, Tom Austin, Charlie Peters and Al Skinner. The game promises to be physical, as both utilize the bench services to a great extent.

Coach Leaman was pleased with the progress of his team. He said, "We're better defensively, overall. We're reacting a whole lot better as a team in key defensive situations."

The Civic Center experiment has ended without a loss, but as thoughts return to Yankee Conference action, home is the Cage and there is where the fate of UMass will be decided (UConn, Saturday and BU, Tuesday).

Senior Pat Keenan breaks past a Connecticut defender (top photo) and lifts a quick wrist shot past the UConn goalie, freshman Lou Parker (bottom photo). The puck is hidden by the background of Parker's shirt in the bottom photo. The goal was Keenan's 29th this season, breaking his own mark for most goals in one year which he set as a junior. UMass-URI in Key Wrestling Match

The University of Massachusetts has generally been considered the best team in Yankee Conference wrestling circles for about the past four years. Recently they were honored by the ECAC by being named as one of the Top 10 teams in the East.

Guess who isn't expected to win the first Yankee Conference Wrestling Tournament to be held at URI tomorrow? You guessed it, UMass. They aren't according to press releases from Rhode Island and Boston.

URI is currently 9-1 after losing to powerful Northern Illinois in what could only be termed as the mismatch of the year in New England (forgetting about Harvard's shellacking by those Kings of the College Division-Cal Poly). So the Rams have gone through opponents like Boston College, who, until this year, have rarely fielded a whole team. That makes them confident that they are ready for the Minutemen, who beat Harvard, Yale, and Cornell plus others.

Then there are the Terriers of Boston University, who sleazed a victory over Springfield last November by scheduling a scrimmage with the Chiefs, running it like a dual match, and using it as their first win of the season. That isn't to say that BU doesn't have some talent as they certainly do. They have about a half dozen wrestlers from Section 2 in New York who are performing quite well for them this year.

These appear to be the main threats to the UMass grapplers as the tourney gets under way tomorrow morning. It will be a double elimination affair, meaning that a wrestler must lose twice to be eliminated from the tourney. However, just to make it interesting, if one wrestler loses then wins all the rest and makes it into the finals against the same wrestler that beat him earlier, the match automatically goes into overtime.

The general team feeling about the Tourney is that it will be good tune-up for the upcoming triangular against Fifth-ranked Wilkes and Army. They also feel that this might have a detrimental affect when it comes to the New Englands which will have the same teams in it plus four more. If a grappler wins the YanCon and meets the same man that he beat, in the New Englands, he may relax and get upset and what he loses is a trip to the Nationals in Seattle, Washington.

Coach Barr thinks it's going to be tough and reflected this attitude by having a week of rough practices and by juggling some weights around. Cliff Blom has dropped to 150, Steve Rome to 142, and Steve Benson to 158. Dave Amato will stay at 118, Larry Reynolds is ready to go at 126 and Mike McGlaughlin at 134. Chris Cadwallader will move up to 167 to fill in where Benson vacated, Doug Rumpf will be at 177 and Carl Dambman at 190. George Ireland will hold down heavyweight to round out the lineup.

Names to watch in the tourney are Mike Beck (118 BU), Tim Peccino (126 URI), Jim Urhart (167 URI), Stu Horowitz (177 URI) and Bill Stoll (190 BU).

It's a big field and it will be a long day. What chances the Minutemen have will rest on their conditioning and their ability to commit as few mistakes as possible.

Oh yes, one more thing—a little luck.

WMUA

The Yankee Conference is on the line tomorrow night at the Cage when the Minutemen hoopsters take on the UConn Huskies. Ken Best and Don Gorski will bring you all the action on WMUA, 91.1 FM on the dial. Air time is 7:20 and game time is 7:30.

Skaters' Schedule: 'Here Today, Gone Tomorrow

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

Tonight at 7:30 p.m., the pucksters will celebrate Part 2 of their return to the friendly confines of Orr Rink, when they will again play the role of host (a rare opportunity for the Minutemen these days) to the Continentals of Hamilton College. The Minutemen are not the most gracious of hosts; ask the Huskies of UConn, or Middlebury or St. Anselm's for that matter; all of which had long bus rides home from the Amerhst College facility.

Daily Collegian SPORTS

Saturday, the pucksters then turn around and do some travelling of their own as they head eastward for a game against the Merrimack College Warriors in Andover beginning at 8:00 p.m.

The Continentals have been a thorn in the side of the pucksters in recent years. It was just lat year that the Hamiltonians almost zoned UMass at Orr Rink. But led by an exciting clutch performance by P.J. Flaherty, UMass' departed All-American goalie, the pucksters squirmed away with a 3-2 triumph. In their first meeting this year at Clinton, New York, the Minuteman had easy pickings as they proved themselves at being long on offense enroute to a 9-4 shellacking of Hamilton.

Merrimack has had its ups and downs in the past, but with the recent completion of a sports facility on campus (what a luxury, huh?) they are coming into their own in Division II, and should give the Minutemen a real run for their money.

Last year, in regular season, play, the Minutemen spotted the Warriors three early goals and proceeded to rub them out 8-3 at Orr Rink.

The Minutemen also beat the Warriors, in the playoffs, 4-2, to propel themselves into the Division II final against Buffalo which UMass won handily 8-1.

After the weekend, the Minutemen continue on the road for a spell, as they complete a stretch of five games in eight days. Durham, New Hampshire, will be the destination Tuesday night as the Minutemen have hopes of upsetting the highly touted Wildcats of UNH and Division I.

Next weekend, the pucksters pack their bags again and head for the state of Maine for a couple of key Division II contests. On Friday afternoon, they'll make a quick step at Brunswick, Maine, to play Bowdoin. After a five-minute break for a breath of air, they'll go to Waterville to attempt a conquest of Colby.

Just a note of interest. Pat Keenan broke his own record for goals in a season Wednesday night when he scored his 29th against Connecticut. (He also hit two posts and a crossbar on the night). With 10 games left, there's no telling how many goals No. 4 will tally for the Minutemen, but one thing is certain, at the end of this season, the Minutemen will miss, yes dearly miss, their all-time leading scorer Pat Keenan.

NBA Sets New Play-off Format

NEW YORK (AP)—The National Basketball Association's college draft will be held by conference call April 16 and a record $750,000 will be in this season's playoff pool, the league's Board of Governors announced after a one-day meeting Thursday.

The governors also announced that again this year college players whose classes will not graduate will be eligible for the draft as hardship cases. The deadline for hardship applications is March 30. The format for the upcoming playoffs will be:

The four division winners qualify as do the two teams with the next highest percentages in each of the two conferences. The four playoff qualifiers in each conference then will be ranked according to percentage, with No. 1 playing No. 4 and No. 2 playing No. 3.

The winners of the first series then will play for the conference titles, with the two survivors meeting for the league championship. Each playoff series will be the best-of-7 games and the regular season won- lost percentage will determine the home court advantage for each series.

There was no discussion of the proposed merger with the American Basketball Association.

People's Market Opening Today

Co-proprietor of the People's Market, Ellen Gavin, discusses plans for the store. The market is opening today in the Student Union. (MDC Photo by Alan Chapman)

By FRANCES BROCK

The People's Market, a student run co-operative food store whose roots go back to last spring, opens today at 10:30 AM in the old Science Fiction Library in the Student Union.

The Market is financed through a loan from the Commuter Assembly and is under the direction of Ellen Gavin and Gail Sullivan.

The purpose of the market is very simple: students and other people, are being sold short at the presently operated food establishments. According to Ms. Sullivan, this non-profit co-op will charge only enough to cover the cost of labor, maintenance and wholesale price of the food. At first, the prices will not be as low as they could be, but this is due to initial costs.

With a rise in demand, thus causing a rise in purchased volume, the prices will go down. Ms. Gavin stressed the fact that if they can buy in large volumes, the prices will be less. With the elimination of the middle man, the prices are cut.

They will be getting the fresh produce from the Amherst Food Co-operative, and other canned and packaged foods from other co-operatives. Home-baked goods, by students, health and natural foods and dairy products will also be available.

The items sold are "tentative until we get the students' responses" said Ms. Sullivan. The operation is totally student run. A loan from the Commuter Assembly was obtained to open the Co-op, and now it will depend on student support. She also pointed out that it is "...political to us...We want to establish a sense of community." Both women feel that the Co-op will prove that the community can control those things which are necessary, such as food.

Fred Bongiovanni, director of Munchies, a division of the Campus Food Service, does not feel the project will effect his operation. Both women agreed with him because the Co-op will be carrying items that Munchies does not carry, such as health and natural foods and a large supply of fresh produce. They do overlap with some canned and packaged foods. It was pointed out that many people prefer the name-brands to the Co-op labeled foods. However, the Co-op food is "brand-named" processed. It is bought by the Co-ops for less and the Co-op label is put on. The content is no different.

The market is purposely understocked for the grand opening in order to insure the freshness and quality of all goods but the market will be stocked with enough food in the future to meet the demand.

Ms. Sullivan and Ms. Gavin were glad that they had so much support and help from the Student Senate and Campus Center personnel, and feel that the student public will be as enthusiastic about the project. The Market, next to the Commonwealth Room in the Student Union, which presently carries everything from lettuce and oranges to peanuts and coconuts, will cater to its owners–the students.

Statewide Alliance For Students Proposed

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

A first step was taken at UMass this weekend towards the formation of a statewide alliance of all state college and university campuses.

Called a "clearinghouse for student concerns" by organizers of the conference in the UMass SGA the proposed organization would inform each campus of administrative action on all levels pertinent to students. In addition the organization would, "make the student voice heard."

A proposal for the organization was presented to representatives of 15 of the state's 29 university and college campuses during a three-day conference on state higher education held here over the weekend.

The representatives from each campus will take the proposal back to their student governments for acceptance or rejection by March 1st.

If the organization is to be formed two thirds of the 29 campuses will have to accept the proposal.

The proposal will be mailed to the student governments on those campuses not present at the conference.

The drafted proposal, written by UMass senior Edward A. Voci, 21, a special assistant to SGA President Larry C. Ladd would have the organization gather information on the activity of state government in the areas of education reorganization, budgeting, financial aid and tuition, among others.

The organization would also present the students case to the appropriate state agency or the state legislature.

If formed the organization would be located in Boston, with a proposed budget of $28,000.

According to the drafted proposal $20,000 would come from the administrative funds of the community and state colleges, from the University, Southeastern Massachusetts University and Lowell Technological Institute. $8,000 would come from the Board of Higher Education.

Patrick McCarthy, Chancellor of the Board of Higher Education, who attended the conference, expressed interest in funding the group.

Final budget arrangements will be made by a temporary steering committee. The UMass Amherst member of the committee is Bobbie A. LaPorte, 21. LaPorte was the conference coordinator.

Mike Gregory and Elliot Sherman, Student Senators, also helped organize and run the conference.

Other activities during the conference include the discussion of Secretary of Educational Affairs Joseph M. Cronin's reorganization plan for state education and workshops on various problems faced by state campuses. These included race relations, academic reform, the cost of education and legal services for students.

Battle Of The Bulge And The Squeeze

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

A speech on the "last battle of the bulge and the first battle of the squeeze" led off a three-day conference of state college and university student leaders at UMass this weekend.

The terms, coined by Harvard Graduate School of Education Dean Paul Ylvisaker, described what he saw as the present state of Massachusetts public and private higher education.

In his keynote address Friday night Ylvisaker explained the "bulge" as the current final spurt of growth by state higher education to accommodate the "last edge" of the post-war baby boom. The upcoming "squeeze" will be, Ylvisaker says, the fight to have quality education with limited federal and state resources.

In the squeeze Ylvisaker foresees in the next 25 years, state education, public and private, will have to conserve its resources and learn to share facilities.

Compounding the changes being forced upon higher education by the limited resources of the future is what education has become and the problems it has to face as a result of the turmoil of the 60s, Ylvisaker added.

Students, he said, are now realizing they are not fighting institutions but human beings. Ylvisaker says he sees a "determination" among students to "figure things out and conserve their energies". The 60s were a time when student energy was "squandered" by activities like strikes and demonstrations which, Ylvisaker says, did not cause long-term change.

Students, State Officials Meet

Cronin Discusses Reorganization...

By MARK VOGLER

Joseph Cronin, Massachusetts Secretary of Education and Cultural Affairs, urged student government leaders from all segments of higher education Sunday "not to flatly accept or reject" the proposed reorganization of education in the state.

"Don't say that you accept the plan for what it is," Cronin said in his afternoon address at the Campus Center, "and don't reject it entirely."

Secretary of Education and Cultural Affairs Joseph Cronin told student government leaders to be selective about the reorganization plan he has proposed...

"Be selective. Decide for yourself, 'Here are the ideas that make some sense and here are the ideas with cause for great concern' Let's make sure that we have a system that makes sense."

Cronin's speech was part of a three-day conference sponsored by the State Board of Higher Education and student governments throughout the Commonwealth under the coordination of Ms. Bobbie Laporte, a UMass student senator.

Dividing Massachusetts into five regions and creating a three-level administrative structure are the key points involved in Secretary Cronin's reorganization plan. In so doing he hopes to achieve three goals:

—Statewide coordination and planning of policies at a central level combined with decentralized decision-making at regional and campus levels.

—Bridging artificial gaps such as private and public education and allowing a life-long educational process.

—An open process that brings students and other citizens into every level of educational decision-making as full participants along with professionals and the general public.

During the address, Cronin emphasized the point that "decisions shouldn't be allowed to flow to Boston," adding, "more self-determination and long-range planning should be initiated at the campus level where it belongs.

"We have a system that makes it easy to have some clear choice as to where we are going. WE must do some sensible streamlining and modernize to erase some of the uncertainty and anxiety connected with higher education. The plan should be used as a vehicle to provide us with some sense of the future," he said.

Suggesting a solution to the artificial gap between private and public educational sectors, he said "WE must decrease the wasteful competition among ourselves and begin to work together on many issues,

"We must fully cooperate in sharing resources, whether it's the library, the classroom, or even the faculty. And I think that a minor patch-up job isn't going to be sufficient. We have to define how far we have to go for a system that makes sense for Massachusetts."

Cronin, in reviewing his third goal, said that he wished education "would be redefined beyond the notion of being established for just Grade A's young people."

According to Cronin, "One of my dreams is that education become a life-long process. I would hope that it would be achieved not only by books, or by formal instruction, but to a certain extent, by participation.

Cronin said that he would like to see the options open for more people and that provisions be made for people going through the system in less time. Urging more student participation in the process of governance, he said that fine arts would have variety and identity for individuals as part of the system.

He said that the system should be structured so that people could go back to school and take a course at any level.

"A quest for intellectual and cognitive knowledge should be going all the way through life. Everyone should be afforded the opportunity to be re-educated and culturally reborn five or six times in his lifetime.

The reorganization plan, according to Cronin, should not go into effect for about 18 months. "Although most of you may have graduated by that time, I would hope interest in higher education would continue for the rest of your life."

. . .Let's be sure we have a system that makes sense," said Cronin. (MDC Photos by Alan Chapman).

...Is Mass. Playing "Catch-Up?"

By MARK VOGLER

A panel of four Massachusetts Education administrators seemed to be in agreement Saturday that the Commonwealth is playing a "catch-up" game in regard to higher education in the rest of the country and that "politics must be minimized in order to improve the educational standards of institutions of higher learning."

UMass president Robert Wood, and three other prominent Massachusetts educational figures were featured in the discussion which took place in the campus center of the University.

The panel was part of a conference sponsored by the State Board of Higher Education and student governments throughout Massachusetts under the coordination of Ms. Bobbie LaPorte, a UMass student senator.

Also participating in the discussion were Patrick E. McCarthy, Massachusetts Chancellor of Higher Education; Joseph Cronin, Secretary of Educational and Cultural Affairs; and William G. Dwyer, President of the Board of Regional Community Colleges.

President Wood said during the discussion that an important question to be answered is "How do you take a large complex and put it into a community?"

He said that to fulfill the answer, the obligation of education in terms of its surrounding community would have to be understood.

"The primary objective, is education," Wood said. "Although it's often mistaken by the community at large. The university is not an all-purpose institution that corrects the malfunctions of society. Coming to grips with reality in one institution in one stage of life is the politics in higher education."

Secretary Cronin said that in dealing with the problems of higher education in the state, Massachusetts is guilty of "an edifice complex."

"We're guilty of having this building complex, which soaks up a lot of additional dollars. New library buildings are always going up. But there's plenty of room for room on the shelves.

"In the future, we'll make sure that we're spending more money on books and learning aids. We're going to add a million and a half dollars for additional student services and aids next year," Cronin said.

President Dywer contended that the greatest resource for higher education in the Commonwealth is "the people."

"The ultimate questions to be asked is 'the means by which we are going to get support' and 'the degree by which we are going to produce.'

"We must set our priorities so that the public may develop faith in what we're doing. Unless we prepare the student adequately so that he is prepared to pursue his career objectives, we are cheating the student. And by the same token, we are cheating the public."

Chancellor McCarthy said that for Massachusetts to earn respect of accountability, the educational system would have to be reorganized and "the Board of Higher Education would have to reconstituted to some degree."

According to McCarthy, "a combination of lay boards, legislation, and individual governance have put together about a billion dollars worth of real estate during the past 10 years.

McCarthy said that the private and public institutions would have to cooperate together, and that "good politics would have to happen instead of fighting amongst themselves."

Normal Ties With Hanoi Seen

WASHINGTON (AP)—John Scali, the new U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, said Sunday the United States has "every intention of developing normal and friendly relations with North Vietnam" after peace comes to all of Indochina.

Scali, who was interviewed on the ABC broadcast "Issues and Answers," said it would be premature to discuss diplomatic recognition of the Hanoi government "right now."

In Friday's edition of the Collegian, a story on a speech by Henry Bubar said he stated that "It wasn't until Woodrow Wilson that a President tried to sever ties with Wall Street by breaking up the Federal Reserve."

The story should have read ". . . a President broke up the gold monopoly by establishing the Federal Reserve." The Collegian regrets the error.

OH Uncertain Over Future

By CHRISTINA ROSSOMANDO

The resignation of Orchard Hill Master Christopher Hurn last week and subsequent announcement by the university administration of the formation of a committee to evaluate the Orchard Hill Residential College has caused growing concern by hill residents and staff over the future of the residential college.

The committee, which will be composed of students, faculty, and staff made up of the Subcommittee of Academic Affairs and other groups will coordinate a general campus evaluation of Orchard Hill and report to the Provost's Office and the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Office by April 15, 1973.

The purpose of the study is to re-examine the goals and purposes of the residential college on campus and to recommend "potential program options that are real academic alternatives to the main campus which might be developed and implemented."

A team of outside people have been invited to participate in the study. To date, two people have accepted the invitation. They are Dr. George Hammond, Vice Chancellor of the University of California, Santa Cruz, and Representative Joseph Rhodes, former Harvard Junior Fellow and member of the Scranton and Newman Commissions.

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert W. Gage and Associate Provost Robert L. Woodbury announced the formation of the committee in a memorandum dated February 5, 1973, just three days after Christopher Hurn announced his resignation as Orchard Hill Master. The memo was made public in a meeting Tuesday morning attended by Area Director Jim West, O. H. Area Government president Roy Purdue, heads of residence of the four hill dorms, and several Third World members who attended at their own invitation.

At a meeting held Thursday morning, Jim West said, "We were told to maintain those programs already funded and in operation on the hill and not much else."

A regular meeting of the Orchard Hill Area Government Committee on Academic Policies Thursday afternoon was attended by more than one hundred residents, staff, and faculty. A committee to work out policies in reaction to the administration committee and present an account of the past and present programs on the hill was formed.

The meeting was sparked by a call for unity from several sectors of the area concerned over the future of the hill. The call followed a confrontation between Third World students and members of Emily Dickinson House over the location of the newly established Third World Community Center on the first floor of the dorm.

In a house referendum, Dickinson residents opposed the location of the center in the room presently housing a library. It was later determined that the referendum was illegal, according to the Dickinson House constitution and that Area Government reserves the right to determine the use of the public access areas on the first floor of each dorm, thus invalidating the house referendum.

Christopher Hurn served as master of Orchard Hill for one semester. His resignation comes at the end of a period in which the hill academic program is believed to have begun to develop in a direction of social action. In his letter of resignation, Hurn said, "At Orchard Hill, a meaningful and coherent academic program does not appear possible under the present conditions."

He described what he saw to be the two directions in which the program could go in the future. Orchard Hill could continue to offer approximately 40 courses with little focus or emphasis which "do not add up to a viable academic program for a residential college."

The second alternative, he said, is that the program be oriented toward social action and that this program should "quite consciously take a militant ideological position."

Hurn expressed his opposition to this alternative, calling it "narrowly conceived."

"I am committed to working toward a genuine alternative in undergraduate education . . . But for a program like this to develop there must be an atmosphere of mutual tolerance and respect, a belief that one has strong convictions but not all answers, and a commitment to work toward the benefit of the entire community rather than in the interests of a vocal minority. Orchard Hill does not meet these conditions. It is a bitterly divided community, and the debate is both acrimonious and injurious to the development of educational programs which benefit the majority of students."

Sources on the hill have expressed a belief that Hurn's resignation was asked for by the University administration. Claiming no inside knowledge, one source cited the fact that two people from outside the university community had already accepted the invitation to serve on the committee as evidence that plans to re-evaluate the Orchard Hill program had been made well in advance of the resignation.

Hurn's resignation became effective February 5, the same day the administration announced its plans to take a look at the Orchard Hill program.

While the administration has asked the Orchard Hill academic and student affairs offices to carry on maintenance functions of the courses and programs already funded and in operation this semester, the Academic Affairs Committee plans to continue making plans for the fall semester. Additional action is uncertain at this time.

Committee Formed

By STEVE FINE

Last night approximately 35 students met in Field's Main lounge and organized a steering committee in response to Dr. Christopher Hurn's resignation as Master of Orchard Hill last Monday.

The committee, according to Al Kelley, committee member, will be charged with "disseminating and coordinating all information concerning the present move by Whittemore to take the power away from the Orchard Hill community."

Kelley, a spokesman for the committee, said that the steering committee will achieve this goal by primarily increasing the publication of the area newspaper, 'The Sage'.

He also said that Orchard Hill's Third World Center, Women's Center, and counseling staff will serve as links for communications to UMass students.

Hurn resigned as master of Orchard Hill February 5th for reasons which he termed as there being "no innovative and serious educational program at Orchard Hill possible in the near future."

ACTION Translates Hospital Info.

By STEVE SECHE

Tome usted dos aspirinas y guarde usted cama.

Puzzled? You've heard the advice before--take two aspirin and stay in bed. Simple directions, unless they're delivered in a language other than your own.

And for hundreds of Spanish-speaking residents of Springfield and Holyoke who have to communicate with medical and hospital personnel, many of whom are white and speak no Spanish, the problem is a familiar one. For these residents, their community hospitals become frightening, confusing, alien institutions, places not to turn to, but to avoid.

Four University Year for ACTION Volunteers are attempting to change that, however, with a program they have implemented that translates--both in written form, and onto tapes--simple medical and hospital procedures into Spanish, Italian, Polish, as well as other languages spoken in the community.

Already, according to Pete Heap, one of the UYA Volunteers, they have translated about 15 procedures, ranging from EKG to infant care. At least twice that number remain to be done, however--lab tests could be explained; dieting for diabetics; breathing techniques for those with chest problems--if, according to the UYA Volunteers, "we had the people to help us."

To encourage students proficient in the Spanish language to assist the Springfield Hospitals Project, Juan Caban, from the Media Center, UMass School of Education, will grant modular credits (100 of which equal 1 University credit) for both written and verbal (i.e. taped) translations of selected hospital procedures.

Because of the difficulties encountered in translating regional Puerto Rican and Spanish idioms, Mr. Caban asks that students who apply be reasonably fluent in the language.

"We haven't yet worked out the number of modular credits that would be granted for a specific task," Mr. Caban said.

"I think that once we begin, though, and become familiar with the nature of the task involved," he added, the modular credits would probably be granted "on the basis of hours involved, as well as the difficulty of translation."

Interested students may contact Mr. Caban at the Media Center, School of Education, 545-1507.

Got A Parking Ticket? Expect A Summons

By AVIS YUNI

The UMass Parking Office will begin issuing summons to the Northampton District Court to people who have a number of unpaid parking tickets received on cars on campus or one or two unpaid campus parking tickets that are long overdue.

People having a number of unpaid parking tickets or one or two parking tickets which are long overdue will be sent a letter from the Parking Office informing them of these tickets. They will be given 14 days from the time they receive the letter in which to pay the fines.

If the tickets are not paid for within 14 days, summons to the Northampton District Court will be issued, and these people will be required to go to the court to pay their fines.

All money collected on these tickets shall become part of a Student Scholarship Fund. It is not known how far back in time the Parking Office shall go to collect on unpaid tickets.

In a joint decision, the Northampton District Court and University of Massachusetts Department of Public Safety (Police Department) of which the Parking Office is part, decided to begin issuing summons on parking tickets put on cars on campus to eliminate the boxes of unpaid tickets in the Northampton Court.

The UMass Dept. of Public Safety also states as a reason for this move the double and triple parked cars blocking the roads so that no other cars or buses can pass through, the cars parked in fire lanes, the cars which must be towed from Head of Residence parking spots and tow zones, etc.

While parking tickets have been issued on campus since UMass came into existence, until now, no summons have been issued on them. A spokesman for the UMass Dept. of Public Safety informed the Collegian that the issuing of the summons is the "only way of really getting people to honor the tickets."

Hussein Optimistic On Mid-East Peace

NEW YORK (AP) — King Hussein of Jordan said Sunday he was optimistic about chances for a Middle East settlement because of "new interest" by nations of the world in achieving global peace.

"I am more optimistic at this state than any other. I believe there is a chance," said Hussein, in a televised interview from Washington where he met last week with President Nixon.

He would not say whether the issue of U.S. military assistance came up in his talks with Nixon, commenting only that "we always are in touch with our friends here...regarding our plans."

POW's Freed After Delay

SAIGON (AP) — A South Vietnamese spokesman announced Monday that a dispute with the Communists that held up the release of 27 American prisoners of war had been resolved.

The U.S. military command said, however, that it had no official word the American prisoners had been turned over to U.S. authorities at Loc Ninh, 75 miles north of Saigon.

This indicated the release process was going smoothly.

Officials had expected the first plane to be on the ground at Hanoi's Gia Lam Airport for about an hour, but the loading and takeoff took less than that.

The return flight to Clark Air Force Base in the Philippines was expected to take between 2-1/2 and three hours.

A last-minute addition to the returning group was Navy Cmdr. Brian D. Woods, 40, of San Diego, Calif.

North Vietnamese officials agreed to add Woods to the list because his mother is critically ill, the Pentagon was notified. That raised the number in the first group of returnees from 115.

North Vietnamese and Viet Cong POWs who were to be handed over to the Communists balked at leaving for the exchange sites without first seeing a Communist representative, and the Viet Cong refused to release the Americans.

The dispute delayed the release of the Americans by more than four hours. But a South Vietnamese spokesman said that shortly after noon 200 Vietnamese POWs were flown to Phu Bai for release just below the demilitarized zone, and another 735 were being flown to Loc Ninh, 75 miles north of Saigon, where the 27 Americans were to be handed over along with some 700 South Vietnamese.

U.S. helicopters were already waiting at Loc Ninh to fly the Americans to Saigon, where they were to be transferred to a hospital plane that would take them to Clark Air Force Base, in the Philippines.

The U.S. Embassy issued a statement charging that the delay in the release of the Americans violated the Paris cease-fire agreement.

SST May Cause Cancer

By FRANK CAREY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The launching of large fleets of supersonic transport SST airliners might kill 300 Americans a year and give 8,000 skin cancer, a special panel of the National Academy of Sciences said Sunday.

The report, released by the academy's Environmental Studies Board following a study partly funded by the government, said the exhausts of large numbers of SSTs might partially destroy the earth's protective shield of ozone and permit increased ultraviolet radiation to bombard the earth's surface.

Overexpsoure to ultraviolet rays from the sun can cause skin cancer, particularly among white males, the panel noted.

It conceded the ozone-shield-destruction theory is still "a subject of scientific debate" but added:

"Sufficient knowledge is at hand to warrant utmost concern over the possible detrimental effects on our environment by the operation of large numbers of supersonic aircraft."

If the ozone shield were shattered, the 46-page report said, "the effects of increased levels of UV radiation on biological systems other than man may have greater long-range significance than the problems of human skin cancer...

"Although definitive predictions are difficult, present information suggests an increase in terrestrial solar-UV radiation might diminish the biological productivity of the ocean, interfere with the mating and other behavioral patterns of insects and other lower animals and damage plants, especially agricultural species."

The study group called for establishment of a global network of ultraviolet-radiation monitoring stations to check environmental effects of the SST fleets if they go into operation. It also said intensified research should be conducted on the biological impact of increased ultraviolet radiation.

No SSTs are operating commercially yet. The United States has scrapped plans for building its own plane in the foreseeable future, and major U.S. airlines have announced they don't intend to buy the British-French Concorde which is still flying test runs. The Soviets have flown a prototype SST but haven't scheduled mass production of the craft.

Ozone is a form of oxygen that girds the earth 10 to 20 miles above the surface. The theory, previously voiced by some scientists and endorsed by the panel, is that water and, especially, nitrogen oxides emitted as exhaust by numerous SST engines would partially erode the ozone.

The academy panel said its analyses "suggest that a 5-percent reduction in the ozone shield by a fleet of commercial SST aircraft would account for at least 8,000 extra cases of skin cancer in the white population of the United States leading, with current treatment, to about 300 extra deaths."

Dollar Crisis Intensifies

By ANTHONY COLLINGS

BONN, Germany (AP) — The British, French, Japanese and Italian governments Sunday ordered the closing of foreign exchange markets on Monday in an effort to buy time amid emergency talks in world capitals on the dollar crisis.

Paul A. Volcker, Washington monetary expert, met urgently in Paris with the French finance minister on Sunday, then flew to Rome and returned to Paris Sunday night with the Italian treasury minister.

Volcker's hectic round of talks strengthened expectations that the monetary crisis gripping world capitals was nearing a climax.

The U.S. Treasury undersecretary returned to Paris with Italian Treasury Minister Giovanni Malagodi apparently for more talks with French Finance Minister Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

On Saturday, Volcker talked to West German and British finance ministers in their respective capitals.

West Germany said it is holding to its monetary course–which so far has been a refusal to let the German mark become costlier and hurt German trade through any floating or revaluation. Any such move would help U.S. export trade.

There was no announcement that the Germans would close the Frankfurt exchange, main battleground in a speculator attack affecting the dollar's future role in the world.

Speaker Albert Calls Budget Irresponsible

WASHINGTON (AP)-House Speaker Carl Albert summoned Congress to the battle of the budget Sunday with the charge that President Nixon has acted callously and irresponsibly in some of the cuts he has ordered.

In a nationwide radio broadcast responding to Nixon's Jan. 28 budget speech, Albert said the administration-proposed cuts would hurt the pooor, the elderly, the sick and the unemployed.

"Congress will not tolerate the callous attitude of an administration that seems to have no compassion for the down-and-out citizens of this country," the Oklahoma Democrat said.

Congress shares Nixon's opposition to wasteful, inefficient government spending, Albert said, and would go along with several of the cuts the President is requesting.

"However," he added, "We cannot support a wholesale effort to scrap worthwhile programs that have given hope and promise to so many Americans."

The speaker said Nixon's budget would slam the door on hospital and health-clinic construction, federal aid to education and libraries, water and waste-disposal grants and reduce veterans' benefits, Medicare and scores of other programs.

It would also dim the promise of revenue sharing for the states and cities by eliminating federal grants for specific programs, he said, thereby reducing the total amount of money the states and cities will receive.

"This budget certainly does not point us toward a brighter tomorrow," Albert said. "It is a budget without a sense of the affirmative. It is a budget with its hands in its pockets and its eyes on the ground."

Albert said Nixon's statement that Congress is unable to control pending is untrue.

"During the four years that Richard Nixon has been president, his budgets have increased almost 40 per cent, from $195 billion to $269 billion-the largest four-year increase in American history," Albert said. "That budget bulge would have been even more had not Congress cut the President's budget requests by more than $20 billion during the past four years."

Albert also criticized Nixon for failing to deal with tax reform or relief from property taxes in his budget message.

Consumers Helped By Business

By G. DAVID WALLACE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon's consumer adviser says business is more effective at resolving consumer grievances than Congress, which tends to become mired in debate and rhetoric.

Virginia Knauer, whose resignation has been urged by Ralph Nader and legislators during past clashes on consumer bills, cited unit pricing and product warranties as two areas where business moved while Congress was stalled.

"I got so frustrated asking, begging Congress to do something, pass this," said Mrs. Knauer in an interview as she started her second four years in the administration.

On unit pricing, she said: "Congressmen put in all these bills and got their names on them. But nothing happened. Supermarkets just went ahead and did it."

"It's now practically universal. There is probably no need for national legislation on this," she said. "Once business gets the idea that something is good at the cash register, you don't have to force them."

Unit pricing, designating the price of food or other products by weight or measure, permits comparison shopping among containers of different sizes. It has been the subject of several bills introduced in Congress during the last three years. None advanced to the hearing stage.

Supermarket chains began implementing the system on a voluntary basis about three years ago. The latest count by the National Association of Food Chains showed that about 50 per cent of the nation's chain stores used unit pricing.

To illustrate development of product warranties, Mrs. Knauer said that when she first took office, home appliances were the major source of complaints to her office.

The appliance industry set up its Major Appliance Consumer Action Panel and home appliance complaints dropped to third on her complaint list.

Dollar Crisis May Hike Price Of Foreign Goods

By CARL HARTMAN
Associated Press Writer

BASEL, Switzerland (AP)-The result of the current dollar crisis could be higher prices for Americans, especially for the goods they buy abroad.

If the price of the dollar falls-and it was banging at the floor last week in Frankfurt and Tokyo-that kind of price increase is inevitable. The ordinary American would have to pay more not only for his Japanese TV, but also for the Munich beer and Swiss cheese he consumes while watching it.

If he travels for his fun, he would have to put out more for his Rhine wine and geisha girls.

Representatives of central banks, here now for their monthly meeting at the Bank for International Settlements, are not wily financiers out to bilk the American consumer. Nor are they obstreperous bureaucrats determined to frustrate honest businessmen.

They do not make basic decisions and the governments they advise have not been able to grasp the power to accomplish much more.

All they are doing is to figure out adjustments to the world's financial machinery to cope with the basic facts of the situation.

—Industrialists outside the United States, many of them Americans operating abroad, can make many kinds of goods and sell them at lower prices than goods made in America-even advanced technological products that used to be America's pride.

—The United States still has the prestige and responsibility of the world's strongest power, spawning businessmen and tourists eager to venture everywhere, spending heavily on defense abroad and getting its money accepted even though other countries have more of it than they want.

Naturally, cheaper goods sell better than more expensive goods. U.S. imports have risen enormously, and are paid for in dollars. U.S. exports have risen much more slowly, bringing back comparatively few. Last year alone, Americans bought nearly $7 billion worth of foreign goods more than they sold abroad.

Billions more were spent by American soldiers, investors and tourists all over the world.

Since this has been the trend for years, and since the U.S. government now refuses to take back the dollars in exchange for anything else-there is only about $10.5 billion worth of gold in Fort Knox-the dollar has become one of the world's surplus commodities.

Like any surplus commodity, it has fallen in price. In West Germany the price was first lower in 1961, then again in 1969. In 1971 there was a general readjustment, with the dollar going down about 8.5 per cent.

Each time the dollar became cheaper, foreign goods became correspondingly more expensive in the United States.

Gas Explosion Kills 40 In New York

By MARC CHARNEY

NEW YORK (AP) — Numbered pine boxes were lowered to the depths of a huge liquefied-gas storage tank on Staten Island Sunday as firemen began to bring out some of the bodies of 40 workmen trapped by a fiery explosion Saturday.

"The bodies are in pieces," said one man who watched the soot-blackened rim of the 10-story tank. "They were so charred they just fell apart when the firemen touched them."

Twenty-four bodies had been removed by mid-afternoon Sunday. The bodies of four other workmen who had been repairing the lining of the empty tank had been sighted.

One fire official said that most of the men were found with their hands in front of their faces, apparently in a last-ditch effort to shield them from the searing heat. Preliminary autopsies indicated the men died of smoke inhalation, the medical examiner's office said.

The other workmen were presumed buried beneath tons of concrete when the dome-like tank lid–as big as a football field–lifted with a hissing sound on a ring of fire and collapsed shortly after 1 p.m. Saturday. The cause of the blast was still undetermined.

Firemen used jackhammers to break up the massive chunks of reinforced concrete, but Fire Chief John T. O'Hagan warned that "progress will be slow" in recovering all the victims.

Virtually no hope was held for survivors. "The air supply ruptured when the roof collapsed," O'Hagan explained Saturday. "It's doubtful that there's enough oxygen for any of them to survive."

The 600,000-barrel tank, reported to be the largest of its kind in the world, was built to store natural gas in its liquid form at 260 degrees below zero. The gas is revaporized and used during peak winter demand periods.

Indian Fighting Hits South Dakota

By TERRY DEVINE
Associated Press Writer

BUFFALO GAP, S.D. (AP) — It was the usual Saturday night crowd at Bill's Bar, about 50 strong, townspeople, area ranchers, people from nearby Hot Springs and Custer and Indians from the Pine Ridge Reservation a few miles to the east.

It was a jovial crowd, cowboy hats on tables and atop booths. The band played the Western music loud enough to muffle the stamp of high-heeled boots on the bare, wooden floors.

From the outside, the bar with its fancy front looks like something from the Old West. Inside, it's a small-town bar typical of most in the crossroad villages of this plains state.

Wesley Bad Heart Bull wasn't in the bar the night of Jan. 20. He had been black-listed last November by bar owner Dan Degnan, who said he did so after taking a knife away from the 20-year-old Indian.

"We threw him out of here for good about three months ago," Degnan said in an interview in his bar. "He was a real troublemaker, not only here but in Hot Springs, Custer, everywhere he went."

One of the patrons in the bar that night was Darld Schmitz, a 30-year-old Air Force veteran who operates a gas station at Custer. Schmitz and a companion, Sonny Wheeler of Custer, were drinking in the bar.

A few minutes after 2 a.m. Sunday, Jan. 21, Bad Heart Bull was lying in the street with a knife in his chest. He died en route to a Hot Springs hospital.

His death touched off fighting in Custer last Tuesday in which at least eight persons were injured and 36 Indians were arrested.

Schmitz was arrested after the stabbing incident and charged with second-degree manslaughter, the minimum homicide charge in South Dakota which has about 33,000 Indians among its 650,000 population.

Schmitz is free on $2,500 bond, with a preliminary hearing set for Feb. 26 in County Court at Custer.

The Indian demonstrators who gathered here last week want Schmitz re-arrested and charged with murder. They are led by members of the American Indian Movement (AIM), which gained wide attention three months ago when it organized the "Trail of Broken Treaties" caravan to Washington, D.C.

Custer County State's Atty. Robart Gates said he would "prosecute to my fullest ability" on the manslaughter charge. He later agreed to allow an Indian attorney, Ramon Roubideaux of Rapid City, to conduct an independent investigation and said that if evidence turns up to warrant a new charge, he would issue it.

Dennis Banks of Minneapolis, national coordinator for AIM, announced in late January that he and his followers would be in Custer on Feb. 6 to protest against the second degree manslaughter charge. Banks said, "There is no justice for Indians in South Dakota."

AIM has sponsored several demonstrations since then. It disclaimed any responsibility, however, for an outbreak of violence in Rapid City on Friday night when 40 Indians were arrested and 16 persons injured during an evening of window breaking and chair-smashing at a bar.

There are conflicting reports of the events leading up to Bad Heart Bull's death.

Custer County authorities said witnesses testified that Schmitz acted in self defense and that Bad Heart Bull was harrassing bar patrons.

Robert High Eagle of Hot Springs, an Indian who said he witnessed the killing, said the stabbing was deliberate and unprovoked.

Bad Heart Bull's mother, Sarah, was at Bill's Bar that night and was arrested Tuesday in connection with the battle with police in Custer where three buildings, including the court house, were set afire.

"It was just plain murder," she said of her son's death.

Degnan contended that Bad Heart Bull was outside his bar "with a length of heavy chain. He had been rattling it at customers as they walked in and out of the bar, but he went for a long time before he swung it at anyone."

When Schmitz walked out of the bar, Degnan said, "Bad Heart Bull went after Schmitz with the chain."

Fall River County Sheriff Jack Manke said Bad Heart Bull had a record of 19 arrests, including assault on a police officer, in the past two years. He said the youth had been in jail in Custer, Hot Springs and Hill City on assault, disturbing the peace and public intoxication charges.

Spring Marathon April 9-13

By DON GLICKSTEIN

From Canada and California, Mississippi and Florida, people come to the UMass School of Education for that semi-annual smorgasbord of speakers, discussions, films, demonstrations, and modular credits called simply "the Marathon".

Begun in 1968 as a one-day, ten-hour showcase by some excited doctoral students, the Marathon has grown to a week-long open house for the controversial School of Education.

Sam Bowles, recently appointed to the economics department here, conducts a seminar on new directions in education at last November's School of Ed. Marathon.

The coordinators of the Spring, 1973 Marathon—April 9-13—began inviting presentors last semester. At this writing, doctoral candidates Jerry Tomas and Chuck Schwahn expect one of the highlights of the Spring Marathon to be presentations by the American Bar Association; the ABA's topic, "the school and the law", will include discussions about property taxes and busing.

Schwahn and Tomas are also negotiating with "The Advocates", an educational television series, for a taping of the show at UMass.

Another scheduled speaker is Don Glines, a director of the Wilson Laboratory School of Mankato State College in Minnesota. The Wilson School is a renown experimental public school.

6000 Attended in Fall

An estimated 6000 students, professional educators, and residents of surrounding communities attended last Fall's Marathon. The 700 scheduled hours of events included topics in and out of traditional educational spectrums: future studies bilingual education, collective bargaining, drama, computers, bicycles, and even a travelogue about Alaska.

Many of the topics showed a tongue-in-cheek humour. "Why Is It That It's Always the Humanistic Teachers Who Get Fired?—'Cause They're Stupid, That's Why!" vied for attention with "Jumping Off Mountains With Only Minor Bruises."

Dean of the School, Dwight W. Allen, proposed an "alumni professoriate", which would enable any person receiving a doctorate at UMass to "teach anything to anybody, anywhere" for credit at UMass. The Marathon was not entirely steeped in innovation, however. Speakers from across the country presented their ideas about learning disabilities, adult education, teacher training, urban education, and "eye movement preferences and learning".

School of Education Marathons have traditionally exuded an exuberant ethos. The School's corridors are decorated with multi-colored announcements, children and teachers crowd the hallways, milling, rushing, exchanging news.

The Spring, 1973 Marathon should be no different.

N.E. Families Await POW's

(AP)—Fluttery, nervous anxiety gripped four New England families Sunday night as they awaited word from halfway around the world that their loved ones had been released from Communist prison camps in Indochina.

The first 142 men among those imprisoned by the Communists were to be released Sunday night Eastern Standard Time. Twenty-seven were to be released in South Vietnam and the remainder in Hanoi.

When the families of those to be released were notified by the Defense Department Saturday night, "excited" was the word which best summed up their reactions.

Gretchen Wanat, who lives in Foxboro, Mass., said, "I'm just too excited—I just can't believe it," when notified that her husband, Army Capt. George Wanat Jr., was on the initial list.

Minear Reviews Japanese War Trials

By BLAIR MCCUNE

Professor Richard Minear, author of Victor's Justice: the Tokyo War Crimes Trial, recently addressed a meeting of the Japanese-American Club. The lecture started with a question which indicated the general lack of knowledge the audience had about the Eastern version of the Nuremburg trials. Professor Minear revealed some of the facts about the trial: 25 Japanese war leaders were tried, and of these seven were hanged, among them Prime Minister Tojo.

According to the lecturer, the trials proceedurally were blatantly unfair. The eleven judges, one from each allied country, used a simple majority vote to determine innocence or guilt,—a bizarre and unprecedented legal proceeding. One of the defendants, Foreign Minister Hirota was hanged by a 6-5 vote. The crime which the Japanese leaders were found guilty of was that of "aggression," a concept which was then, and still is now, undefined in international law. Many other inequities and injustices were revealed by Professor Minear, who said that the trials were: "botched from the word go."

Need Help With Income Taxes?

W-2 forms, tax deductions, and 150 UMass-Amherst students.

If you're an elderly or low-income resident of Western Massachusetts, that phrase could be music for your ears and dollars for your pocketbook.

And it's all because of V.I.T.A., a cooperative program of the Internal Revenue Service and the University of Massachusetts-Amherst Center for Outreach Programs. V.I.T.A. stands for Volunteer Income Tax Assistance, given by the 150 UMass students stationed on campus and in the cities of Springfield, Holyoke, Chicopee, Northampton, Easthampton, Belchertown, and Ware.

After four nights of training, by IRS personnel, in the ways of tax return forms 10-40 and 10-40A, and inherent questions, the 150 students have been scheduled afternoons and evenings to await people seeking help in filling out their tax forms. William M. Burke, director of the UMass Center for Outreach Programs, estimates a total savings of about $30,000 will be realized for a total of 3,000 taxpayers, an average of $10 a person.

The help sessions will continue through April 16, and students will receive from one to three academic credits, depending on the number of hours they put into the program.

According to statistics of the IRS office in Boston, about 2,000 such volunteers, students and others, have been trained throughout the state, with the UMass program the largest in terms of number of volunteers. College students in Georgia, California, and Michigan have also participated in the V.I.T.A. program.

Elderly and low-income residents wishing tax form help may come to the following locations, at the times indicated:

Springfield—Urban League, State St., 3 to 5 and 7 to 9 p.m. Monday through Friday. South End Community Center, Williams St., 3 to 5 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 7 to 9 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Chicopee—CROP office (Community Regional Opportunity Program), 161 School St., 7 to 9 p.m. Monday and 3 to 5 and 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesday through Thursday.

Holyoke—Legal Service, 193 Main St., 7 to 9 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

Hampshire County Action Commission in Belchertown, Easthampton, Northampton, and Ware—for days and times call David Johnson in Northampton at 584-6863.

On the UMass-Amherst campus, students may receive help according to this schedule: 7 to 9 p.m. weekdays in the Suffolk Room of the Student Union. And in residence areas, at the specified dates, from 2 to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 1 to 5 p.m. Friday: Southwest, through Feb. 16; Orchard Hill, Feb. 19 to 23 and March 19 to 23; Northeast, Feb. 26 to March 2; Sylvan, March 5 to 9 and April 9 to 13; and Central, March 12 to 16 and April 2 to 6.

UMass Business Manager Appointed To Committee

Gerald J. Grady, business manager of UMass, Amherst, has been appointed to the staff of the Select Committee on Committees of the U.S. House of Representatives in Washington, D.C. The recently established Select Committee will make a study of the House Committee jurisdiction and operations; it is a bipartisan committee headed by Congressman Richard Bolling of Kansas City, Mo.

Thomas B. Campion, vice-chancellor for administrative services, announced Friday that Grady has been granted a leave of absence to participate in the study, expected to take about fourteen months. Grady will begin working for the committee on a full-time basis on May 1. At the University, Grady has been responsible for labor relations and various auxiliary services, and teaches in the political science department.

He came to the University in 1959 from the University of Maine, where he was a member of the government department. In 1956-57 he served as a Congressional Fellow in Washington, D.C., and in 1958 was a candidate for Congress. He is Secretary-Treasurer of both the New England and Northeastern Political Science Associations, is a member of the American Political Science Association, and belongs to various other professional and civic organizations.

Last Chance For Absentee Ballot

The last day to apply for an absentee ballot for the February 20th Town Election will be Friday, February 16, by 12:00 noon. No. applications can be accepted after that date and hour. Normally applications for absentee ballots are accepted up until noon on the day before the election but in this case Monday, February 19th, is a holiday—Washington's Birthday.

Voters who will be away from Amherst on February 20th are urged to apply for a ballot early enough to allow time for it to be mailed to their out-of-town address and returned to the Town Clerk before the polls close on election day. Voters who are physically unable to go to the polls may apply for an absentee ballot to be mailed to their Amherst address. All absentee ballots must be notarized in order to be counted.

It's Your Store

People's Market is a student-run, non-profit grocery store which opens today at 10:30 in the Student Union. The store carries a wide variety of items, including home-baked breads and pastries, fresh fruits and vegetables, canned goods, dairy products, health foods, and a variety of grains.

The prices at People's Market are considerably less than prices at local supermarkets, in some cases as much as 50% less. They can afford to be lower for many reasons: there is low overhead cost (Student Union space rental is free); it is entirely student-operated at minimal wages; it is not operated at a profit; and most of the goods are supplied directly from a wholesaler who deals mainly with food co-operatives.

People's Market is a community-owned store, designed to serve the people of UMass. It can maintain its low prices only if the people of the community patronize it. The larger the volume of sales, the less expensive the food will be.

One more thing. Don't rip it off. Shoplifting will result only in higher prices, which will defeat the purpose of having a community-owned store on campus.

People's Market is located on the first floor of the Student Union, next to the Commonwealth Room, where the Science Fiction Library used to be. Take the time today to go see it. It's your store.

'THE ADMINISTRATION WAS VERY SENTIMENTAL AND WANTED EVERYTHING JUST THE WAY YOU LEFT IT'

People's Market

Economic Alternative

Gross economic exploitation of the masses has been, is now and will continue to be an opporessive reality as long as we sit back and allow it to continue unchecked. The time to cease rhetoric and take action affirming our principles has long since been at hand. The formation of the UMass Peoples' Market is our vehicle for this action, for we are dedicated to exposing and examining the contradictions of this exploitative profiteering system, and we will provide an alternative means for ending this economic rip-off of our community.

The UMass People's Market made the long, arduous journey to a functioning organization that has set realistic goals for itself for growth and self-sufficiency; and we have developed plans for the systematic achievement of these goals within specific periods of time.

Remember, the UMass Peoples' Market exists to serve you, not to enrich the fat cat minority who hold all the wealth. We are here as a tool of the community to give you support for your activities, for lower prices, lower taxes and for student jobs. We will not co-exist peacefully with the profiteers, but we will do our best to bring back fair, legitimate business practices.

We must realize at this time however, that the retail food business is one which must be run efficiently, on a small margin and with a high volume if it is to be successful enough to offer competitive prices to its members. The UMass Peoples' is your institution, your alternative, your chance to "put your money where your ideals are." We are realistically and aggressively seeking to serve you, the student body of UMass, and we earnestly need your support and co-operation to succeed in the business of meeting the needs of our community.

We recognize that all too often student associations become meaningless toys that accomplish or change nothing at all. We firmly believe, however, that by building ourselves a strong economic base, we (students) will begin to take control of our own lives, we will begin to have power, we will begin to effect positive change. The Market stands for social justice and honest enterprise, and vehemently opposes corporate capitalism and profiteering.

The Peoples' Market is here primarily to aid you—the student community. The Market's basic, underlying and dominant theme is community service and community control. And that means precisely that—the control, direction, regulation and coordination of the Market's activities. Running the Market will require a faith and a trust in people, in each other, and in our responsibilities to the peoples of our community.

Unfortunately, in a profit-oriented society, economic power means political power and, in reality, there is no such thing as corporate neutrality—it is a capitalistic cop-out on responsibility for facing important human issues. As a non-profit market we will be responsive to your needs and desires and we will implement your community goals. But, more importantly, we will confuse neither our role or service to the community nor our politics, with the role of political lobbying and participation in local politicking. The wisdom of knowing whether the market should be for or against our foreign policy, or if a product is sexist or racist or unhealthful, or if a company uses discriminatory practices in any form, or if profit is good or bad—this wisdom will come from you the people we are here to serve. You must decide these questions and the role of the Market will be to implement your decisions in every aspect of our operation. Thus, community control is, and must be, the key to the organization of the Peoples' Market. We will actively and strongly oppose the temptation to view the consumer as an "outsider" or someone who "doesn't understand or know how the Market is or should be run because they're not from the Market." We exist to serve the Community but more than that, to be representative of student needs and to build a strong economic power based and a sense of community feeling and involvement.

It is important to remember, however, that for a non-profit store in the midst of a profit-oriented society, community control must also mean worker control: industrial democracy is an essential part of community democracy. In the continuing struggle between the wealthy few who want more, and the workers, any institution that is geared toward community goals is taking power from these wealthy few and returning it to most of us who are laborers.

The Peoples' Market is based on the premise that change is possible—that we can make things better. We talk of providing alternative to a corrupt system. We dream of a world without wars, discrimination or hunger. Yet as long as people feel that change is hopeless, organizing a mass movement is hopeless.

As we are all members of the UMass community, so also are we all members of the Peoples' Market—there is no "fee", no "joining," no bureaucratic bullshit. Let's unite in this common venture for economic liberation, let us support the Market in all its aspects and ideals and goals. Help us make this your institution, your answer to capitalist exploitation. Let's use the Market to reawaken the spirit of community and cooperation that we all pay lip service to so frequently, yet so seldom act on. The UMass Peoples' Market gives us the opportunity to keep our economic resources where they belong—within our own community. Support us and we will do our best to serve you. The more business that you do with us, the lower the cost will be for you. Rip-offs will cost us all money, as well as drive costs up exorbitantly. This is your Market people—lets make it work for all of us.

Peoples' Market is a non-profit, student-run grocery store, in the Student Union. It opens today at 10:30 a.m.

Why There Was Snow

Last week in this column, I referred to the snow removal operations here in Amherst after the last snowfall. The basic point of my article was to ask why the snow removal operations were so bad.

Subsequent to the article I received a reply to my question from Mr. Daniel W. Haslegrave, Assistant to the Superintendent of the Amherst Department of Public Works. This is what he said:

Dear Gabe:

In response to your question in Monday's "Collegian" as to why "the snow removal was so bad": since every available piece of town equipment was in use by a crew that worked for 36 hours with only 10 hours rest, I believe the problem originated in the severe conditions accompanying the storm. Namely, an unusually heavy and wet snowfall that later froze as the temperature dropped. Under such conditions, the plows must make more than the usual number of passes on a roadway before it is adequately passable. Unfortunately the combination of compaction and freezing left a very hard and uneven layer on the road surfaces which the plows were unable to remove without the aid of time and salt. Salt, however, will not work unless the temperature is above 20 , and thus was ineffective.

After the plows have done what they can on all the streets, they concentrate on the center of town and those streets where they can do the most good. The heavy traffic on the day following the storm greatly slowed this cleaning up process. Perhaps the university should have considered cancelling classes for an additional day, considering the circumstances following the storm.

If the implication is "will it happen again?", I'm afraid I havn't resolved your concern. Luckily such severe storms are infrequent, but perhaps you can draw some comfort from the knowledge that there is an Amherst Department of Public Works that is doing its best, nature and its elements to the contrary.

Sincerely,
Daniel W. Haslegrave
Assistant To Superintendent Of P.W.

Needless to say, I'm glad Mr. Haslegrave chose to answer my editorial. I think the problem that resulted from the last storm is something people would like to know more about. This letter from Mr. Haslegrave answers some of the questions that were on my mind. I hope it will answer some of yours.

Traveler's Warnings

To The Editor:

Every year the Attorney for Students has received the vicarious opportunity of world travel during Spring vacation. Last year I travelled to Logan, Bradley and LaGuardia before finding the plane at Philadelphia. That was the "Doing the Northeast" tour which I arranged without destination or date of return. My travel agents were two male and two female all snow-pale denizens of Southwest. Red-eyed we planned to dive from the cliffs at Acapulco and swim the bays of Jamaica. Visions of Bermuda's Horseshoe Beach vied with San Juan's casinos for our attention.

Would you believe we had a fine blue-colored neatly completed 8-1/2x11 contract/ticket that assured our departure from Boston's Logan Airport and return for only the rock-bottom prepaid fare of $199.00? Would you also believe that we had first-class hotel accommodations within easy walk of beach and brew? All paid for!

Would you also believe that there was no blank on the contract or ticket that told us where in all the world we were going? There was no named hotel. There was no guarantee of return.

Do you want to know what happened to the four snow-pale, red-eyed, impecunious (short $199 each), desolated denizens of Southwest?

Well, the plane from Boston didn't leave from LaGuardia either (as they were told 5 hours prior to scheduled departure). It did finally leave from Philadelphia and two of the four didn't go because no one told them they needed a Mexican identity card until the day before departure which was materially incorrect. The other couple went to (guess where?) Acapulco! They were fashionably ensconced in an adobe villa last cleaned and renovated shortly before Pancho Villa last drew breath and six to a room, share the bath. They saw Acapulco as they flew in. The beach was within easy walking distance by a platoon of fully-equipped Marines on a forced march-two days without bivouac. They didn't see Acapulco on departure because there was no plane. The bus arrived in Amherst immediately after the Commencement oration in May.

Please-all aspiring vacationers and junketeers-be sure you know where you are going, how much it costs, that your contract clearly includes all information, when you come back and how. Try to insist on guarantees wherever possible in writing. Try to deal with reputable travel agencies and airlines. The extra price you may pay may be the cost of going where you plan and returning when you intend-safely.

House Mouse

To The Editor:

We, the Commuter Assembly Housing Committee are writing this as a plea for help. We are putting out the HOUSE MOUSE, a monthly magazine that deals with housing problems relevant to commuters, and as the number of problems affecting tenants are so numerous, we find that our present staff of four is totally inadequate.

We need writers, reporters and staff workers who are willing to work and are concerned with commuters' problems. Everyone knows that students are discriminated against when they look for an apartment, but unless someone comes and tells us their problem, we can do nothing about it. And everyone knows that tenants are being ripped-off every day by high rents and inadequate housing, but again, unless someone comes to us with their problem we cannot bring it to public attention.

We feel that we are performing a public service, but in order to do it with any degree of efficiency we need more help and information as to the exact nature of your problems. Our office is in room 112, Campus Center, phone, 545-2145. Please drop by or call us.

Injustice?

To The Editor:

On Saturday night, I went to the UMass basketball game as did the hundreds of others who made up the capacity crowd. Since I was a bit late in getting to the Cage, I had to stand by the side of what turned out to be the Third World section. When it came time for the national anthem to be played, most of the people stood up, however many of the Third World people smoked, talked, and sat throughout.

Hardly a day goes by that we don't hear something about what the Third World wants: equality, independence and respect. Yet, in the only country in the world that could guarantee their wants, do they show any respect in return? Those who remained in their seats would be the first to fight any injustices they felt were aimed toward them, yet they do not seem to mind the injustice they showed to their country, their flag and the patriotic people who attended the game. Do these people deserve our respect? I sincerely doubt it.

Meters, Too?

To The Editor:

I would like to voice a complaint in your newspaper directed towards the Parking Office on this campus. In January, the Parking Office placed parking meters on Haigis Mall (Parking Lot #3) plus making the lefthand side of the Mall a tow away zone. As a result of this action by our money-hungry parking office, staff members of the buildings that border on Haigis Mall have had difficulty in finding parking spaces. As a staff member of this university, I feel compelled to protest against this action. Visitors and students likewise have difficulty in finding room to park their cars. One day I spent over 45 minutes looking for a parking space on the Mall thus making me late for work.

I would hope that the Student Senate and Faculty Senate will consider bringing up the issue of parking meters in future meetings. How much does the Parking Office expect of students, faculty and staff? You would think that they would be happy with the recent increase of parking fees but now they clobber us with parking meters and more tow away zones.

Puffton Victimized

To The Editor:

Numerous women have been raped in the Amherst area, and recently an epidemic of rapes have taken place in Puffton Village. Allegedly, a blonde, curly-haired man about five feet, eight inches tall with blue eyes, broad shoulders, and narrow hips has been carousing around Puffton Village. He usually strikes around 1:00 A.M., and he apparently knows when women are alone in their apartments. He has been successful in entering locked doors. One report is that he entered a locked apartment while a woman and her children were asleep in separate bedrooms. At knife-point, he warned the woman not to scream or he would kill her. In another case, he again at knife-point forced one woman to watch the rape of her friend. The two women involved are said to be in the hospital recovering from shock.

A group of people has planned to see the Puffton Village management about getting new locks on their doors. As of yet, no action has been taken by Puffton Village to get these locks, and they also have not warned the occupants about this rapist. Police have given no information or description of this man to the public.

We strongly urge all members of the Amherst community to be on the lookout for this man and to contact the Valley Women's Center at 586-2011 if any information can be provided. It is extremely important to stop this rapist before any more damage is done!

Bike Raffle

To The Editor:

Presently, the Recreation Society, a student organization from the Leisure Studies and Services Department of UMass, is raffling off a 10-speed Raleigh bicycle donated by Bike Broker Inc. of Northampton. The funds received from this raffle will be used to bring guest speakers to the campus who will inform us in the area of leisure services and the part it plays in our lives.

The tickets for the raffle are available at our table in the Campus Center located on the concourse level 9-4 Monday through Friday, from LS&S majors, and at the department office located in Curry Hicks Cage. The price of tickets is 25¢ each or 5/$1.

The drawing will be held on March 6th, and hopefully everyone will purchase tickets to help us reach our goals.

We Have A Home

To The Editor:

Ten Jews have been executed in Iraq. Their crime: Judaism. Ten Jews were tortured to death in Iraqi jail cells for the sole reason of being Jewish.

Once again while Jews die, the world keeps silent. It is quite evident: if anything is to be done about this situation, the Jews will have to do it alone. We could not depend on the world in 1942, neither in 1948, nor in 1967, and we cannot depend on the world in 1973.

I will not let my brothers be killed in any country. The time of the passive Jew has passed. For the first time in two thousand years we have a home. I say this to any and all oppressive world leaders. Let My People Go. Never Again.

Condemnations Solicited

To The Editor:

Once again the Arab world has committed another mass atrocity by murdering ten more innocent Jews in Iraq. These innocent victims, seized from their homes last September, have allegedly been tortured to death, while defenseless in prison.

Again, innocent peoples lives have been extinguished and the world has remained silent. This blatant disregard for human lives through silence is deplorable. In silence we condone these fanatic, brutal acts.

We have two choices; be silent or make our voices heard. It takes very little time to call Western Union and send a telegram to the Iraqi embassy in New York City. It takes very little time to write your senator or congressman to ask for a public condemnation of these barbaric acts for which all humanity should feel shame. It takes very little time and it must be done.

I will do it and I hope I am not alone.

Student Lawyer

To The Editor:

I was extremely annoyed by Richard Howland's letter in Feb. 2 Collegian. My roommate was the person who received that $200 fine. This $200 dollar fine was imposed after a series of $25 dollar fines for the same offense. My roommate was represented by a Mr. Miles, an attorney "recommended" by Mr. Howland. Mr. Miles charged $75 (student rate, normal charge $150) per case, and as Mr. Howland pointed out, there were over 40 such cases in court that day. If Mr. Miles got only half those cases, simple arithmetic will tell you who the rip-off is. Mr. Howland's scare tactics of a possible jail sentence was the stimulis that prompted my friend to visit Mr. Miles. If Howland is truly the "student lawyer" he would help them instead of sending them to such expensive friends which few of us can afford.

Commuter Rap Session

To The Editor:

Since the beginning of this academic year, the Commuter Assembly Executive Council has initiated several new and valuable programs designed to improve the sometimes questionable lot of the commuter. While we feel that these programs are moving us in the right direction, there are many more things that can be done. The Executive Council is looking for a group of people with good ideas to meet several times and rap about their ideas to create an input for the Executive Council. We hope to establish a set of goals for commuters, to find any problems common to commuters that as of yet remain unsolved. We would like to see any interested commuters at the meeting today at 3:30 in room 901 Campus center.

New 'Code Of Conduct' Awaits Trustees' Approval

II. SANCTIONS

The Community has the right to discourage offenses against its members and itself and offenders have the right to the opportunity to rehabilitate themselves and reform misconduct. These factors may be considered in determining sanctions:

1. The character, degree and any aggravation of the offense;
2. The character and past conduct of the offender particularly as reflected in the opinions of others;
3. The reason or explanation regarding the offense;
4. The degree and type of harm actually caused by the offenses; and
5. The likelihood of repeated misconduct by the offender.

These sanctions may be applied either singly or in conjunction with one another.

A. Suspension

In the case of suspension it shall be for a specific term not to exceed one year from the end of the semester in which it is applied except that readmission may be subject to the conditions expressed in the Order of Suspension which must be met prior to readmission which shall not, in any event, by automatic. In order for an Order of Suspension to be applied there must be a written opinion of the reasons therefore which shall include a finding that the offender willfully or recklessly engaged in conduct that resulted or was likely to result in personal injury or severe damage to property, or that the offender could not otherwise be reasonably rehabilitated.

B. Jeopardy and Censure

When an offense is of such character that were it to be repeated, the offender would be suspended, the additional advice of Jeopardy and Censure may be applied. A letter shall be placed in the offender's disciplinary record for a specific time, not to exceed the actual date of the offender's graduation, specifying the offense and the terms of the jeopardy. In the event of a second offense after Jeopardy, Suspension must be considered and any failure to apply suspension must be explained in writing.

C. Fine

A fine may be levied exclusively upon an offender's prospective income and may be applied for any offense. For an offense involving larceny or damage the amount of the fine shall not exceed three times the value of the property except that it shall not be less than ten dollars ($10.00) in any case. Any fine collected shall be first applied as restitution to the victim. In cases where there is no damage or theft, a fine may not exceed two-hundred dollars ($200.00) unless the penalty or suspension would otherwise be applied.

D. Restitution

An offender may be directed to make his victim whole by restitution of property or payment of a specific sum of money, but not in addition to a fine.

E. Work Requirement

An offender may be required to perform specific unremunerative or remunerative labor whether or not directly related to the offense.

F. Restriction

An offender may be restricted from a specific on or off-campus area for a specific time not to exceed the offender's actual date of graduation.

G. Consultation

An offender may be required to consult with an appropriate specialist once, and a recommendation may be made to the specialist regarding treatment.

H. No-Sanction

A sanction of "no-sanction" may be imposed where, in the opinion of the court, it is in the mutual best interests of the community and the offender. In no case shall the court be permitted, without the agreement of the defendant, to find "guilty but no-sanction" where there is reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendant.

I. Other

A sentence may be constructed to suit the rehabilitation of the offender without being limited by the foregoing sanctions.

No sentence may be increased by any reviewing authority nor may terms or conditions be substituted. A reviewing authority may only reduce or eliminate any specific sanction or combination of sanctions.

III. DEFENSES

Any violation of this Code shall be subject to the defense of consent and mistake. The defense of consent shall require that the person giving consent must be authorized and competent to give such consent and must give such consent knowledgeably given a reasonable appraisal of pertinent facts. The defense of mistake shall require that the person claiming the mistake shall have acted as a reasonably prudent person given a reasonable appraisal of the pertinent facts.

Consent or mistake which is the product of the ruse of fraud or negligence of the person claiming the benefit thereof, shall not be a defense.

A "victim" in any sense of this Code shall be permitted to consent after the fact of any violation so long as such consent is freely and voluntarily given without threat or illegal inducement.

IV. PROCEDURAL GUARANTEES

No sanctions may be applied against any person persuant to this Code except that the person against whom any sanction is applied shall have been accorded the procedural guarantees of Notice, Hearing, Presentation, and Appeal as provided in Chapter 5, Article VII of the General Laws of the Student Government Association.

V. SCOPE OF UNIVERSITY DISCIPLINE

Nothing contained in this Code shall relieve any person subject hereto of the responsibility of obeying the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Any offense under this Code and any offense under the General Laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts may be tried in the appropriate student judiciaries styled as an offense under this Code and that the available sanctions shall be exclusively those provided by this Code.

Harlem Dance Company Recital

The Dance Theatre of Harlem is opening a three-day visit at UMass today with two master classes in the Women's Physical Education Building at 3:30 p.m.

Both sessions, one for advanced ballet students with Arthur Mitchell as instructor, and the other, for intermediate level students with ballet master William Scott as instructor, are open to spectators without charge.

Two different evening performances by The Dance Theatre of Harlem are scheduled for Bowker Auditorium Feb. 13 and 14 at 8 p.m. Tomorrow evening's program, Tuesday, Feb. 13, includes "Holberg Suite", "Biosfera", "Afternoon of A Faun" and "Forces of Rhythm". Wednesday evening, the company will offer "Concerto Barocco", "Forces of Rhythm", "Agon" and "Rhythmetron".

In its five year existence, The Dance Theatre of Harlem has developed into a first-rate classical ballet company and has received praise from critics and public alike for its freshness and high level of achievement. The company utilizes choreography of many of the greatest artists, and during its residence at the University of Massachusetts, audiences will witness the work of Arthur Mitchell, George Balanchine, Ruth Page and Louis Johnson.

Reserved tickets at $4 (half-price to UMass undergraduates) will be available until 4 p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday at the Council Office, 125 Herter Hall. Remaining tickets go on sale at Bowker Auditorium one hour before each performance.

Student Candidates Canvass On Campus

Eight student candidates for Town Meeting Member in Amherst will start a door to door campaign on Campus this week. The students are running from Precinct Two which includes all of Southwest. They will be discussing issues such as safe-ride stickers, child-care centers, town growth and its affects on pollution, and student-town relations. They will also be campaigning for George Scheurer, a candidate for Selectman concerned with many of the same issues.

The town election is next Tuesday, February 20; with the polling place at the firehouse in downtown Amherst, next to Louis' Market. Anyone registered to vote in Amherst who will be out of town on the date of the election may vote now in the Town Clerk's office from eight a.m. until four p.m. The candidates are Diane Simpson - 302 Pierpont, Bill Sage - 2209 John Adams, Howard Bloom - 463 Cance, Sue Bamford - 444 Cance, Aly Rhyne - 616 John Quincy Adams, Bill Cassidy - 2201 John Adams, Steve Ferber - 463 Cance.

Rape Phone Line

Because women on campus are not reporting rapes or attempted rapes, the UMass Department of Public Safety (Police Department) has established an anonymous phone line for women who have been victims of any sex offense. Women may call to provide descriptions of the man, the place, time, and vehicle used.

This information will remain confidential and will be used to identify unknown sex offenders in the Five-College community. Women who call need not divulge any information about themselves unless they wish to.

The phone line will be operational seven days a week, from 12 p.m. to 1 p.m. and will be staffed by a POLICEWOMAN.

The number to call is 545-2122.

Nuclear Plant And Pollution Control

In an attempt to reduce radioactive releases from its stack, the Vermont Yankee nuclear power plant is planning to install an "interim" charcoal filtration system, to begin working in April, the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution has learned.

The radiation problem recently returned to public attention, the Coalition said, when on January 16 and 17 the big nuclear plant on the Connecticut River at Vernon, Vt., emitted radioactivity for 12 and 30-minute periods at rates about 11 and two times more than government-set limits, respectively.

According to Coalition Legal/Technical Chairman Esther C. Poneck, these high releases "dramatized" the Coalition's contention that the plant should not be allowed to operate without the charcoal filters which Vermont Yankee had said could not be put up until the summer.

"We won't make them eat humble pie," Coalition attorney Anthony Z. Roisman said Monday from his Washington office. "We're just glad that they've decided to do something about one of their problems anyway."

The Vermont Yankee plant is currently in the fourth of a scheduled six-week shutdown for the purpose of replacing the leaking fuel rods which caused radioactivity to be released much faster than expected during the fall.

The New England Coalition, a citizens group based in Brattleboro, Vt., also complimented new Vermont governor Thomas P. Salmon for expressing his concern over the possible dangers of radiation to the public, and for planning a full-scale review of the state's electrical energy system, including Vermont Yankee.

Further, Harry Ashe, director of the Vermont Health Department's Division of Industrial Hygiene, has announced the appointment of a new state physicist to perform "surveillance and examination" of plant records and operations. "This is another good step in the direction of protecting the public," said Mrs. Poneck for the Coalition.

Mrs. Poneck noted that Vermont now limits total radioactivity released for a whole year, but that the Health Department is considering further measures to restrict "bursts" such as occurred in January.

However, the same spokesman also pointed out that several important Coalition contentions have not been met, especially concerning whether nuclear power plants may have catastrophic accidents, and what will be done with the highly radioactive wastes.

"To foreclose examination of the entire question is to exacerbate public mistrust," Attorney Roisman said February 2 at hearings in Washington about the effects of the whole nuclear "fuel cycle," from the mining of uranium to the ultimate storage of the lethal wastes, a question to which Roisman says the Atomic Energy Commission is giving only "cavalier treatment."

Roisman, a well-known public-interest lawyer, was recently praised by outgoing Atomic Energy Commission chairman James R. Schlesinger for having helped bring to light certain "quality control" shortcomings at the Indian Point 2 nuclear power plant in New York.

WMPIRG Investigates Highway

Four New England environmental and community groups, including the Western Mass. Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG), have formed the New England Highway Coalition to study regional transportation planning, WMPIRG Director Ronald E. Bogard announced today.

The Coalition includes the Vermont Public Interest Research Group (VPIRG), Connecticut Citizen Action Group (CCAG), and the Berkshire-Litchfield Environmental Conservancy Council, Inc. (BLECC), as well as WMPIRG.

Members of the Coalition organized to discuss the evolution of a superhighway which, said Bogard, "is springing up unnoticed in the three-state area."

In a report issued this morning, the Coalition charges that pieces of a new north-south superhighway "are being planned, approved and built under the guise of 'town bypasses' and 'local highway improvements' unrelated to a larger plan. But these apparently scattered developments chart the pattern of a new limited- access, four-lane divided highway spanning the three states of Connecticut, Massachusetts and Vermont."

The report outlined the new highway as extending from a junction with Interstate 95 at Norwalk, Connecticut to Interstate 89 near Bethel or Burlington, Vermont, roughly following the corridor of the present U.S. Route 7. Information on the proposed road, said Coalition spokesmen, was obtained from highway department maps and publications.

In the same statement, the group maintains that "a road of such magnitude will irreparably alter both the physical environment and the life of people in its path; construction should not be allowed to proceed prior to extensive study and evaluation of its effect." The Coalition charges that transportation officials have withheld or misrepresented the scope of the new highway in public hearings, and that citizens have been denied a voice in the development of the road.

Bogard said the Coalition is considering the possibility of legal action to insure the best choice of transportation plans for the region.

Exchange With U Of Victoria Enters Second Year

Next year will be the second year of the University of Massachusetts academic year student exchange program with the University of Victoria in British Columbia. Under this program a few University of Massachusetts undergraduates are accepted each year for study as juniors or seniors at the Univerity of Victoria, and receive full academic credit towards their UMass degrees for courses successfully completed at Victoria. An equal number of students from the University of Victoria can study at the Amherst campus although there are none here this year.

The University of Victoria is located in the outskirts of Victoria, a city of 175,000, capital of British Columbia, at the southeast tip of Vancouver Island. The modern, centralized campus overlooks the Puget Sound. The two nearest major cities, Vancouver and Seattle, are accessible by air or by ferry.

The University of Victoria has Faculties of Arts and Science, Education, and Fine Arts. In addition to the usual course offerings in the humanities, in science, and in the social sciences, the Faculty of Arts and Science appears to offer a particularly wide variety of courses in the fields of English, marine biology and oceanography, Canadian history, and psychology. The Faculty of Fine Arts offers courses in theater arts, visual arts, art history, and music. The university has excellent programs in English, education, and geography. There are about 3,000 students at the University of Victoria.

One of the students currently at Victoria has written that "The University is very serious about its academics and can offer anyone challenging and rewarding courses. For those of us who only speak English, the program offers the opportunity of living in a foreign country in which we can feel comfortable. The differences between America and Canada are subtle and yet very real and noticeable. It is a good place to go to gain some objectivity about the affairs and culture of the U.S."

Applicants for the program at the University of Victoria should have at least a 3.0 cumulative average. Students should plan to go during their junior or senior year and for the full academic year, not just a semester.

Tuition and fees at the University of Victoria are approximately the same as at the University of Massachusetts, and travel costs to the West Coast would be the only additional expense. A limited amount of financial aid may be available for travel costs. Students interested in applying for the program should contact Mrs. Barbara B. Burn, Director of International Programs, 239 Whitmore, as soon as possible for application forms.

UMass Awarded Grant For Microbiology Study

WASHINGTON D.C., 1973—U.S. Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R,—Mass., and Sen. Edward W. Brooke today announced that the University of Massachusetts at Amherst has been awarded a $41,900 grant from the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases for the cultivation of virulent "Treponema Pallidum."

C. D. Cob of the University's Department of Microbiology will be the principal investigator. The grant will provide funding for the first year of a three-year project.

Opportunity For Study In Japan

An eight-week summer study trip to Japan is being offered by the UMass Asian Studies department for students of Japanese and those with special contact or relationship to Japan.

The faculty supervised and taught course will include four weeks of study in Tokyo, two weeks in Kyoto and two weeks of guided travels to other cultural sites, starting July 1 through August 31. The purpose of the course is to provide intensive experience with spoken Japanese.

The study group will be limited in size and full cost to the student, including transportation and accommodations, will be $1,450.00.

In addition to general activities, regular classroom work will be carried on while in Tokyo and Kyoto.

Professor William Naff, chairman of the UMass Asian Studies program, will be in charge of the group with Yasuko Hadsall, an instructor in Japanese, assisting.

For further information contact the Asian Studies office in 806 Thompson Tower on campus.

Dutch Writer To Lecture Wednesday

On Wednesday, the 14th of February, a Dutch writer will be a guest on campus. He will give a lecture, in English, on contemporary Dutch fiction at 8 p.m. that night in the Campus Center 803. It is hoped that attendance will be good, particularly since it is the first time a writer from Holland has visited here.

Esteban Lopez was born (1931) of Spanish parents in Belgium, writes in Dutch and lives off the coast of Spain. Hence he represents in his own person the very cosmopolitan character of contemporary Dutch literature, a body of writing that has great beauty, innovative surprises and daring themes. Mr. Lopez has worked as an advertising agent, public relations consultant and as a freelance journalist. Since 1957 he has lived entirely from his own writing. He has published ten novels, a collection of stories and one of essays. A play of his won a coveted award in 1959 and his work has been translated into German and other languages. He is presently in the States as a member of the International Writers Program at Iowa State University.

Mr. Lopez's lecture is sponsored by the Department of Germanic Languages and the Program of Dutch Language and Letters, both of which are on the fifth floor of Herter Hall. For additional information please contact Professor E. M. Beekman, 522 Herter, telephone: 545-0319.

LOSE 20 POUNDS IN TWO WEEKS!

Famous U.S. Women Ski Team Diet

During the non-snow off season the U.S. Women's Alpine Ski Team members go on the "Ski Team" diet to lose 20 pounds in two weeks. That's right — 20 pounds in 14 days! The basis of the diet is chemical food action and was devised by a famous Colorado physician especially for the U.S. Ski Team. Normal energy is maintained (very important!) while reducing. You keep "full" — no starvation — because the diet is designed that way! It's a diet that is easy to follow whether you work, travel or stay at home.

This is, honestly, a fantastically successful diet. If it weren't, the U.S. Women's Ski Team wouldn't be permitted to use it! Right? So, give yourself the same break the U.S. Ski Team gets. Lose weight the scientific, proven way. Even if you've tried all the other diets, you owe it to yourself to try the U.S. Women's Ski Team Diet. That is, if you really do want to lose 20 pounds in two weeks. Order today. Tear this out as a reminder.

Send only $2.00 ($2.25 for Rush Service) — cash is O.K. — to Information Sources Co., P.O. Box 962, Dept. S?, Carpinteria, Calif. 93013. Don't order unless you expect to lose 20 pounds in two weeks! Because that's what the Ski Team Diet will do!

Trackmen Win First Meet

By WALT POWERS

"U.N.H. may not be the greatest team in the world, but just getting on the winning track gives us a psychological advantage that should carry us to the conference championships," said co-captain Tony Pendleton, after the UMass indoor track team clobbered the Wildcats on their home turf by a score of 68-41. In a marked reversal from their previous efforts, the Minutemen utilized a balanced scoring attack to capture nine of the thirteen events in Saturday afternoon's encounter. In snapping their four meet losing streak, UMass swept five events and were only shut out in one.

Sophomore Pete Ryan was bothered by a back injury in the triple jump, and barely qualified for the finals. On his last jump of the afternoon, Ryan won with a jump of 22'-3/4", the longest of the season for UMass.

Freshman high jumper Mark Finnerty salvaged third place for UMass in the high jump, clearing the bar at 5'10".

It was a battle between two UMass sophomores in the shot put and Ed McAleney won it with a heave of 43'4", less than three inches longer than Carmen Lettizia's best throw.

In the finals of the hurdles event, the UMass trio of Jim Hennessey, John Mounger, and Curt Stegeewald were never seriously challenged enroute to a 1-2-3 sweep.

Faster starts gave UMass another sweep in the 60-yard dash. In the finals, Tom Beland exploded from the blocks ahead of teammates Tony and Marshall Pendleton. Tony Pendleton on his blistering hundred speed to catch Beland near the tape, and brother Marshall, finishing hard, took third.

Co-captain Steve Levine had to fight for his life in the 600-yard run. He fell behind early, and had to resort to a furious gun lap kick to catch Al Paige of U.N.H.

UMass got their third and final sweep in the mile with Bill Gillin, winning in a time of 4:17.6. Freshman Tom Maguire beat out Randy Thomas for second place.

Junior John Maloney hung on the tail of UNH's Art Vogel for four laps, then breezed past him to win easily in 2:15.2. Freshman Peter Byron just missed catching Vogel at the tape.

New Hampshire finished 1-2 in the pole vault but Minuteman Don McKeough's third place finish prevented a UNH sweep.

The two-mile was little more than a showcase for UNH sophomore Bruce Butterworth, who led all the way, and set a new UNH indoor record in the process. Doug O'Connell, who ran earlier in the mile, finished second for UMass, and Phil Broughton beat out teammate Tom Wilson for third.

The UMass mile relay team of John McLellan, Dennis Busa, Tom Beland and Steve Levine ran to a five-second victory in a time of 3:28. UMass wrapped things up in the two-mile relay, winning easily in the relatively slow time of 8:16.9.

UMass returns to UNH next Saturday to defend their Yankee Conference title.

Gymnasts Top Cornell

By BRENDA RAU

Flanked by an appreciative overflow crowd in Boyden Auxiliary Gym, the UMass gymnasts rolled over an outclassed Cornell team. The victory had a lot to do with UMass having a consistent day but it was also a very back-luck day for usually hard hitting Cornell. Cornell, in great red and white uniforms, had fine routines, but was plagued by falling off and bad breaks in their routines. The Minutemen outscored them in every event as well as taking first place in every one.

Grabbing some of those top honors was meet high scorer, co-captain Jay Aronstein who came up with a near perfect 9.6 still rings set.

Co-captain Steve Scuderi was up to nice form in the high bar event pulling in a 9.15. Scuderi, in general, had a fine day taking top honors in parallel bars, with a low but exciting 8.6. He came up with a good enough total, too, to take the top all-around spot.

Another fine performance came from young Jack Fabbricante who threw a round-off back somersault vault for a 9.05 top spot.

Rich Seikunas took second honors in the all-around, grabbing first honors in both floor exercise and pommel horse.

Cornell had few colors to show. Little Brian Dawson, however, became a quick friend to the crowd with his style and class, but actually came up with little to boost their score. A decent vault and floor routines helped him only to third place all-around honors.

UMass' Dan Spier had a good day on high bar but seemed overtense in his other events especially parallel bars where he often looks excellent. Jack Berner also looked pretty well on floor exercise.

Mention should also be made of a decent, but shaky, Jay Thomsen floor routine as well as a solid set for Jim Battista on still rings. Roy Johnson in vaulting and Bill Brouillet on parallel bars had a good day.

All in all, it wasn't a close meet but a friendly and enthusiastic Cornell group made for a good Saturday afternoon. The final score was UMass 155.10 to Cornell's 146.25.

Swimmers Take 5th in YanCon Tourney

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

Orono, Maine, home of the State University is nestled right in the heart of ski country. This past Saturday, however, it hosted an entirely different sport, the Yankee Conference Men's Swimming Championships. UConn won easily as expected with Vermont 2nd, New Hampshire 3rd, Maine 4th, UMass 5th, and Rhode Island 6th.

Minutemen swimmers accumulated 20 points in competition and did better than expected in the swimming events. But in the diving event which has been UMass' strong point all season, the Minutemen fell short.

Freshman Mark D'Agnese proved to be the high point scorer for UMass winning a total of 9 points. He placed second in the 50 Freestyle (time 23.4); 200 Backstroke, 4th (2:15); and 6th in the 200 Breaststroke (2:33).

The Medley Relay Team of George Kwiecien, Bob Okolita, Loomas, and Pete Ouellette scored 5th.

Also placing 5th was the Freestyle Relay Team of Ouellette, Ron Boucher, Loomas and Dick Blaisdell.

Blaisdell grabbed 6th in the 100 Freestyle.

Diver Jeff Crouse placed 5th in the one meter Diving Competition. UConn boasted three fine divers who scored in both events as did a tremendous UNH diver O'Bryon, who placed first in both events.

UConn also was especially strong in the 200 Breaststroke (time 2:27) and UNH in the 200 Butterfly (time 2:01).

UMass' Spencer Sullivan broke his 13-minute record in the 1,000 Freestyle with a time of 12:46 and diver Dana Goulston upped his score by 20 points.

Tom Manfredi, who has taken over the coaching position for Joe Rogers who has been out ill, was pleased with the team's performance, but is keeping them on their touch practice sessions in preparation for the upcoming meets.

Wednesday the Minutemen travel to Tufts, a very flexible team that always does well in its own pool. Saturday, UMass hosts URI at home in their key meet of the season with a chance for their first victory.

Fine Day For Hub Fans

Celtics, 120-96 Bruins, 2-0

BOSTON (AP) — The name of the game is run as far as the Boston Celtics are concerned and they figure to keep rolling as long as John Havlicek's cranky knees hold out.

Havlicek, noted for his clutch play in 11 National Basketball Association campaigns, shook off pain and directed Boston's awesome running game Sunday as the Celtics wore down the weary Milwaukee Bucks for a surprisingly easy 120-96 victory.

The Boston captain managed just two free throws as Milwaukee took a 32-28 first period lead. Then, he sat on the bench taking heat treatment on his knees briefly as the Bucks moved out 52-42 midway through the second quarter.

Suddenly, the Celtics got their fast break into high gear and left the Bucks staggering with a 16-2 outburst and a 58-54 halftime lead. Boston continued to pout it on in a 35-point third period and it was no contest the rest of the way.

"Havlicek was moving and that makes all the difference in the world," Boston Coach Tommy Heinsohn said. "We're a different ball club when he's running."

Havlicek finished with 21 points, eight rebounds and eight assists in 36 minutes of play.

BOSTON (AP) — Goalie Ross Brooks, a 35-year-old rookie registered his first National Hockey League shutout Sunday night as the Boston Bruins won their third game in a row for new coach Bep Guidolin in 2-0 decision over the Los Angeles Kings.

Brooks, unbeaten in seven NHP starts in a season interrupted by a broken collar bone, had 22 saves and earned the victory on goals by Terry O'Reilly and Mike Walton.

Los Angeles goalie Gary Edwards also turned in an outstanding effort robbing the Bruins on several occasions while making 27 saves.

O'Reilly, also a rookie, got a gift goal at 7:44 of the first period when his pass in front of the net deflected off Los Angeles' defenseman Harry Howell's skate and went past Edwards.

Walton scored his 25th goal on a ten-foot shot after being fed by Dallas Smith who intercepted a Los Angeles clearing pass in the opening second of the second period.

Los Angeles, battling for a playoff berth in the West Division, played a defensive game most of the way. The Bruins pressed the action but were prevented from mounting the score by Edwards' goaltending.

Skaters Trip Hamilton, 7-3

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

Things were looking gloomy for the Minutemen at Orr Rink on Friday night as the pucksters spotted the Hamilton Continentals an early goal and 1-0 lead. But in as short a time as it would take to convince the guy sitting next to you that UMass needs a skating facility of its own (61 seconds), the Minutemen had suffocated the hopes of the upset-minded Continentals by scoring three quickies, and went on to buzzsaw through the Hamilton 7-3. The win opened the road toward Saturday night's showdown with Merrimack.

Until the barrage hit, at 18:29 of the opening period, Hamilton netminder Chuck Root had the Minutemen talking to themselves as he seemed to be as big (if not bigger) as the Hamilton net while making 5 or 6 exquisite saves.

Lonnie Avery started the boom on a backhander from just inside the right point. Then, 38 seconds later, Captain Don Riley slapped a rebound home off of a Jim Coleman shot and the Minutemen were ahead to stay. Twenty-three more seconds went by until Pat Keenan and Coleman worked a pretty give and go for a score as Keenan took the goal tender with him and fed Coleman who had nothing but webbing to shoot at.

The Minutemen continued the open fire on the Hamilton net in the beginning of the second stanza and Steve Nims scored at 4:22 as he intercepted a pass at the Hamilton blue line and unloaded on Root from about 20 feet. Douglas got one goal back for Hamilton at 8:13 of the period and 4-2 was how the second period ended.

In the course of the period however, the Minutemen were cheated out of a goal.

Keenan went in alone on a breakaway which Root made a super stop on, but Root couldn't control the bouncing puck, and it came out to Billy Harris who put it into the empty net, only to have the goal waved off. Apparently the ref lost sight of the puck (had his eyes closed) because it was obvious to everyone in the place (including the Hamilton radio jocks) that Root never had control of the puck.

The final period was all UMass, with the exception of a five-minute stretch which the Minutemen spent short-handed. Connors popped one home at 5:33 with assists going to Stuart and Ellis. Anderson scored on a power play for the Continentals to make it 5-3, but the Minutemen came back with a power-play goal of their own at 14:17 when Lonnie Avery tallied his second of the night as he tipped home a Brian Mulcahy slapshot.

The Minutemen's final goal was a bit unusual and caught the Hamilton defense off guard. The three Minutemen forwards came flying down the right side, luring the Hamilton defense with it. Meanwhile, defenseman Bob Quinlin came sneaking down the left side and after he caught the pass he had easy pickings. Minutemen 7, Hamilton 3.

Once they got over their sluggish start, the Minutemen worked the puck well against the squad from Clinton, N.Y., on their way to a well deserved victory.

The road will be the rule once again Tuesday night, when the Minutemen will travel to Durham, N.H. to face the Wildcats of UNH on Tuesday night.

Cagers Drop UConn, 83-67

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

The Cage was jampacked. More were on the outside, but unable to enter. The AP announcer asked all to move closer. Sportswriters from all over Connecticut and even some from Massachusetts were vying for the best press seats. The pounding beat of the William Tell overture created illusions of the Lone Ranger hanging onto the onrushing Silver, always right and always a winner. The cheerleaders' shouts were lost in the roar of the crowd.

The scene was set for a Yankee Conference shootout. And that is what happened, as the Minutemen pushed the UConn Huskies back into the pack to leave both with identical YanCon records of 5-2. The final score was 83-67 and now that B.U. lost to the University of Maine (84-70), UMass and UConn are tied for the lead in the Yankee Conference and B.U. drops to second place. Nevertheless, this does not matter as the Minutemen host B.U. Tuesday at the Cage in what could be the title decision match especially in the case of UMass.

It sure wasn't as comfortable as the Civic Center, but with the crowd's avid support, a 6-5 lead exploded with seven straight hoops to an unbelievable 15 point edge.

A crowd of approximately 800 were locked out, but the gang inside was enough to silence an attempt by the UConn cheerleaders to gain Huskie support during the first timeout called by UConn coach Dee Rowe. It cannot be said that the crowd was obnoxious, but the UMass surge to 20-5 was met by a spontaneous ovation which deafened the area during the brief lull in action.

The game was tough and physical all the way. It could be likened to a circus performer keeping a man-eating tiger at bay with the use of a wooden chair. The lead was gained quickly in the first seven minutes, but the game was forever in reach of the Huskies as sharpshooters Al Weston, Al Vaughn and Earl Wilson calmly arched the ball through the bucket the rest of the way.

The opening moments featured what opposing coach Dee Rowe termed as "defense really torturous." The full court press with 6'9 terror, Tom Austin facing the in-bounds pass and 6'7 Charlie Peters at the end collecting the tosses deflected his way by the three middle men (Al Skinner, Rick Pitino and Bill Endicott) accounted for the early success. Skinner picked up three quick fouls in the first 4 1/2 minutes, but by that time hustle was contagious. The bench got its chance and the lead continued.

The opening minutes were much more than good defense. Teamwork combined with the highly partisan crowd set the tone. Austin played well to say the least as he gracefully hooked and otherwise sank ten markers in the first nine minutes and finished with 14 points and 9 rebounds.

Flashy guard Rick Pitino played as though he never wanted to sit down again. Pitino set the tempo of the game contributing a helping hand with seven assists in the first stanza and then was on the receiving end in the second half to up his total to 10 points. The featured event was Pitino's between the legs leapfrog pass to a waiting John Murphy behind the free throw line, who swished it. Coach Leaman did not allow Pitino to show the whole bag of tricks, but the crowd gave a standing ovation to the six foot guard as he left the game in the last minute.

For UConn the UMass defense made things miserable. Weston who had 43 points the game before, was only 5 for 20 from the field. Chapman was 4 for 13 and Wilson 8 for 17.

Coach Leaman summed up what happened afterwards when he said; "We've got the best crowd around and I'm sure that is why we got off to such a great start."

HE FLEW THROUGH THE AIR...Al Skinner soars past two UConn defenders on a baseline drive in last Saturday night's game at the Cage. Despite early foul trouble in the first half, Skinner came through with another fine effort with 12 points and 7 rebounds. (MDC Photo by Gib Fullerton)

UMass Places 2nd In YanCon Wrestling

By JOHN BOCK

Kingston, Rhode Island--Suggestion: Let the Athletic Directors of the Yankee Conference vote to replace the Second Annual Yankee Conference tournament with a triangular match with UMass, URI, and Boston University.

Anyone who attended the finals of the First Annual YanCon Wrestling Tourney on Saturday night in URI's Keaney Gymnasium would know what I mean by that suggestion. It was here on Rhode Island's home mat that the Rams edged the Minutemen 105 to 94-1/2 to win the Tourney, true to predictions.

The finals did, indeed, look like a triangular between UMass, URI and BU as the other three schools in the Conference were shut out of the finals.

The tournament was a double elimination deal which meant that there were two brackets, a winner's and a loser's. A wrestler worked his way through the winner's bracket until he lost and then he dropped down to the loser's where he competed until there was a winner. The winners of the loser's bracket met the winners of the winner's bracket in the finals. If in the finals a wrestler beat the man that had beaten him earlier, another match would be held to determine the champion.

The difference in the first and second place rested on the fact that UMass was not represented in the 190-pound class and failed to place at 177. Co-Captain Carl Dambman did his best to make weight but the amount he had to drop, plus the flu, kept him three over and his body just wouldn't drop those three pounds. UMass had to forfeit that weight. At 177, Doug Rumpf drew the top seeded man in the first round, who just happened to be the defending New England Champ, and got knocked off. Then he lost again in the wrestle backs and failed to place.

The good news came at 118, 158, and Heavyweight in the persons of Dave Amato, Steve Benson, and George Ireland as these three were never extended in winning their crowns. Amato had two pins and a decision on the way to the finals. In the finals he beat Rhode Island's Rich Adham 7-1. Steve Benson scored a 22-2 decision over his first opponent and went on in pretty much the same manner into the finals where he bested Dave Davenport of BU 10-2. On the way Steve beat Read Calderone, URI's top seed at 158 in a grudge match that extended back to high school. At heavyweight George Ireland pinned everybody and then won in the finals on a default. George had been taken down and was coming out strong when his opponent, Snead of URI, caught an elbow to the eye and consequently defaulted.

Wrestling very good matches and placing second were Larry Reynolds at 126, Mike McGlaughlin at 134, Steve Rome at 142, and Cliff Blom at 150. Chris Cadwallader placed third at 167.

Reynolds was bested twice by URI's top seeded swifty Scott Pucino. McGlaughlin lost in the afternoon to Savino from Rhode Island on a riding time point and then in the evening by a point. Rome was beating Kryzak from BU and got taken down in the last ten seconds and lost 5-4 and lost again to Kryzak by a point in the finals. Finally Blom lost to Bennet of BU by two in their first meeting and then got caught in a four point move in the finals and dropped it 7-1.

Pucksters Win, Tie Over Weekend

By LARRY SINEWITZ

The Minutemen strengthened their position in Division II over the weekend as they were victorious over the Hamilton Continentals Friday night at Orr Rink. Then, on Saturday night, they picked up and went on to Merrimack where the two teams fought to a standoff.

UMass and Merrimack, both of whom are fighting for the second spot in Division II, had emotions running high and fast and neither team gained any ground as a result of the 4-4 tie played at S. Peter Volpe sports complex.

Saturday

UMass 4, Merrimack 4

Merrimack jumped into a 1-0 lead on a tally by Mike Reynolds at 4:24. The Minutemen had a power play situation but they couldn't get on track in the early going. At 11:07 Billy Harris went to the penalty box for UMass as a slight skirmish broke out. Bill fought most of the game but he seemed to get caught every time he did anything.

The Warriors went ahead 2-0 on a goal by Dunn at 13:59, but it was countered just seconds later by Steve Nim's goal at 14:11 making it 2-1. The bell (buzzer) sounded ending the period and they came out fighting. When everything was cleared up Jim Coleman and Pat Keenan went to the box for the Minutemen and Cleary went off for the Warriors.

The 4,000 plus on hand were just waiting for round 2 and Keenan drew first blood at 8:10 on a break away goal that Merrimack goalie Pat Finch is still looking for.

The next seven minutes were spent trying to figure out just who was in the penalty box, Keenan then decided that it didn't make any difference, and scored a short-handed goal finishing off a great pass from Don Riley, Robert Shilalie also got an assist on the goal. Steve O'Neil tied the game at 3-3 at 18:15, on a breakaway that even he was surprised to have.

Period three had just begun when UMass fans were up and cheering. At 0:17 Nims, who had been hustling throughout the entire game, came up with the Minutemen's fourth goal, slapping it in from the right side. But at 8:13, Tom Pallotta, the Warrior captain, tallied on a tip in to neutralize the game once and for all, 4-4.

The crowd awaited the 10-minute sudden death overtime with great expectations. And they were not disappointed as teams had break aways and power plays to work with. Reynolds for Merrimack had penalties at 5:11 and 7'19 but still UMass couldn't score.

At the final buzzer another brawl broke out but like the previous encounters, it was shortlived. Afterwards all players shook hands. The general reaction of the crowd was "let them play until someone scores" but still, the game had all the excitement anyone could ask for.

On the 23rd of February, Merrimack journeys to Orr Rink and you can bet there will be more hard hitting hockey with Division II playoff positions at stake.

MSP Allies With AAUP For Collective Bargaining

By CINDY GONET

The Massachusetts Society of Professors yesterday afternoon approved their affiliation with the American Association of University Professors for the purpose of collective bargaining.

Fifty members of the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) voted their support of the following agreement: "The MSP is pleased and gratified to accept the support of the UM/Amherst chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) in a collective bargaining drive.

"The Massachusetts Society of Professors directs its executive committee to work with representatives of the American Association of University Professors chapter in clarifying any discrepencies between the motion passed by the American Association of University Professors chapter, (Feb. 8 meeting) and the Professional Unity Agreement previously negotiated by the steering committee pro-tem of the Massachusetts Society of Professors and the representation committee of the UM/Amherst chapter."

According to informed sources at the MSP meeting, if and when collective bargaining is ultimately decided on, campus faculty will gain potentially more power in dealing with salaries, working conditions, tenure and hiring practices.

The Massachusetts Society of Professors is petitionirig to be the sole bargaining agent for the UMass campus if the Professional Unity Agreement is not reached.

If, by direct petitioning, the Massachusetts Society of Professors can accumulate 30% of the 1500 faculty member's endorsement, the union may be chosen by the election process as the official bargaining agent of the UMass campus.

But before calling an election, the State Labor Relations Commission must hold hearings to determine which faculty members may make up the bargaining unit.

If one of the unions, be it the American Association of University Professors or the Massachusetts Society of Professors receive 50% of the vote, it would be certified as the bargaining agent.

At this time, the AAUP chapter is the largest, with about 300 members. According to AAUP chapter president Joseph D. Burroughs, a faculty poll taken by the chapter showed around 50% of the faculty favoring the AAUP as the bargaining agent.

However, he said only one quarter of the faculty had responded to the poll.

At the American Association of University Professors held on last Thursday, pessimism was expressed by the vote of 18-16 by faculty attending the meeting.

Contrary to the stand taken by the AAUP, the Massachusetts Society of Professors unanimously voted for collective bargaining.

Dollar Devalued By 10%

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States Monday night devalued the dollar by 10 per cent in an effort to solve the international monetary crisis.

It was the second dollar devaluation in little over a year and Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz told newsmen officials hope the move will end the crisis that has rocked European financial markets for the past two weeks.

In addition, Shultz said, Japan has decided to float its yen, thus tearing it away from its fixed exchange rate with the dollar.

The U.S. devaluation would be achieved by raising the official price of gold from the present $38 an ounce to $42.22. Although the gold-price change would require an act of Congress the devaluation is effective immediately.

This will be achieved merely by exchanging the dollar in foreign exchange markets as if it were devalued.

Shultz also announced that the United States will phase out by the end of 1974 its controls on the export of U.S. capital.

He told a late-night news conference that the devaluation and the other moves taken by the Nixon administration will benefit "the American working man, businessman and the consumer."

A dollar devaluation has the effect of making imports into the United States more expensive and U.S. exports to other countries cheaper, thus giving the nation a better trading advantage.

Shultz said other nations may make changes in the values of their currencies after announcement of the American devaluation. Such currency changes would have to be announced by the countries involved.

But he said it is likely that countries with floating currencies, such as Canada and Great Britain, will continue with the float.

As for the Japanese currency, the secretary said, the United States expects the yen will rise in value against the dollar over the 10-per-cent change.

Monday's devaluation was the second major change in world currencies since December 1971, when major non-Communist nations agreed to a new currency alignment following a conference at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington.

Shultz announced that the United States will ask Congress for trade legislation that would provide for lowering trade barriers; raising tariffs to make sure that U.S. exports have fair access to foreign markets; provide safeguards, such as import quotas, to guard against rapid changes in foreign trade, and to protect the United States from large and persistent deficits in its balance of payments.

Although the effect of the U.S. devaluation is to make the dollar 10 per cent lower against other currencies, the effective change when viewed against gold prices is a little more than that because of complicated mathematical methods of figuring exchange rates.

Shultz said the crisis should make other nations realize that speedy reform of the world monetary system is necessary.

Selectmen Vote To Curb Rapes

By ED FOGARTY

The Amherst Board of Selectmen voted last night to advise the Amherst Police Department to send patrols to area apartment dwellings due to the recent reports of rapes and assaults in the North Amherst area.

Acting on the advice of Richard M. Howland, UMass student attorney, the recommendation of the selectman is tantamount to direct action by the police department.

Howland cited a rash of phone calls he had received by women, many of them hysterical, in regard to rape, assault and breaking and entering as evidence for the need for police patrol. He said that these calls came from one complex in particular in North Amherst.

"The police patrol should extend beyond North Amherst because these attacks could not be expected to be restricted to one place," Howland said.

Howland added that there has been no prosecution of any of the alleged rapes because there is usually too long a delay between the crime and the reporting of the crime. The law requires, he explained, that there be fresh evidence for prosecution.

In further business the Board discussed the new bus system instituted in Amherst yesterday and the problems needed to be met in the future. There was discussion of the problems of the private bus services now in operation and how these buses should work into a public transportation system subsidized by the government.

Mr. North Burn, representing the Five College Bus System, suggested that the private bus lines in the area could work with the town of Amherst and UMass to serve the area when the present grant terminates. The Five College Bus System currently serves the Amherst-Northampton, Amherst-South Hadley

The ten new yellow buses with their red racing stripes could be seen in Amherst yesterday at the first day of inter and intra campus routes. Both students and faculty responded "really well" to the new service, said Bob Godding in charge of operations at the Student Senate Transit Service.

Godding went on to say that more than 5,000 persons rode the buses yesterday and probably made some of them more aware of the traffic congestion problems facing the area at this time.

Five of the buses have peripheral seating and five have the regular seating arrangement. Both carry capactities of 31 persons each. (Photo by George Withers)

Health Services Offers A Number Of Numbers

By NANCY BASMAJIAN

The University Health Services, in upheaval due to construction of an addition as it is, has also been having a difficult time with its phone services. Everyone knows what number to call in an emergency–5-2671, right? And at the same time, this magical connection with the University Health Services serves as provider of "general information".

However, many students do not realize that there are only three phone lines under that one number, and they have been using that number for all their Health Services needs besides those mentioned above. This ties up the emergency lines.

The Infirmary offers a wide array of services and would like to emphasize that, instead of tying up the main emergency and general information lines, there are other numbers to call. For instance:

Need a doctor's appointment or an immunization?
Call - - - 545-0057.

Having difficulty reaching the appointment secretary from 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.?
Call - - - 545-0057 during the expanded hours: 5:00 p.m.-7:00 p.m. Monday through Thursday (Only).

Need information concerning student insurance/Health Services bills/health fee payment?
Call - - - 545-2677.

Need information on health forms?
Call - - - 545-2675.

For general information, emergencies and allergy shot appointments
Call - - - 545-2671.

One way or another, you may save someone unnecessary anxiety in an emergency by observing the above distinctions between phone numbers.

Mr. Richard Dubay, Manager of Medical Records and Systems at the Health Services, explains the need for such distinctions by saying, "We have outgrown our telephone system here," referring to the fact that it was acceptable ten years ago when the student population was a mere ten thousand. He adds that the redirecting of incoming phone calls to the Infirmary "would help us out quite a bit." It will help out the students also, by increasing the efficiency of the phone service.

The University Health Services will soon be issuing a flier with appropriate numbers to call, as described above.

Problems Of Disabled Probed

By DENNY MATTEAU

A committee of diverse University personnel has been meeting since the beginning of 1972 to look into the problems of the handicapped students on this campus.

According to Ms. Judith Sharpe, a Public Health nurse currently acting as part-time counselor for the handicapped, there are approximately 300 students on campus who can be considered handicapped. Presently, the services of the University are so uncoordinated and spread out that a student seeking help can become discouraged by the ensuing runaround, hence the decision to establish the office of Co-ordinator for the Handicapped.

Mike Roberts, a student here two years ago, wrote the original proposal for this office and its duties. The committee now drawing up the final plans has not deviated far from his proposal. The people on this committee are:

Marc Gelinas, Health Services—Chairperson
Michael A. Cann, Ph.D., Mental Health
Marie Desmond, Graduate Student
Robert J. Doc!an, Admissions
Robert Gleason, Environmental Health & Safety
William Lambert, Physical Plant
Thomas C. McBride, M.D., Health Services
Judith Sharpe, R. N., Health Services
Arthur Shelley, Veterans Affairs
Donald Wolf, student rep. from APO

The duties of the new Co-ordinator will be basically those of an ombudsman and liaison with the various services and agencies, both on and off campus. A student seeking any sort of help will be able to go to this office to be referred to the proper department. The Co-ordinator will also lend support to students' dealings with outside agencies, transferrals, or jobs.

The facilities and services already offered by UMass include: physical therapy, personal and vocational counseling, medical and mental health services, adaptive physical education, academic counseling, audio-visual aids, and special scheduling.

What the University needs is co-ordination to increase the efficiency of these services and a re-evaluation and re-orientation of some programs. One possibility which Ms. Sharpe mentioned is the formation of support groups so that students with similar problems can come together and share experience and help sustain the self-confidence of incoming students.

Rationale Deadline Set

Paul Doran, chairman of the Student Senate Budgets Committee, has announced that the deadline for any group wishing to submit a rationale to receive Student Activities Trust Fund money for 1973-1974 is Friday, February 17th.

Doran also said that if there is any group which believes that their group warrants funding with student money, they should turn in a short rationale explaining what their group is and what they intend to do with the requested funds. The rationale should include the name of someone in the organization that he can contact.

The rationales should be turned in to Doran's mailbox in the Senate office, Room 113 of the Campus Center. People with questions should contact him or leave him a message at the Senate office before 5 PM Friday, Feb. 17th.

Fire Put Out At Echo Village

By MDC STAFF

A fire in a south Echo Hill apartment last night destroyed some books, a bookcase, and part of a wall, but caused no injury, and in the words of one fireman was "more smoky than anything else.

The fire in the apartment of Jim Vilkitis, a research consultant who also teaches in the UMass Division of Continuing Education, was discovered by Vilkitis on his return from UMass around 10 p.m.

The fire was extinguished within an hour. There was no estimate of damage, but Vilkitis said that he lost "a lot of research" in the fire.

routes.

Mr. Garvey, Amherst Selectman, said that this service was needed for north and south service. "If the line would be subsidized so as to offer no-fare service it would help alleviate the hitchhiking problem," he said.

Burn agreed and said that if UMass and the town worked together on getting grant money, a no-fare system might be possible. Burn pointed out that the bus system now in use is not a five college service and serves only a limited area. "What is needed is a Five College 'community' system," Burn said, "providing transportation to all the five colleges."

Mr. Paul Shuldiner, Coordinator of the University Traffic and Transportation Council, spoke to the Selectmen on the nature of the transportation system and the relation of the town and university in meeting future needs.

"The grant transportation system is funded only for one year," Shuldiner said. He explained it is being run to test two areas. First, the response to a no-fare public transportation system. Second, to test the result of more stringent costs and penalties on parking.

He said that UMass can ask to take over the government's share of investment in the buses and could continue the services after the experimental year is over. The town can have no direct role in requesting extension of the transportation service.

The Selectmen voted unanimously to strike a motion classifying all memos as secret.

Howard Ziff, Associate Professor of English at UMass, said he was relieved at the Board of Selectmen's decision. He advised the Selectmen that now is a period of "unprecedented repression" and that they should guard against injuring the first amendment.

Richard M. Howland, UMass Student Attorney, said the Board should give careful consideration to any new bill they draw up.

Mr. William Garvey, Town Selectman, said that by allowing memos to come into the hands of the press many issues were misrepresented. One of the purposes of a secrecy bill would be to allow the Board to act consistently, he said.

The Board agreed to deliberate on the issue and bring it up at a later meeting. Members of the Board were not in agreement as to the degree of secrecy they required.

"We would be happy to hear from members of the public and of the press on this issue," members of the Board agreed.

The Selectmen also voted to discuss a sign ordinance with Mr. Eric Walgren.

Walgren contends that the Town is inconsistent in their sign ordinance. At present, the Town of Amherst allows no signs to be displayed by a candidate for Town Office.

Walgren pointed out that during national elections, candidates are allowed signs. The Republican Committee is allowed to place an entire trailer in the center of Amherst, he said.

The Board agreed to deliberate on the matter.

In additional business, the Board of Selectmen voted that the time of the inspection of licensed liquor establishments should be periodic and informal.

Northern Ed. Service To Resume Tutoring

Despite many financial problems, the Northern Educational Service in Springfield is ready to start tutoring once again. Because of cutbacks in Federal Funds, NES at present has virtually no money. However, A.I.C. has consented to lend a room of their Campus Center for tutoring and also a church in Winchester Square has offered their facilities to be used for tutoring.

Because many other Social Service agencies have folded due to lack of Federal Funds, there are many children in Springfield who need and want to be tutored, but at present there are very few resources available. NES is fortunate, however, in that they have places to conduct the tutoring and they have some materials. All they need now is people to do the actual tutoring.

Starting tomorrow, the NES buses will begin running again. One free afternoon a week is all that is necessary. There will be one organizational meeting to discuss the details. Please check today's notices for the time and place of that meeting.

George Scheurer To Campaign Tonight At SW

George Scheurer, candidate for Selectman, will campaign in the Southwest Residential Complex tonight in search of votes in the Amherst town election next Tuesday, February 19th.

Tonight Scheurer will canvass door-to-door in Mackimmie and Pierpont dorms, accompanied by UMass sophomore Reid Fishman, former campus coordinator in the McGovern and Collins campaigns.

This will be the candidate's second campaign swing on the campus. Last Thursday, Scheurer campaigned in the Central Area. He intends to make at least three more appearances on campus before Election Day.

Correction

A story that appeared in Friday's Collegian said that Dr. Henry W. Kendall would lecture on nuclear power tonight at 7:30 in Hasbrouck 29.

Dr. Kendall's lecture will be at 7:30 but in Hasbrouck 20, not 29.

Women's Caucus Forms Committee

The first Women's Caucus meeting has resulted in the establishment of a Steering Committee to coordinate further activities of the Caucus.

The meeting, held Friday night in the Campus Center, was hailed by Pat Sackrey, the Director of Everywoman's Center, as "an historic event" and featured speeches by Julia Fata, Joan Hemmer, Emma Cappaluzzo, and Marion McCamey.

Anne Brentlinger represented the Feminist Studies Committee and outlined the Growth and objectives of that group. She also called for more feminists on the staff and faculty of the University.

Amherst Campus Unhappy With Trustees' Co-ed Stand

By CULLEN MURPHY and S. KEVIN BROWN

The Amherst College faculty has voted in favor of a resolution that defies a recent decision made by the school's Trustees' rejecting coeducation.

By a vote of 86-26 the College's faculty requested the Trustees to come to the Amherst campus before their next meeting in April for "consideration of the Board's decision on coeducation at Amherst." The Trustees decided almost two weeks ago to postpone consideration of coeducation at Amherst, while at the same time citing the need for greater Five College cooperation.

Meanwhile, the College's Student Assembly Wednesday passed a resolution requesting that "the Board (of Trustees) come to Amherst as soon as possible to discuss its decision with members of the student body." And a petition circulated Wednesday expressing dissatisfaction with the Trustees' position got 700 student signatures last night. Amherst College has about 1200 students.

The faculty vote and student petition confirm a negative, on-campus reaction to the Trustees' decision that was evident at the time the decision was announced to the public.

The Trustee decision not to go coed was made despite the pro-coed recommendations of College President John W. Ward, and the report of a Select Committee on Coeducation. Both Ward and the committee suggested that Amherst College should become a fully coeducational institution, citing the need for equal educational opportunity for women.

The Trustees' decision acknowledged the principle of equal educational opportunity for women, but rejected the application of that principle to Amherst College, and told President Ward to "strengthen inter- institutional relationships" among the Five Colleges.

The Faculty resolution adopted at the Tuesday night meeting said that equal educational opportunity for women has become a "moral imperative", and that "the danger is that Amherst's claim to academic excellence . . . will be increasingly questioned by the present and prospective students and teachers of the college."

Some College officials speculate that admissions to Amherst will decline as a result of the Trustees' no-coed decision, because so many other institutions have rejected one-sex education as undesirable.

Sarge Receives Dubious Honor

BOSTON (AP)—A bid by the House Democratic leadership to "honor" GOP Gov. Francis W. Sargent by naming a highway after him that allegedly is an engineering disaster nearly boomeranged Monday.

The resolution introduced by Rep. Charles F. Flaherty Jr., D-Cambridge, who doubles as chairman of the Democratic State Committee, prevailed by a single vote—109 to 109—in a branch that has more than a three- to-one Democratic majority.

Flaherty said the short extension of Interstate 93 from Medford to Somerville should be named for the Republican governor who was public works commissioner when the road was planned. It was a tongue-in-cheek floor debate with Flaherty repeatedly stating the governor "should get what's coming to him while he's still in office." He called it an "honor" but the Republicans—and several Democrats—didn't view the resolution in the same light.

The Republicans countered with a resolution to name the still uncompleted $50 million-plus Middlesex County Courthouse after Flaherty but were unable to get the rules suspended for debate. Rep. Francis W. Hatch Jr. of Beverly, the GOP floor leader, complained about the different treatment accorded both resolutions.

Hatch wanted the Flaherty courthouse proposal put to a vote even though he said he "didn't particularly like it." Ten House members voted "present" on the Francis W. Sargent highway resolution and 58 Democrats voted with the Republicans in opposition. No Republican voted for it but three voted "present."

Dorm Occupancy Drops

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

Fewer people are living in university dormitories this semester than last semester, but according to J. Bruce Cochrane, Director of Housing, the drop is consistent with the pattern of past years.

The Housing Office reported that the number of students living on campus this semester is 10,625 or 89.2% of capacity. This is a decrease of 751 from last semester when the figures were 11,376 or 95.5% of the total dormitory capacity.

Nevertheless, the yearly percentage has increased due mainly to the regulation stating that a student must be 21 before the semester in which he or she is to move off campus. Formerly, a student could move off campus if he or she was going to turn 21 that semester. The yearly percentage for 1972-73 was 92.5%, as opposed to the 89% of capacity of the previous academic year.

The reason for the drop in occupancy levels between semesters was attributed by Cochrane to an increase in the average age of undergraduates. This, he said, was because of the increasing number of veterans and transfer arriving for the second semester. Combined with the withdrawals and those eligible to move off campus, the occupancy rate drops every spring.

The last time the dormitories were filled to what is considered the proper occupancy rate of 95% for the year, was the academic year of 1970-71 when the Sylvan area dorms were not completed on time. At that time, the Housing Office sent out letters to all students living within commuting distance asking them not to live on campus. Exemptions at the time were plentiful and easily attained.

Off campus exemptions during the past semester were difficult to obtain for those not meeting the requirements, but Cochrane noted that occupancy levels were cyclical in nature and with the Sylvan area being the last construction planned for living space, the levels should once again reach the 95% level.

"The pendulum," Cochrane said, "will swing around in another couple years and we will again reach the high occupancy levels."

He added optimistically, "The day is coming when we might be able to flex the rules (concerning off campus exemptions) as the enrollment rises (400 more students will be enrolled next fall).

UMass Credit Union To Expand

By ED FOGARTY

The UMass Federal Credit Union has become the first in the country to have it's charter revised so that it may expand it's services to multiple schools, according to credit union president Jake E. Bishop.

Bishop said the approval from the federal government will allow the union to expand from its present ability for UMass-Amherst, Boston, and Worcester campuses, and the UMass agricultural School, to the Five Colleges (UMass, Smith, Amherst, Mount Holyoke, and Hampshire.)

The Five College Credit Union main office will remain located on the UMass Campus in Room 11, Draper Hall. Branch offices will be established on each of the five college campuses. The benefits of the Credit Union will remain the same also.

The Credit Union is a non-profit cooperative and is not taxed by the Federal Government. It gives an interest rate on a semi-annual basis to a maximum of six percent.

The Credit Union offers loans to its members and gives a free insurance policy on the loans. The loans are limited to a maximum of $10,000. Any loan is insured to be liquidated in the event on the death of the holder.

A life insurance policy is offered to Credit Union members. This policy insures that a maximum of $2000 deposited between the ages of six months and 55 years will be used as life insurance. Any money deposited before six months and after 55 years will be used as life insurance on a percentage basis.

The UMass Credit Union was founded in June, 1967 by several UMass employees. "The philosophy of the Credit Union", said Mr. Bishop, "was and still is, to encourage people to learn the savings habit."

Arthur D. Neault, manager of the Credit Union, added that many. times he will encourage members to start savings at one dollar per week. "Even though it seems a small amount", he said, "it is the beginning of the savings habit."

Between Dec. 31, 1969 and Dec. 31, 1972 the Credit Union has increased its total assets from $215,465 to $1,628,190, and has increased its net earnings from $6,550 to $85,875.

The Credit Union makes its income by loaning money at a simple annual percentage rate of 12%, and by investing in the Government Securities Program through the Chase Manhattan Bank in New York City. This income is used to pay overhead costs, the salaries of four staff members and the interest paid on money deposited.

Members of the Board of Directors and Officers of the Credit Union work on a volunteer basis.

Newport Now A Sex Info Center

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Newport: a posh resort community of 35,000, known for its beaches, bluebloods and jazz festivals, is now gaining attention as a center for sex information.

Since last June, when a free Sex Information Service was set up, nearly 1,000 troubled people have telephoned complete strangers to seek release from their sexual hangups.

"Even the simplest kinds of things give people problems," says Charles Nickrenz, head of Child and Family Services of Newport, which runs the program.

He pinpoints the problems as a "tremendous amount of misinformation" about sex. Calls have come from "people who borrow birth control pills from friends" and a man who "couldn't understand his partner's anxieties about sexual intercourse" until he realized he was taking no precautions against pregnancy, he said.

The service has generally been accepted by the community.

In The Nation And The World

Nixon: "Your Sacrifice Has Not Been In Vain"

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (AP)- President Nixon talked by telephone today with an Air Force colonel held captive by the North Vietnamese for nearly eight years and told him, "Your sacrifice has not been in vain."

"I want you to know how enormously proud we are of you and all the men," Nixon told Col. Robinson Risner, of Tulsa, Okla., who initiated the phone call from Clark Air Base in the Philippines.

In their four-minute conversation, Nixon told the officer, a prisoner of war for 7-1/2 years, that the call was "one of the most moving moments," of his presidency.

Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler, who relayed details of the conversation, said the 48-year-old pilot, a World War II veteran told Nixon, "All of the men would like to meet you personally and express gratitude for what you have done."

"My time is yours on that point," Nixon responded. Ziegler said the President added that a meeting could be arranged after the prisoners are reunited with their families and loved ones.

Because "you and the men have been through so much," the President said, "nothing would mean more to me than to meet with you personally and express gratitude on behalf of myself and the American people for your sacrifices."

Ziegler said no specific time was set for a presidential meeting with the returning POWs.

Fires Set at Walpole Prison

WALPOLE, Mass. (AP)—Fires broke out in sections of the state's maximum security prison here Monday night, but prison officials reported "stable conditions" at 8:15 p.m., some three hours after the disturbance began.

A spokesman said there had been no injuries.

"There were several fires in the maximum security blocks," prison system spokesman John MacLean said in a statement.

He said state police remained on standby alert at the prison, but said they had not been called inside.

U.S. Rep. Predicts Gas Rationing

JOHNSTOWN: Pa. (AP)—U.S. Rep. John P. Saylor, R-Pa., says the nation can expect gasoline rationing within the very near future, and that, according to his estimate, the price of a gallon of gas will shoot up to $3 within the next five years.

"We will soon see rationing the likes of which the world has never known," said Saylor. "It's the law of supply and demand."

Saylor said flatly that he thinks the rationing and skyrocketing gas prices are unavoidable.

"There's not enough gas, not enough oil in the world to satisfy the needs of our country the way we've grown," said the local legislator.

Scientists Find Atlantic Worse Off Than Believed

WASHINGTON (AP)- Government scientists Monday reported finding globs of oil and bits of plastic "in massive portions" in the Atlantic Ocean from Cape Cod to the Caribbean Sea.

The National Oceanic and Atmospherei c Administration, NOAA, said the pollution was distributed "far more widely than had previously been uspected."

Analyzing samples of the microscopic organisms that form the basis of the ocean's food chain, NOAA reported that "more than half the plankton samples young fish and their food collected from surface waters were oil-contaminated."

The oil pollution was so thick NOAA reported, that the three research ships which cruised the Atlantic last summer had trouble collecting samples at all.

"One of the survey ships, Albatros IV, reported that 75 per cent of the time its nets were befouled by oil clumps so thick they extruded through the mesh 'like spaghetti'," the agency said.

It said the oil took the form of grain-to fist-sized balls of tar which "appeared to have been formed from bunker oil jettisoned from ships."

NOAA said its researchers were surprised to find bits of plastic in the open sea, as well, in the form of small disks or balls of polystyrene, the crumbly plastic foam widely used as a packing and insulating material.

NOAA said other researchers, at the Woods Hole, Mass., Oceamographic Institution, found bits of the indigestible plastic in the larvae of fish.

The Woods Hole scientists feared the plastic might threaten the survival of the fish larvae that swallow it.

Ocean explorer Thor Heyerdahl, who sailed a modern reconstruction of an ancient Egyptian ship across the Atlantic in 1970, had reported seeing tar balls and plastic debris all the way from Africa to the Americas.

NOAA's ships found the pollution covering almost 700,000 square miles of the U.S. Atlantic continental waters, the Sargasso Sea and the Gulf of Mexico.

The scientists estimated the contamination covered about 50 per cent of the survey area off the East Coast from Massachusetts to Florida; 80 per cent in the Caribbean and Gulf of Mexico; and 90 per cent in an area surrounding the Bahamas and the West Indies.

Plastics were less widespread but appeared in all survey areas; the heaviest concentrations were from Cape Hatteras to Cape Cod.

The agency said that "the total environmental effect of these widespread contaminants in the ocean remains to be evaluated."

For the past several years, oil pollution of the oceans has been recognized as a serious problem, and has led to federal actions, international agreements and successful. U.S. legislation, all aimed at curbing it.

143 POWs FREED

By PETER ARNETT
AP Special Correspondent

CLARK AIR BASE, Philippines (AP)-The first American war prisoners to gain freedom since the Vietnam peace agreement experimented Monday night with some pleasures of life outside Communist prison camps.

A total of 143 military and civilian prisoners flew away from captivity, 116 from North Vietnam and 27 from jungle prisons in South Vietnam. All but one, who remained in a Saigon hospital, were ferried to this U.S. base for the first stop on their way home.

Back under the U.S. flag, the POWs telephoned their families in the United States, tinkered with the TV sets in their rooms at the Clark Air Base Hospital and dined on steak and eggs.

Only four of the 143 were sick enough to be brought back on litters. Many others looked pale and wan, particularly those released at Loc Ninh in South Vietnam. They flew into Clark after their release was delayed 11 hours by a dispute between the South Vietnamese government and the Viet Cong.

But the commander of the Clark Air Base Hospital, Col. John W. Ord, told newsmen after his staff of more than 60 physicians and specialists ran a quick check: "The general physical condition of the personnel is good."

Left behind in North and South Vietnam and Laos are 419 other Americans, mainly military personnel, who are scheduled to be released in three more groups over the next six weeks.

Those in the first group wolfed down ice cream, steak, corn on the cob, chicken and strawberry shortcake for their first meal in freedom. Most had requested-and got-that typical fare rather than the bland diets planned by doctors to ease their transition from prison life.

Maj. Marian Fortune, head dietician at the air base hospital, was quoted as saying the returning prisoners dug right in at an ice cream sundae bar rigged up at the entrance of the cafeteria serving line.

"They loved it," she said. "Many ate ice cream in the line before they got their main dishes."

A spokesman said one of the men, still on crutches, declined an offer to be wailed on.

"No ma'am," the prisoner said. "I've been waiting seven years, and I'm not about to sit down for someone to wait on me."

Spokesmen said many of the prisoners put in calls to their families at home after dinner, and others watched themselves on taped broadcasts of their arrivals.

The first of four hospital planes-three from Hanoi, one from Saigon-ferried in 40 prisoners. It brought them from the North Vietnamese capital, where they had filed through a wire fence and moved 50 yards across the tarmac to board their flight to freedom. Most walked aboard; a few were carried in litters.

During the 2-1/2 hour flight, they appointed Navy Capt. Jeremiah A. Denton Jr. of Virginia Beach, Va., to express their sentiments to the cheering U.S. base personnel, families and newsmen on hand at Clark to greet them.

"We are happy to have this opportunity to serve our country under difficult circumstances," Denton said as he stepped first from the plane.

"We are profoundly grateful to our commander in chief and to our nation for this day. God bless America."

Next to descend from the C141 was Lt. Cmdr. Everett A. Alvarez Jr. of Santa Clara, Calif. The first American flier captured on North Vietnam, he had been a prisoner since Aug. 5, 1964.

Alvarez walked with determined steps down the exit ramp and flashed a broad smile as he shook hands with Adm. Noel Gayler, commander of U.S. forces in the Pacific.

Gayler and Lt. Gen. William G. Moore Jr., commander of the 13th Air Force, stood on the runway to greet the men: 41 in the first planeload, 39 in the second and 36y in the third from Hanoi. They returned later to greet the 26 who flew in from Saigon.

The 27th prisoner released in South Vietnam after a day of waiting in the jungle heat remained in an Army hospital at his own request, the U.S. Embassy aid in Saigon. He was identified as Richard George Waldhaus, 25, of Pittsburg, Calif., a civilian with no know government connection who was listed as captured Feb. 4, 1969.

The late-night arrival of the prisoners from South Vietnam contrasted sharply with the arrival of those from Hanoi.

Arriving at Clark, the Air Force and Navy aviators, from Hanoi briskly emerged from their aircraft, saluted and shook hands with the official welcoming party and waved at the crowd of military personnel and newsmen.

Most of the 26 men from South Vietnam had been held for years by the Viet Cong in tunnels and jungle villages. Civilian Douglas Ramsey was in captivity for seven years. They insisted on wearing the Viet Cong-issued pajamas of pastel green and blue cloth until they entered Clark hospital.

The Hanoi prisoners had changed into American hospital garb on the planes.

The prisoners from the South also seemed shy of the huge press reception awaiting them and seemed uncertain whether to shake hands with Gayler and the other welcoming dignataries.

One reason for the shyness of the prisoners from the South was probably the isolated nature of their confinement. An escort officer said he got the impression on the flight to Clark from Saigon that one of the POWs had not even been informed that Americans had landed on the moon.

Dollar Move Will Raise Import Prices

"Progress in the work of reform has been too slow and should move with a greater sense of urgency," Shultz said.

The secretary said the United States is not obliged to intervene in foreign exchange markets to supppt the value of the dollar, as it has been doing in recent weeks.

The capital controls being phased out include the interest-equalization tax and money controls on direct foreign investments. Also, the Federal Reserve Board plans to end a voluntary program to restrain foreign credit.

The dollar has been falling in value in recent days, prompting most of the world's major money markets to close Monday. As a result of the slippage, Americans traveling abroad found their dollar wasn't buying as much as before.

Monetary experts from the big Western nations had been searching for ways to halt the crisis. They were talking in terms of seeing the West German mark and the Japanese yen revalued upward.

The dollar could be devalued by raising the official price of gold from its present $38 an ounce, by increasing the value of other currencies against the dollar, or by a combination of both.

Most sources believe that the devaluation will be part of another general realignment of currencies, focusing primarily on the dollar, the West German mark, and the Japanese yen.

President Nixon's special emissary, Treasury Undersecretary Paul A. Volcker, has been engaging in intensive talks with these nations since the middle of last week to try to find a solution to the dollar crisis.

Volcker has shuttled back and forth between countries, lending credence to speculation that the Nixon administration is trying to strike up a major currency deal behind closed doors.

The dollar was devalued a little more than a year ago at an international conference of finance ministers at the Smithsonian Institution here. That currency deal became unstuck last week when the dollar came under intensive pressure in overseas money markets.

The prospect of a similar monetary conference dealing with currency changes is also alive. But asked about this Monday, a Treasury spokesman said:

"I'm not aware of any proposals at this time for a conference."

That would indicate that Volcker's mission is actually to work out a currency deal in the next few days, rather than set the stage for a conference.

Sources watching the developments from Washington said that they expect the United States to devalue the dollar again.

A dollar devaluation would not be felt greatly by most Americans. It would increase the price of imports flowing into this country and make U.S. goods exported overseas cheaper.

The 1971 devaluation, the first since Franklin D. Roosevelt devalued the dollar in 1934, amounted to 8.57 per cent against gold.

Americans Abroad Distraught

LONDON (AP) — "I can't buy any presents or souvenirs," the disgruntled tourist said. "I'm going home."

This particular unhappy traveler was an American in Tokyo, but he could have been virtually anybody sightseeing in nearly any foreign country Monday.

Travelers taking advantage of lower off-season rates in most countries found themselves luckless bystanders in the latest international currency crisis. In many countries they could not be sure how much money they could change or what rate they would get for their own currency.

Travel plans suddenly went awry when foreign exchange markets in key world capitals closed temporarily. Banks, hotels, and travel firms coped as best they could, helped by the smaller number of off-season tourists.

But for the vacationer abroad, and the businessman as well, uncertainty prevailed from London to Tokyo.

London banks were limiting exchanges to 100 pounds for travelers only, on orders from the British treasury. Depending on the exchange rate, the traveler could pay anything from $239 to $242 for his 100 pounds. A traveller doing London on an expense account basis could easily spend 50 pounds a day on hotel, food and entertainment.

Vacationers with travelers checks generally did better. American Express in London was changing dollar travelers checks for $2.40 a pound, the same rate in force for the past three weeks. There was no limit on the amount changed.

The Savoy, one of London's more expensive hotels, by contrast, was charging $2.42 a pound and limiting transactions to guests.

Thomas Cook, a British travel agency, told its 120 officer in Britain to honor all Cook's travelers checks in dollars or sterling, and other travelers checks so long as the supplies of foreign currency on hand permits. Foreign exchange markets are likely to reopen before these funds run out.

American Express in London advised tourists to buy travelers checks during the present crisis to safeguard their dollars. A spokesman there described the situation as calm.

Similar patterns held elsewhere.

Spain closed foreign exchange markets and banks there were charging foreigners an extra 7 to 10 per cent to change money.

Swiss banks declined to publish a rate for the dollar. "The rate is changing from minute to minute," a spokesman said.

In Amsterdam a group of Dutch banks joined hands, to allow tourists to pay hotel bills and meet other commitments.

Danish banks were attempting to stick to Friday's closing exchange rates for foreign tourists. But for Danes wishing to change money, banks in Copenhagen were requiring proof first of intent to travel abroad.

There was little activity in Paris. American banks there were changing dollars for francs, but at poorer rates for tourists.

In Tokyo, commercial banks were giving 284 yen to the dollar, compared to 301 Friday. Transactions were limited to $200.

Ellsberg Lawyers Seek To Block Prosecution

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Attorneys for Daniel Ellsberg and Anthony Russo tried on Monday to keep jurors from seeing signed documents in which Ellsberg and Russo promised the Rand Corp. they would follow security rules.

The attorneys argued at the Pentagon papers trial that a violation of Rand security rules is not a violation of law and that the papers are immaterial.

They also sought to keep out of evidence the Rand security manual and acknowledgements by Ellsberg and Russo that they had read it. The lawyers asked for a special hearing at which the government would be ordered to prove the propriety of such evidence and the defense would call witnesses to rebut these claims. U.S. District Court Judge Matt Byrne withheld immediate ruling, asking the government to indicate more specifically which phrases of the documents it intends to show jurors.

Ellsberg, 41, and Russo, 36, wer. employes of the Rand "think tank" at Santa Monica, Calif., doing research on government requested projects, when they allegedly copied the Pentagon papers. They are charges with espionage, conspiracy and theft in the lead of that secret study of the Vietnam war to news media.

The defense also sought to bar from evidence the Defense Department's industrial security manual because its rules allegedly applied only to the Rand Corp. and not its employes.

The defense also sought to bar Russo's work records which show security clearances and promises similar to those Ellsberg made.

In another matter, the defense gave the judge copies of recent correspondence between Sen. J. William Fullbright, D-Ark., and the State Department showing that Fulbright is being denied access to four of the Pentagon papers volumes because they are considered classified.

In his most recent letter to Secretary of State William P. Rogers, dated Feb. 5, Fulbright complained about the continued refusal to release the volumes to him, noting press reports on the contents of these four socalled "secret negotiations volumes."

"In the course of the past week," he noted, "The Associated Press wire service has carried news items based on its access to these volumes, and several newspapers have published stories drawing on the same source . . ."

Storm Wreaks Havoc in South

(AP)—A 31-county portion of South Carolina was declared a disaster area Monday after a record-breaking weekend snowfall that left behind ice-coated highways and thousands of stranded motorists.

At least 11 deaths in South Carolina were attributed to the storm which roared across the South on Friday and Saturday. Eight other storm-related deaths were recorded in North Carolina and three in Georgia.

The storm dumped up to 15 inches of snow in middle Georgia and spread snow as far south as Florida. Its winds eroded beaches in Florida and in North Carolina, where several cottages were dumped into the Atlantic and high tides caused extensive damage to waterfront motels.

University Snow Policy Explained

The major objective of snow removal activities at times of severe storms is to make it possible to hold classes and conduct all University activities in as normal a way as possible. Since a large number of the faculty, staff, and student population normally bring cars onto campus, it is important for all concerned to understand clearly what policies and procedures will be followed in the event of a severe storm that restricts parking capacity on campus.

1. Classes and all other scheduled activities on campus will be held as usual unless a specific announcement is made to the contrary beginning at 6 a.m. and continued periodically on the day in question. Such announcements will be made on radio stations WTTT-Amherst, WHMP-Northampton, WHAI-Greenfield, WARE-Ware, WHYN-Springfield, WFCR-Amherst, WTIC-Hartford, WACE-Springfield, and WMUA-Amherst. Do not call the University for this information.

2. The decision to call off classes will be made at about 4:30 a.m. if indications are that road travel is too hazardous or there will not be sufficient parking space available.

Sufficient parking space is defined as the availability of the following lots. These lots represent approximately 4000 spaces and are the parking areas where limited resources and time can be used to best advantage in clearing spaces. Under normal conditions, 7000 parking spaces are used by faculty, staff, and students who drive onto the campus daily. If the conclusion is that the lots indicated cannot be opened by 7:30 a.m., then classes will be called off or opening of the University postponed until 11 a.m. if it appears that these lots can be opened by that time.

Lot #1 (west of Whitmore)
Lot #2 (south of Clark Hall)
Lot #4 (west of Worcester Dining Hall)
Lot #5 lower (north of Boyden and areas west and north of Dickinson Hall)
Lot #6 upper (located between Stockbridge and Engineering Buildings)
Lot #11 (south of Whitmore)
Lot #12 (south of Whitmore)
Lot #13 (south of Whitmore)
Lot #14 (west of Physical Plant and new lots west of Engineering and Physics shop)
Lot #N (located north and east of Engineering and Physics shop)

3. In order to facilitate snow removal from these lots, parking will be prohibited in them between the hours of 1 a.m. and 7 a.m. from December 1 to April 1, as provided for in the Motor Vehicle Regulations Manual approved by the Board of Trustees on May 26, 1972. In addition, as provided for in the regulations, no overnight parking will be permitted on any roadway except Thatcher Way. Overnight parking will continue to be available in lots other than those listed herein.

4. If circumstances make it necessary to call off classes during the day, this information will be communicated by the Personnel Office to Schools and Colleges and all other University departments on campus.

5. Since the plan described above provides for only a little more than half of the parking spaces used on a normal day, it is suggested that all University personnel who normally bring a car onto campus consider the following possibilities during heavy snow:

a. Pool rides with others whenever possible.

b. Walk if it is at all possible to do so.

c. Have someone drop you at work so that the car does not have to be left on campus and so that the snow removal job during daylight hours is facilitated.

d. If space is not available in your assigned lot, go to one of the other lots listed because under such emergency conditions, it is not possible to guarantee that normally assigned space will be available.

e. Make use of the Campus Center garage (open 24 hours a day)

f. Make use of the new bus service to the campus to be initiated this winter under the Department of Transportation grant.

6. In the event that classes and all other scheduled activities are called off, only essential services personnel will be required to work (plant operation, maintenance, custodial services, security, farm service, food services, library, selected administrative offices, etc.). Heads of these departments should review and update their emergency plans.

The University has listed some contingency plans to follow for situations like the one above. These steps should be followed in order that the some 22,000 people who come to UMass daily will be a little more safe when arriving, while they're here and when they leave. (Photo by Pam Perry)

"The Godfather" Leads Oscar Race

HOLLYWOOD (AP)—"The Godfather" took the most nominations in the 45th annual Oscar race Monday, scoring for its director, writers, three supporting actors and star, Marlon Brando.

Also nominated: Diana Ross, "Lady Sings The Blues;" Maggie Smith, "Travels with My Aunt;" Cicely Tyson, "Sounder," and Liv Ullman, "The Emigrants."

Nominees for best picture were "Cabaret," "Deliverance," "The Emigrants," "The Godfather" and "Sounder."

Other nominations included:

Supporting actor: Eddie Albert for "The Heartbreak Kid," James Caan, Robert Duvall and Al Pacino for "The Godfather," and Joel Grey for "Cabaret."

Supporting actress: Jeannie Berlin, "The Heartbreak Kid;" Eileen Heckart, "Butterflies Are Free;" Geraldine Page, "Pete 'n' Tillie;" Susan Tyrrell, "Fat City," and Shelly Winters, "The Poseidon Adventure."

Women Bobbies Gain On The Men

LONDON (AP)-A quiet revolution at Scotland Yard has given London's women bobbies equality with men on the city's police force. The gals can even be boss-and in some units they are.

For 54 years, the women were confined to the traditional female side of law enforcement: caring for lost children, escorting women prisoners, dealing with prostitutes.

But all that is changing, and quietly. A week ago Monday, Scotland Yard closed its A4 department, the section comprising London's 661 women police. The women were then assigned among Scotland Yard's other departments.

And full integration of women became official over the weekend, said the Scotland Yard newspaper, The Job.

Westover Prepares For POW Arrival

By MARY SCHEIER
Associated Press Writer

CHICOPEE, Mass. (AP)-Westover Air Force Base "is preparing for the worst and hoping for the best" as one of 31 military hospital sites marked as treatment centers for returning American prisoners of war.

"Our problem is just so many sheer unknowns," explained Maj. David Hentz, assistant administrator for registrar functions at the 32-year-old base.

"We don't know how many prisoners we're getting or when."

The base has materials to bring returnees up to date with American affairs. And people from surrounding communities have offered everything from barbershop quartet serenades to ice cream and doughnuts.

News Synopses Provided

The base has news synopses on hand for men who may not know that Neil Armstrong walked on the moon, that Lucy Johnson Nugent became a Roman Catholic, that the Pentagon papers were published or that Jack Ruby died of cancer. The news synopses were prepared by Peter Harkes of the National Broadcasting Co. and Gordon Hart of Oklahoma State University.

Westover has spent $7,600 partitioning a total of 10 bedrooms on the hospital's second and third floors into one-bed rooms for returnees. Two rooms on the third floor are debriefing centers.

Kitchen-living facilities are available free in the non-commissioned officers quarters. Similar quarters with bedroom, living room and refrigerator only are available free in the billeting quarters for the wives, children and parents of the POWs.

Immediate family members will be provided free transportation to and from Westover, be it by car or commercial airlines.

Maj. Richard Cox, director of information from Westover's POW homecoming project, said all American POWs will undergo initial processing at Clark Air Force Base in the Philippines. From there they will hopefully be assigned to the base best equipped to handle their medical problems, he said.

Reunion With Families

Once they land at Westover in their CA Nightingales, Cox said, the returnees will be hurried to their hospital rooms for a private reunion with their families, who will be notified of POW status once their men are at Clark.

"The reunions will be as private as we can possibly make them," said Cox.

Psychological, internal, dental and general medical evaluations will follow.

In with the medical evaluations will be military debriefings by specially trained Air Force officers. Cox said the debriefings will concentrate on events leading up to and comprising the POWs imprisonment. Stress will be placed on learning the status of men listed as missing in action, Cox added.

The returnees will see films of movies made since 1965, read a collection of Vietnam-related jokes gathered from various Air Force periodicals, and copies of Time and Newsweek dating back to 1965.

The speed of each prisoner's return to normal diet and normal way of life will be handled on an individual basis, Cox said. "Great care will be taken with the diet. We assume the men have been fed a diet peculiar to Southeast Asia and the introduction of rich foods will be subject to some inquiry."

Career Counseling Planned

After the men are released from Westover, Cox said, they can go on convalescent leave. Those deciding to stay in the Air Force will get career counseling. Those who decide to leave will be helped "as much as we can."

Cox said that "at this time" any POWs who made antiwar statements are not under "any culpability."

In career counseling sessions, Cox said, families have been told to act natural, "to understand what the men have experienced but not to be patronizing and to allow the men to adjust to things. We are going to let each individual man determine his own speed."

Cox said the people on base have been caught up in the end-of-the-war furor.

"The feeling here has been one of great anticipation," he said. "A lot of people are working on it. About 200-300 people are indirectly involved. The whole thing has been met with considerable enthusiasm."

Maj. Hentz said that since the Westover hospital wanted to be ready to treat POWs at any time, it has been forced to send much of its usual retired clientele to civilian doctors.

Hentz said that unless returnees indicate a desire to bunk with fellow POWs, they will be given single rooms based on the size of their family and extent of their injuries.

People from communities around the Air Force base town have made so many offers of services that Cox has not acted on any of them yet.

Many Donations Offered

The American Legion Post in Waltham offered radios and the Chicopee Chamber of Commerce has said it will donate television sets.

The Wilbraham Men of Note, a barbershop quartet, has offered to come out and sing while one Chicopee woman has offered to donate donuts.

A Shrewsbury women's group has offered labrobes while the Agawam Junior Woman Club has volunteered "any assistance" they can offer. One Hampden woman volunteered to come out and talk to any prisoner who was lonely and the Peter Pan Bus Co. offered free bus service. Owners of a small farm in Hinsdale, N.H., offered parttime employment to returnees.

And for an American delicacy the POWs have surely missed, a Chicopee-area company has offered free ice cream.

A Choice Of Issues

The Massachusetts Society of Professors' recent move for affiliation with the American Association of University Professors on the UMass campus, marks another step in a national trend towards faculty unionization on American campuses.

In all the talk about which union can best represent university faculty, there seems to have been little consensus on just what issues the union will concentrate on, and what it will seek for its members.

Representatives of the various unions in the past have been divided about what the faculty will want the union to concern itself with.

Will the issues be "bread and butter", such as salaries and tenure? Or will they have to do with university governance and the role of the faculty in a time when students are insistently—and successfully— pushing for a greater voice in the way their schools are run?

And what will the position of the union be on purely local issues, such as the place of the UMass-Amherst campus in a multi-campus university system—and perhaps a reorganized higher education system for the state?

If and when the faculty decides in favor of collective bargaining, and an official bargaining agent is chosen, we hope that, along with internal politics, these are some of the issues they confront.

Uniform Tuition Rates

A Supreme Court case is pending which may liberalize the residency requirements state colleges and universities use to establish whether or not a student be required to pay out of state tuition.

The case involves the State of Connecticut and a woman, Ms. Margaret Marsh Kline. Ms. Kline married a bona fide Connecticut taxpayer and according to state law, she herself became a Connecticut resident. She has a Connecticut driver's license and is registered to vote in Connecticut.

Despite all this, Ms. Kline is being asked to pay non-resident tuition at UConn where she is a senior having transferred from California State College after her marriage to Mr. Kline.

If Ms. Kline is considered by the court to be a Connecticut resident, the impact from this decision may be felt throughout New England.

Massachusetts could lose as much as $1.3 million annually if this be the case.

Establishing residency in Massachusetts is dealt with differently depending on what one's purpose is. If one wishes to vote, the Constitution requires thirty days residency before election day. If one wishes to work in Massachusetts but live in another state, he must comply with Massachusetts motor vehicle laws after thirty days, even if he returns to his home state every night after work.

If, however, a student wishes to pay resident tuition, he must provide at UMass verification of at least one year's residence in the town of Amherst.

There is something slightly illogical about this. If, for instance, a student is from Arizona and attends UMass (because the school offers a program that he wishes to be part of) the student spends at least nine months of the year in Massachusetts. If the student wishes to drive here he is forced to register his car here, or at least comply with the state's insurance laws. If the student wishes to vote here, in town politics, he must register here. All of the consumer dollars he spends will be spent here. (He won't be going to Tucson to the movies.) In other words, three quarters of his living in a given year will be in Massachusetts, not Arizona. But he still must pay non-resident tuition.

What this leads to is a need for all state operated colleges and universities in the U.S. to coordinate their efforts and declare a single fee for everyone. This could be done by taking an average of all the tuition fees required from the aforementioned schools and charge this as a fee, no matter where the student is from. Then students could pursue their education in terms of their intellectual interests, not in terms of how much money is available.

Co-op Is Good, But...

I finally get out of my meal ticket and decide to fill my undernourished body with all this great healthy food. Then, I find out that there's a food co-op in Amherst, but right now they're not accepting any single members because they want a ten dollar minimum purchase per week. (And they don't even sell meat there). That's O.K. I really didn't feel like going to Amherst Center to pick up food anyway.

Then, I saw this ad in the paper about a food co-op that's not only on campus but right in the middle of the Student Union! This, I thought, I have to check out.

The People's Market. Sounds like a good idea, maybe even the best idea this place has had since the new bus system. Finally, a place to buy good food, cheap. In fact, it's such a good idea that it's just too bad that it won't work out. At least not now.

I really hate being so pessimistic about the People's Market this early in the game, but it's all too obvious. The People's Market is convenient, reasonably priced, good quality (as far as I can tell), but I don't think it will thrive, because the place is just too damn small to facilitate all its expectations.

The People's Market is too small to shop in. I trucked over there expecting some sort of a crowd but when I got there I felt like the last sardine being squashed in the can. I heard one of the workers say that eventually the People's Market would extend into Sci-Fi Library. Eventually, great, but what do you do about the crowd now?

But space isn't the only size problem that bothers me. Right now, there isn't a large selection of goods being stocked (because they wanted to insure the freshness and the quality and all that). The problem with this method is that the co-op is not going to have people come in and do their whole week's shopping because of the limited variety of goods. So, the people come and do their odds and ends shopping, and, unfortunately, the place becomes a cheap Munchies for the time being. This isn't half bad except that most people aren't going to want to run from store to store because they can save two cents here and four cents there. The name of the game is convenience. I don't imagine many people walking to classes with romaine lettuce in their knapsacks because it's 25¢ at the co-op and 30¢ in town somewhere.

Alright, so the place just opened and it has a lot of bugs to be worked out before the co-op can be a real service to the community. But, in the meantime, things just don't seem cranked up to what they're supposed to be. I think the co-op is premature at this point. It's unfortunate that an idea this good came out of the rough a bit too soon. I would have preferred to have seen it start as a finished product, not a small place that has hopes of expanding. I would have waited a while longer, things seemed disheveled when I was in there. I don't know, I hope I'm wrong, I hope this thing turns out, but right now it looks a little shaky.

Orchard Hill Program Needs Autonomy

Very much in fashion recently, among University and State officials, is talk of "reform" of Public Higher Education and increased support for "innovative alternatives" to the established University structure. "Reform" has become the much publicized characteristic of the Sargent administration recently and will be the pitch used to woo the voters come 1976 when Sargent runs for re-election. The question may then be asked: how does UMass-Amherst, and specifically, "special" programs such as Orchard Hill, fit into this picture?

Orchard Hill Residential College has been around here for a long time as far as special programs go— nine years, as a matter of fact. And during these past nine years, a lot has happened on Orchard Hill and in Whitmore that has made The Hill what it is today. Thus, it is most important that one views the present confusing situation between Whitmore and OH in its proper historical perspective—detached from the emotionalism that only clouds the real issues at hand.

Since its inception, there has been a wide gap between what Whitmore proudly publicizes in its bulletins and flyers and the reality of the Orchard Hill program. This has served as an ever-increasing source of frustration for new students whose expectations of The Hill are far from what they find when they come to UMass. Orchard Hill is not, as they were led to believe, a little sub-let of the University with a full complement of staff, faculty, and courses. Why, one may ask, has this been the situation of The Hill for so many years?

Well, back in 1964, the concept of Orchard Hill didn't really have too many friends among administrators and faculty. Dr. Joseph Marcus, Associate Dean of Engineering, chaired a committee in 1970 that, among other things, looked into the Orchard Hill Program up to that point. The report describes one of the reasons for the Orchard Hill Program as "the desire to lower the barriers between education and dormitory living in order to create an atmosphere of "total" learning." There was the hope, the report continued, "that small, semi-autonomous dormitory groupings, with some kind of academic component included, would provide a "collegial" atmosphere of living-learning that would combat an apparent increasing depersonalization."

Sounds like a great idea, right? Well, first of all, the four dormitory buildings that comprise Orchard Hill were not designed to be a living-learning cluster. The idea of Orchard Hill was imposed on the four buildings just as they were nearing completion. There were no provisions in the design and construction for the classroom, office, and meeting facilities that would be necessary for any serious academic program. But, under these conditions, The Orchard Hill "Residential College began in the Fall of 1964, anyway. Since financial resources were as severely limited as physical resources in the buildings, courses began to be taught in study lounges by dedicated and interested faculty, in their spare time, without any compensation either financially or by their departments academically. More often than not, faculty who participated in the program in their spare time were severely criticized by department heads for not spending more of their energies in their own departments. This strong resistance by University departments to the interdisciplinary approach (characteristic of The Hill programs) persists.

It becomes clear that the students, faculty, and staff on the Hill have been waging an uphill fight for many years. The Marcus Report of 1970 clearly shows this to be the case. "Despite persistent and laborious efforts by students and faculty on The Hill, University support for that operation has placed primary emphasis on the residential (dormitory) aspects rather than on the collegial (academic) aspects. There has been a tremendous investment of faculty time and effort in the program, but the lack of appropriate facilities for teaching, dining, and general meeting has impeded its full development. Although there is an increasing academic program at Orchard Hill, this has come about in the face of rather formidable resistance and reluctance by traditional academic areas . . . Only now (1970), under the stimulus of rather heroic efforts by the Master of Orchard Hill, does there seem to be some progress toward making this program effective."

It became clear from the very start that in order for Orchard Hill to really be effective, it needs a certain degree of decision-making and financial autonomy. The Master needed the power of a Dean to properly coordinate courses and insure their quality, as well as adequately compensate the faculty for their efforts, thus holding them accountable for what they did on Orchard Hill. Planning for a few years at a time for course and faculty continuity would be assured with a certain degree of fiscal autonomy.

All these most necessary changes, though clearly innumerated in The Marcus Report and then The President's Committee Report in 1971, and repeatedly proposed by the OH community to the administration over the past nine years, have all been ignored by Whitmore. So now with the pressure from Boston to institute some of the recommendations of the reports, Christopher Hurn resigns as newly appointed Master of OH indicting the OH programs as "narrowly conceived" and the possibilities of a real academic program nil because of a "small minority of OH students and staff" who are wasting taxpayers money.

Using this pretense, the same administration, which has repeatedly prevented Orchard Hill's realization, is now assuming the role of "the great innovator" and is seeking only to find out what's wrong with OH.

Don't be fooled. In reality, one can only view this latest move by Whitmore as the dissolution of the scarce and hard-won autonomy and sponteneity that has characterized The Hill and as Whitmore's assumption of The Hill's programming and scope.

Al Kelley is an Orchard Hill counselor who has served on various Orchard Hill committees. Last summer, he was a legislative assistant to the Joint Committee on Higher Education.

Check out the March 1 Rolling Stone (March 1). There's a color photo on the cover of a short-haired Mick Jagger. Inside the magazine is a short interview with Mick, who seems to be trying to gain a new image.

The reporter asks him about being on the Best-Dressed List. Mick's reply: "I really do my best not to be well-dressed."

Mick is asked if, because of the Japanese refusal of his visa, he is sorry that he ever took drugs. Mick's answer: "I don't take drugs. I don't approve of drugs, and I don't approve of people taking drugs unless they're very careful. Most people can't control themselves. They're not happy enough just to get a big high; they've got to get fucked up all the time."

Next thing you know, he'll be condemning the use of four-letter words.

If the Wizard of Oz were rewritten for the '70s, it would probably have an unhappy ending. Instead of Dorothy's friends knocking off the Wicked Witch, the Witch's friends would do away with Dorothy and sing: "Witch, Witch! The ding-dong's dead!"

Letters To The Editor

Dehumanizing Subtleties

To The Editor:

Last November the Collegian printed a letter about itself from the then Speaker of the Student Senate, John Hogan. He wrote:

"One cannot help but notice that all of the executive positions are filled by white males. One cannot help notice on absence of women and minority people on the staff, at least in any position of real responsibility."

"This absence has to be attributed to some factor. We do not believe that the incumbent editorial staff is totally to blame; they inherited the system last February. But they will be to blame if the current situation remains the same by February, 1973."

It is now February, 1973 and the Collegian now has three female issue editors and a female assistant news editor. (There are still no minority people on the staff.)

However, there is a subtle, very vague repressiveness in the atmosphere of the Collegian office that was there last November and continues there today.

The other night there was some disagreement between the editors over using an editorial point that many people might consider offensive, but it was particularly insulting to women. One of the female editors asked that it be deleted and her request was reacted to with laughter.

At the same time one of the editors was asking people about the proper punctuation to use in a solicitation notice for women and minorities to be on the staff.

The editorial point was eventually deleted because there are members of the editorial board with some measure of awareness and sensitivity to these problems.

But most of the male staff, and probably some females, "don't know" what it is that drives women and minorities from the Collegian office. It's almost easy not to know: the problem is so intangible—and yet so pervasive at the same time.

It seeps into the Collegian office from the outside where it is also pervasive, but right now it would seem that no one is honestly attempting to erect barriers to keep it out.

Those with some awareness and sensitivity to what is happening, to what is definitely driving certain segments of the campus population away, have an obligation to confront the others. Otherwise, their solicitation notices are meaningless: the women and minorities may join the staff for a time, feel dehumanized for a time, and eventually be driven out by their frustration.

The editors have to start turning their minds inside out to perceive these dehumanizing subtleties, and somehow, they have to influence their staff.

Or will we have to wait until February, 1974?

Howes Misquoted

To The Editor:

I am sure Mr. Howes was misquoted in the story in the February 8 Collegian concerning the issues in the race for Amherst selectman between him and Mr. Scheurer. With reference to the sewage treatment problem, Mr. Howes said in answer to statements by Mr. Scheurer that "he knows of no untreated sewage being dumped into the Connecticut River, and that the capacity of the present sewage treatment plant is adequate."

Records at the plant, which was designed to give primary treatment to about 3.5 million gallons a day, show that almost every day when the University is in session, flow at peak periods exceeds a rate of 6 million gallons a day. (The flow meter stops registering at 6 million gallons.)

It is true that all sewage goes through the plant and may perhaps be described in some sense as not "untreated," but practically, the adjective is accurate; the settling tanks simply overflow before solids have had time to settle out.

As for Mr. Howes' alleged statement that "bids were in for the construction of the new treatment plant," the fact is that not even the design of the new plant has been decided on. Perhaps Mr. Howes was referring to the laying of pipe for the new Stanley Street pumping station. Completion of the new pumping station, however, will not affect the situation at the treatment plant, except that the present overflow at the pumping station will be added to that at the treatment plant.

Black Students

To The Editor:

While reading the Massachusetts Daily Collegian of Friday, February 9, 1973, I ran across an article entitled: State Student Leaders to Meet. According to the article the purpose of this meeting was "to discuss common problems, such as student fees, academic reform, black students, commuters and health services." Am I to assume then that Black students are a problem on this campus as well as on other campuses? Am I to further assume that this conference was called to enable white student leaders to discuss amongst other problems Black students. Before you say I am making false assumptions, let me ask you not to feed me the old, "we couldn't find any Black student leaders," line. There is a large Third World community on this campus and you, if anyone, should know that no community can exist without its leaders.

It is my understanding that besides discussing Black students that this conference was also going to discuss the future of higher education in this state. Tell me, am I to assume that the future of higher education in the state of Massachusetts does not have any provisions for Third World persons?

For the past year I have heard our student leaders attempt to impress upon our administrators the importance of the Affirmative Action Program, yet, there has been no attempt at implementation of that same program within the ranks of our student leaders. Am I wrong in asking our student leaders to practice what they preach?

I don't expect our student leaders to be enlightened after they have skimmed this short note but I do hope they will think a little more about what they are doing in the future.

It appears that a prerequisite of recognition by the general campus community as a student leader is involvement in the social and political structure of our white student leaders; to that I can only suggest to our Black student leaders one thing: keep on being Black!!!

Misguided Patriotism

To The Editor:

Mr. David B. Mercier's letter of Feb. 12 serves to demonstrate the blind patriotism and narrow-mindedness which has brought this country to its knees. I refer, specifically, to his comments directed at those members of the Third World community who, he feels, did not demonstrate the proper respect to the country which "could" fulfill their needs, when they did not stand for the national anthem at a basketball game. His comments could just as well have been aimed at me, although I am not black, since I have not extended this mark of 'respect' to this country for several years. I stopped doing it the day I asked myself why, indeed, I was standing, realizing that there was nothing in the U.S. for me to respect.

Mr. Mercier, do you think this country, still so full of injustice, will be improved if you deny the right of free expression to others? Will it be improved by the attitude of "my country, right or wrong?" There is still racial discrimination in the U.S.; should Third World people refrain from trying to change things just because they are better off here than somewhere else? Think of what this country could be doing compared to what it does do to stop discrimination.

However, sir, you have done one thing to contribute to the enlightenment of those who read your letter, but do not know why they stand for the national anthem (which is a relic of World War II days and should be discarded, but that is another issue). Perhaps they will examine their beliefs and see if their 'respect' for their country is really just mindless cooperation with a meaningless tradition.

Finally, Mr. Mercier, I must ask you to attempt to shrug off your narrow-mindedness; try to understand my feelings as I have tried to understand yours. Don't let misguided partriotism blind you to the injustices being committed in your name; we can change things.

We're All Paying For It

To The Editor:

I would like to clarify a statement made in the Collegian editorial column yesterday. The editorial attempts to explain why the prices at the People's Market can afford to be lower than at local supermarkets. One reason which was mentioned is that the space rental is "free". This statement is misleading. The space rental is indeed free to the People's Market, but the space is not really free. Every undergraduate and graduate student is paying for that space through their Campus Center fee at the rate of $4.82 per square foot per year. In effect all students are subsidizing a service which few students may actually use.

Of course the People's Market can sell food at lower prices if they don't have to pay for their space; but not paying for the space used only serves to mask the real cost of the items sold. Would the People's Market be able to give students lower prices if those prices reflected all of the normal operating costs (including space utilization)? We may never find out to what extent the People's Market is really a service for just that reason.

All business enterprises (the bookstore, the hatch etc.) in the Campus Center/Student Union complex are assessed a space utilization figure by the Campus Center Board of Governors during budgeting. The People's Market should be no exception. There is no logic behind masking part of the operating expenses of the organization. The Board of Governors should assess the People's Market a space utilization figure similar to the other business enterprises in the Campus Center/Student Union complex. That is the only way to end this absurd subsidy and enable students to see whether they are really getting products at a lower cost.

AFSC Begins Viet Aid Drive

A million dollar campaign to more than double its aid to civilian war sufferers in Vietnam and its work for a lasting peace in Indochina was announced this week by the American Friends Service Committee.

Designated the "North/South Vietnam Fund for War Relief and Peace Action," the campaign opened January 21.

A major early phase of the campaign is directed to the university communities across the nation, according to Wallace Collett, board chairman of the AFSC.

"University young people," said Collett, "and the faculties are deeply concerned over the ramifications of this war. The theme of the campaign is 'Make Your Own Peace.'

"We have found," Collett added, "that many young people are seeking a way to do something of their own volition that can make a difference. Their support of AFSC's programs has been identified by many of them as one way to make a difference to the thousands of victims of this war."

The AFSC will more than double its efforts in the year ahead to respond to the accumulated misery of the Indochinese people.

"It is equally important," said Collett, "that Americans keep well-informed about the role of the United States in Vietnam. Many of the involvements of our country in Vietnam have taken place with the American people unaware of the sweeping and tragic nature of those involvements."

The AFSC operates a prosthetics and rehabilitation center at Quang Ngai, north of Saigon, which fits maimed civilian victims of the war with artificial arms and legs. Medical and surgical supplies have been provided to North and South Vietnam by AFSC over a period of several years, and the AFSC's spokesmen have been prominent in efforts to convince the United States to get out of Vietnam, conferring in Hanoi, Paris, Saigon, and Washington, D.C. with representatives of all warring factions.

Funds raised for the million-dollar campaign will go to support the initiation of new AFSC war relief programs in all parts of Vietnam and for domestic and international work for peace in Indochina.

Founded in 1917, the AFSC is dedicated to the search for non-violent solutions to human problems.

Mass. May Suffer Fuel Shortage

BOSTON (AP) — There won't be enough gasoline this summer or enough low sulfur fuel next winter unless the federal government slackens its restrictions on prices and import quotas, according to an official of Texaco Inc.

R. Howard Wilson, a Texaco vice president, told a hearing before the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency Monday that uncertainties over the future give oil companies little incentive to build new refineries.

ABA Votes For Aid To The Poor

CLEVELAND, Ohio (AP) — The American Bar Association today called for an expanded legal services program for the poor.

The ABA's policy-making House of Delegates voted without dissent for a resolution calling on the government to increase the level of support for its legal services program.

"Government at all levels and lawyers from both the public and private sectors should take every step necessary to insure that legal services lawyers remain independent from political pressures in the cause of representing clients," the resolution read.

On a cold February afternoon, one might find people on the slopes, on the ice, or taking advantage of some of winter's other sporting opportunities. Others find the season a time for solitude and meditation. (MDC Photo by Steve Smith)

Smith To Present Mozarteum Orchestra

The Mozarteum Orchestra of Salzburg, under the direction of Leopold Hager, will perform a concert at Smith College on Thursday, February 22, at 8:15 p.m. This will be the fourth offering of the 1972-73 Concert Series presented by the Smith college Department of Music.

The Mozarteum Orchestra of Salzburg is named for the famous private orchestra in the service of the Prince-Archbishops of Salzburg, with which Leopold Mozart and his son Wolfgang Amadeus, as well as Michael Haydn, were all associated at one time or another. The original orchestra was dissolved early in the 19th Century, and it was not until 1880 that the "Mozarteum" music school was established. This in due course gave birth to the "Mozarteum" orchestra, composed of teachers and graduates of the school, and members of the Cathedral Music Society's orchestra. The orchestra took part in the Mozart Festivals of those days, which eventually grew into the Salzburg Festival in its present form.

From the very earliest days of the Salzburg Festival, the Mozarteum Orchestra has taken part in the operatic performances as well as in the serenades, matinees, and concerts of church and chamber music. The Mozarteum Orchestra has been independent since 1958, and after the turmoil following World War II was reorganized to include exclusively professional musicians. In 1958, the City and Province of Salzburg took over the patronage of the orchestra.

For many years, the orchestra has given an annual series of symphony concerts in Salzburg, as well as taking part in operatic productions in the Salzburg Landestheater. It has also undertaken many successful tours of America, Africa, and Europe, its authoritative interpretations of the works of Mozart being hailed with great enthusiasm.

Leopold Hager has been chief conductor of the Mozarteum Orchestra since 1968. A native of Salzburg, he studied music at the Academy Mozarteum, as well as with Egan Kornath, J.N. David, and Bernhard Paumgartner, who was himself Director of the Mozarteum Orchestra after World War I. In 1962, he was appointed first conductor at the Landestheater in Linz. In 1964 he took over the same position at the Cologne Opera House, and the following year he became the General Music Director of the City of Freiburg/Breisgau. Since 1967, Mr. Hager has been leader of opera production in the Residenzhof at the Salzburg Festival, and has appeared regularly since 1968 as a guest conductor at the Bavarian State Opera House in Munich.

The program for the concert at Smith will, of course, be composed entirely of works by Mozart. The first piece will be Symphony No. 34 in C major (K.V. 338), and the next, the Divertimento No. 7 in D, major (K.V. 205) for bassoon, two horns, and strings. Following the intermission, the orchestra will perform the Pasticcio-Klavierkonzert (K.V. 41), with Maestro Hager at the piano. The program will conclude with Symphony No. 38 in D major (Prague) (K.V. 594).

The Mozarteum Orchestra of Salzburg, an ensemble of 45 musicians, is the only authentic Mozart orchestra which programs all Mozart works.

Tickets may be obtained from the Smith College Department of Music by telephone (574-2700, ext. 261). For those who wish a choice of location, the John M. Greene Hall Box Office will be open on Wednesday, February 21, and during the afternoon and evening of February 22.

Having been granted funds for operation, and having been through an extensive period of organization, the Central Area Women's Center has now opened in Brett House. The center, which welcomes men as well as women, will be an advisory and referral center for those (women) who feel they need help and guidance. (MDC Photo by Steve smith)

Cape Cod Battered By Snow

BOSTON (AP)—Usually snow-free Cape Cod continued to be battered for the second consecutive day Monday by an intense snowstorm as some areas recorded upwards to a foot of snow.

The National Weather Service said the storm would end by night fall. Schools were closed for the day over most of Cape Cod.

Areas north of the Cape escaped the storm, but high winds over the Massachusetts North Shore were blamed for causing the death of a Winthrop woman Sunday.

Alice Hennessey, 66, fell off an icy seawall to her death as she and about 100 others watched storm-swept waves break on the shore in Winthrop. Two hours later, her body washed ashore about a mile away, police said.

The four-man crew of the fishing dragger Nina and Gail was forced to abandon the vessel Sunday night when it began to break up in heavy seas 120 miles east of Cape Cod.

The crew was rescued by another fishing boat.

"This is the worst snowstorm we've had in five years or so," said a spokesman at the Nantucket State Police Station, "but it's kind of pretty if you haven't seen it for a while.

However, the beauty of the storm was marred by winds of up to 50 miles an hour reported in the Cape Cod area Monday. Steady winds of 30 miles an hour were reported at Scituate, the Cape Cod Canal, Gay Head and Nantucket.

Snow drifts of up to four feet were reported on Nantucket, Martha's Vineyard and other islands, and the Coast Guard said the breakers were reaching six feet at the Gay Head Guard station.

On Martha's Vineyard, Edgartown Police Chief Domenick Arena said there was "severe drifting" but that the winds also helped to keep some snow off the roads.

Mass Port Authority Modifies Logan Plans

BOSTON (AP)—The Massachusetts Port Authority recommended a number of modifications Monday to its "master plan" on the future growth of Logan International Airport including the deletion of a controversial proposed runway.

Edward J. King, executive director of the authority, said Monday the new proposals would bypass a plan to construct a major east-west runway and would mean the extension of two northerly runways to increase their capacity to handle larger aircraft.

"Considering the gains made by the introduction of the wide-bodied aircraft and their ability to handle increasing numbers of passengers and tons of freight," he said the construction of another major runway is no longer warranted.

But King added that the recommendation to do away with the runway might be subject to change depending on Logan's ability to meet future air service demands.

One of the extensions will run in a northeast direction toward the Point Shirley area in Winthrop while the second proposed extension will run in a northerly direction toward the East Boston area. The scrapped runway would have run in a southeast direction from the Neptune Road area of East Boston.

John Vitagliano, a long-time opponent of expansion at Logan, said Mass Port's newest recommendations will provide just as much noise and disruptions to the surrounding communities.

Vitagliano, manager of the Little City Hall in East Boston, predicted that opposition would be as intense toward the newer recommendations as past proposals.

Holyoke, MIT Receive Luce Award

NEW YORK (AP) — Two new professorships have been awarded by the Henry Luce Foundation to Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Mount Holyoke College, South Hadley, Mass.

The Mount Holyoke grant will establish a professorship in Cosmology while the award to MIT will support a chair in Environment and Public Policy.

The two professorships represent a total commitment of $450,000 over a five-year period.

Peace Seen On Lincoln's Birthday

WASHINGTON (AP) — The memory of Abraham Lincoln was evoked today, on the 164th anniversary of his birth, by a presidential assistant who said "we expect to enter a golden era of peace."

Mrs. Anne Armstrong, counselor to the President, read a message from President Nixon at a wreath-laying ceremony at the Lincoln Memorial as several hundred watched in sunny, sub-freezing weather.

"In troubled times he set the nation on its course," Mrs. Armstrong said after placing a wreath of red and white carnations in front of the statue of Lincoln.

The presidential wreath was the first of 30 placed in a half-hour ceremony. Each was carried up the broad stairs of the memorial through an honor guard carrying the flag of each state.

Hot Termpapers Back Firing

By TONY GRANITE

HOT TERM PAPERS purchased by 225 Central Connecticut State College students during the last two semesters could cause the retraction of credits and degrees, according to a story in the Conn. Daily Campus.

When files of Papers, Inc. of Hartford were impounded by the State, CCSC authorities went through them to find CCSC students who used the service. Possible disciplinary action is pending by the office of Student Affairs.

Elsewhere at UConn, alleged plagiarism is handled by individual faculty.

Meanwhile, the story says, the University of Wisconsin is holding up grades of 600 students, pending outcome of hearings similar to those being held at CCSC.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Libra can be gentle but persuasive. Natives of this zodiacal sign can weigh various factors, finally decide and then rush headlong into the fray. Libra is a natural romantic, striving against odds for an "impossible dream." Libra harmonizes with Sagittarius, Leo, Gemini and Aquarius. Libra is drawn to Aries but the relationship often is a stormy one. Libra should exercise caution in dealing with Capricorn and Cancer. Libra makes money with Scorpio, delves into mysteries with Taurus and examines fears and doubts with Virgo.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Conflict indicated at home base. If married, mate may make unusual request. Married or single, this is no time to sign legal documents. Another person's debt could be involved. Key is to gain overall view.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Avoid unnecessary travel. Tendency now is to act on impulse and this could lead to loss. On positive level, there is energy which can be constructively utilized. Health and work areas show improvement through abrupt change.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): What you possess could be cause of dispute. Others tend to be envious. Be aware of your own security. Don't give up something for nothing. One who teaches is willing to impart knowledge if you are receptive.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Those who were your allies tend to argue, create obstacles. Be flexible. The more versatile you are, the better for you. Don't compound error by arguing, pushing. Sagittarian could help you see humor of situation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Some beliefs are shaken; you revise estimates, concepts. This can be healthy and lead to progress. Relative who doubts, chides, should be treated gently, not with contempt. Thorough approach will serve your best interests.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Romance, discovery, opportunity for travel—these are likely to be featured. Gemini could play significant role. Guard valuables. Welter of confusion could result in loss if careless. Don't scatter efforts.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): What appeared to be a natural groove, a one-way street, becomes a matter of contention, change. It could be necessary now for you to tear down in order to rebuild. Taurus person plays key role. One in position of authority is uncertain.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your natural abilities can now be profitably utilized. Be sure you communicate in clear manner. Others exhibit tendency to misquote you. Your ideas need chance to develop. Don't rush. Take special care where travel is concerned.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Check investments. Review responsibilities. Relationships are intensified. Nothing occurs halfway. Capricorn is involved. Accent is on employment, health, how you relate to those who share your interests.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Emphasis is on legal avenues, joint projects, co-operative efforts, partnership and marriage. Those you rely upon may not be available. Be prepared. Have alternatives at hand. Deal with Sagittarian.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Some regard you as "soft touch". Now is time to demand credit for efforts. Let others know that you are aware. By so doing, you will sift through, ridding yourself of persons who seek only to take, without giving anything in return.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Home environment could leave something to be desired. Ride with tide. Refuse to be discouraged by emotional outburst. One you think much of is under pressure. Be mature, understanding. Then you make significant progress.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are imaginative but also capable of being methodical. You have gone through period of testing, depression. This year you come back, handling responsibility, making financial gains. If single, marriage is on horizon. September could be your most important month of 1973.

Women Swimmers Downed Twice

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

It was a long hard week for the UMass Women Swimmers who were overcome by Springfield College last Tuesday 85-28, and lost an extremely close meet to Mt. Holyoke on Thursday 53-51. However, team spirit remains very high for victories in the approaching meets.

Springfield, a very strong team that each year sends many of its swimmers to the Nationals, completely dominated the Minutewomen who were hurting from extra hard practices and bouts with the flu.

Mary Ellen Dash did however score on top in the 100 Freestyle and the 100 Butterfly.

Laurie Seluk, another high point regular, grabbed seconds in the 50-yard Backstroke and 100-yard Backstroke.

Diver Carol Canterbury, a Freshman who just started diving for the team did an excellent job in the one meter competition placing second.

Valuable third place points were accumulated by Cathy Abramson–50-yard Breaststroke and 100-yard Breaststroke; Kathe German–200-yard Freestyle and 100-yard Backstroke; and Ilene Handler–50-yard Freestyle.

Outstanding swimmers for Springfield were Tucker, Individual Medley (time 1:05) and Peterson 100-yard Backstroke (time 1:12).

Thursday night with Mt. Holyoke was quite a different story. Competition was extremely close with UMass touched out of a victory by 2 points.

Again Dash and Seluk emerged the high point scorers for the team.

Dash gained firsts in the 50-yard Freestyle, 50-yard Butterfly, and 100-yard Backstroke.

Seluk won the 50-yard Backstroke and 100-yard Freestyle.

Also the Freestyle Relay Team of Dash, Seluk, Handler, and Abramson emerged victorious.

Gaining valuable seconds were German–200-yard Freestyle, Handler–50-yard Breaststroke, Seluk–100-yard IM, and Abramson–100-yard Breaststroke.

Thirds were racked up by Abramson–200-yard Freestyle, Claire Briana–50-yard Breaststroke and 100-yard Breaststroke, German–100-yard Freestyle and 100-yard Backstroke and Canterbury–diving.

"The team's hard practices are paying off and it should be easier going in the last three meets," said Coach Pat Griffin. Assisting her in the coaching this semester is Linda Caulkins.

This Thursday, February 15, UMass hosts UNH in a home meet at WoPe Pool, time 5:00 p.m. There will be some juggling of the line-up for this one.

Presently four UMass swimmers–Dash, Seluk, Handler and Abramson–meet the qualifying times for the Eastern Regional Championship and will travel to Westchester, Pa., March 2, 3.

GONE FOR GOOD WE HOPE!

That's right—Lambda Chi Alpha plans never to have another pledge. That doesn't mean that we plan to close our doors when all our current members have graduated. We have been very successful at adapting to change throughout our history and we don't plan to stop now. Our purpose is (and always has been) to guide young men toward improvement as individuals through involvement with others.

The day has past when we let college administrators, similar organizations, and society tell us that we must subject our new members to a period called pledgeship. An individual's time is too important to be wasted with a period of second-class citizenship when he is involved in an organization with so much potential for human growth as Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity.

AXA has long since rid itself of the old-fashioned pledge training and hazing syndrome of the '50's. The days of janitorial apprenticeships, pledge-class cliques, dual standards of conduct, pseudo-social status, and unearned pride are hopefully gone forever. We will admit our mistakes, but in doing so, others must admit that our growth and stability have been unexcelled in the educational world.

No other collegiate organization has ever amassed the millions of members that the college fraternity system enjoys. The fact is that our system is older than most colleges and universities themselves. Along with negative connotations, we've obviously been making some genuine contributions in order to grow at the rate we've grown.

In addition to doing away with the term pledge and his status in general, we've developed a new program for promoting the growth of the individual. In this program we've tried to stress the traditional values of our fraternity: friendship, small-group living-learning atmosphere, a sense of belonging, individual growth, and worthwhile human experiences. We offer a comprehensive orientation to our fraternity and its programs, leadership development, a beautiful and inspiring ritualistic experience, and a continuing human development program as a fraternity member.

Prior to the ritual, an individual is known as an Associate Member. This is the period of time when his fraternity education is most intensified. Instead of being isolated into a separate class, however, he is brought fully into the realm of active membership—attending chapter meetings, voting, committee membership, and generally helping to run the organization.

This program is designed to overcome one of the major flaws of the entire pledge concept. An Associate Member is an individual with God-given talents and aspirations. He is a product of his former environment. We want to help that man continue to grow within his own framework. He will not be exactly like his associates. They will come from different backgrounds, and be at different levels of maturity and education. Therefore, they cannot be herded together as a pledge class.

The pledge program assumes that every man's needs are the same. Our new program gives every man credit for what he is while helping him grow as an individual. Doing away with pledges is only one of the changes that has taken place at Lambda Chi Alpha.

No matter what you've thought about fraternities in the past, we suggest that you talk to one of our members about the value of our fraternity today. Maybe you've got some changes of your own you'd like to make. If so, I promise you we'll listen.

Women Gymnasts Triumph

By MDC STAFF

The women's gymnastics team travelled to penn State and easily contained both Penn State and Clarion State to bring their season record to 3-0. In this meet, plagued by the inabilities of the home team to organize, and the demonstration of personal grievances and innovations by judges, the UMass team dominated all events. The final score, which really doesn't reflect the magnitude of the performances, was UMass 93.50, Clarion 86.45, and Penn State 69.50 points.

In the vaulting event UMass gave its best performance ever. Candy Gross started things off with a nicely performed handspring vault. Heidi Armstrong, achieveing a life-time high score of 8.45, executed two very solid vaults and finished in third place. Co-Capt. Margie Combs threw a strong yamashita vault and took second place to teammate Jeannine Burger who won the event with an 8.85 mark.

On the uneven bars, UMass continued to show the Penn Staters what good routines look like. Although Heidi Armstrong used two dismounts instead of one, Betsy East swung well and nailed down third place. Jeannine Burger hit a good routine and tied Margie Combs for the top honors. Both Margie and Jeannine were about one point underscored (in this writer's expert opinion).

Balance beam was the event that really dragged for both the spectators and the performers. Thanne Poth had a few problems, Margie Combs just couldn't quite stop her injured thigh and ankle from affecting her performance, Jeannine Burger was shaky, and Anne Vexler bobbled herself to first place on the event. Needless to say, this day's display of beam is not representative of our team's talented performers.

The floor exercise event went fairly smooth as UMass swept the top three spots. Alicia Goode, performing in front of her hometown crowd, led UMass off by executing a clean routine and capturing fifth place. Margie Combs tried not to show any pain as she danced and tumbled to finish third. Anne Vexler did a very lively routine and was underscored. She finished second to Jeannine Burger who outlasted all other competitors and won the event.

In the all-around competition UMass was well represented by Margie Combs and Jeannine Burger. Margie strained a muscle in her thigh during workouts last week and still managed to place a respectable second. Jeannine edged Margie out and won a red rose and some stamps for her performances.

This weekend the varsity opens its home schedule with a meet against a very good Canadian team. The UMass team will be facing a very talented international squad from Montreal. This meet is on Saturday, Feb. 17, at 2:00 p.m. in the Boyden auxiliary gymnasium.

Admission to undergraduates is Free.

This is one of the only four home meets which the team will have. The team will be home for the next four weekends so plan now to attend.

This Wednesday the junior varsity travels to Salem to take on Northeastern and Salem State.

Skaters Hexed Again, 5-4

By ROY LYONS

DURHAM, N.H.—The Division I jinx held up last night in the most bizarre and heart-breaking fashion for UMass as the University of New Hampshire roared back with a 4-goal barrage in the final seven minutes of play to register a shocking 5-4 win.

The capacity throng inside beautiful Snively Arena was anything but vociferous for the first 2-1/2 periods but after that the place was sheer bedlam as the Minutemen saw their seemingly safe lead dwindle to a deficit at 18:43 when center Gordie Clark potted his second goal of the period.

The amazing UNH surge nullified a brilliant effort by Pat Keenan who netted still another hat trick. (He now has an incredible 34 goals on the season which also ties his single season record).

UNH had the territorial edge in the first stanza, but most of their good bids went wide.

Keenan struck for the first time just two minutes after the opening face-off when he converted a Billy Harris feed into a 1-0 lead from just outside the crease.

The Wildcats began to press after that but Chic Rheault refused to yield. He stopped Ed Freni's drive as he broke in off the right wing and thwarted another bid off Freni's stick on a face-off moments later.

Keenan grabbed his second of three at 12:06 of the period. He took a pass from linemate Lonnie Avery and just drove it; a la Bobby Orr, past "Cap" Raeder—one of many good freshman goalies in the ECAC ranks.

Lonnie Avery went off at 15:10 for tripping but the Wildcats failed to generate any power play attack.

Jamie Hislop broke in alone on Rheault after Avery had come out of the box, but Rheault made the save and it looked like UMass might skate off with a two goal lead until UNH scored with 36 seconds left in the period.

Bill Beaney beat Rheault with a 15 footer to get the Wildcats on the board.

Keenan opened the second period, scoring a half minute into the frame finishing off a two-on-one break with Avery. Lonnie held the puck until the defenseman committed himself and it was Keenan vs. Raeder and a hat trick for Pat.

The rest of the period was evenly matched with Raeder and Rheault each making at least a half dozen saves.

Steve Nims took a good penalty with 44 seconds left when he hooked John King on a partial break away. The crowd yelled for a penalty shot but King was never in the clear and it was nothing more than a hook.

The third period started slowly enough with UMass playing good defensive hockey until about the midway mark of the period.

Chico Shea ran the count to 4-1 when he lifted the puck into a yawning UNH cage. Don Riley hit the post on the initial drive and was credited with an assist on the play.

Then it came. First Jim Dempsey, sent off limping earlier by a stiff Don Lowe check, struck for a short -handed goal. He took a pass from Hislop and had loads of time to pick his spot. The defense was caught flatfooted.

The crowd began to come alive and the Wildcats responded by really carrying the play for the 1st time in the hockey game. At 15:20, Clark scored his first goal and it was 4-3. Rheault saved Frenic's drive, but the puck came to Clark and he fired it home. The crowd really started screaming and that eerie feeling started to set in. You could sense that there wasn't anything stopping UNH now.

Peter Noonan tied it a minute later as he ripped a 20-footer that broke past Rheault. Rick Olmsted got the assist. Mike Ellis and Doug Towler were whistled off for coincidental minors at 17:26 but the extra ice didn't blunt UNH's blistering attack. Rheault stopped Mike Burkhart from close in and Don Lowe blocked a two-on-one break with a brilliant plunge, smothering the puck.

However, a UNH win seemed almost inevitable by this time and Clark raced in moments later and swept a backhander past a bewildered Rheault to cap the Wildcat's amazing drive and seal the Minutemen's doom.

Kevin Conners seems to have found some time to play cat and mouse with the Hamilton goalie at Orr Rink recently. Kev got the cheese as he converted here in the 7-3 romp of the Continentals. On the outside looking in is Scott Stuart, one of the brighter aspects of Jack Canniff's future. Both will have a few more cracks at that Division 1 hex...MDC photo by Alan Chapman

Cage Doors To Be Seized Again As UMass Hosts BU In Biggy

By EARLE BARROLL

For Jack Leaman and his basketball program Saturday night was the culmination of a long wait, and the beginning of something this campus has been storing up for some time.

"It proved that basketball is the number one student sport on this campus," Leaman was saying yesterday. "Many people have said that without Julius Erving we couldn't pack the Cage. But now they're coming to see Al Skinner, Tom Austin and Rick Pitino. We've proven that we're back."

There's no need to elaborate on the specifics of what the Minutemen did to UConn on that night. Leave it to Leaman to tell what he remembers best. "I just can't believe it," he mused. "I had to scream in the huddle when UConn called time when we were up 20-5. The fans were so loud it was fantastic."

"These fans are second to none. It's events like these that show what our university is all about," he said in alluding to a regional consensus that if you want fans then go no further than UMass. "It just hurts me to see so many people outside not being able to get in."

Tonight at the Cage UMass' surge to a possible date in New York City advances one more notch when the Minutemen (12-6, five straight) host Boston University at 8 p.m.

"Basketball's a funny game," Leaman said. "You win a game that's a must (UConn) and then the next game is another must. We can't lose to Boston University. We can't lose at Rhode Island. And we can't lose to Vermontt, New Hampshire and Maine either if we want to win the Yankee Conference outright."

Right now B.U. is a half game behind the Minutemen and UConn for the lead in the Conference. With their loss to Maine, 84-70, over the weekend at Orono (which happens to everyone) the Terriers are 4-2. UMass and UConn are 5-2, but the wins may come and the losses will stay.

Assistant coach Ray Wilson, who could probably rival the geology department with his knowledge of the eastern terrain through his recruiting travels, was at Orono for this game. "B.U. is playing well collectively," he said. "In this particular game Maine was shooting the eyes out of the basket and could have beaten anyone up there on that night."

For more than two years the running commentary on B.U. was great individual talent, but as a team forget it. Things have obviously changed for the better. Ken Boyd is the only doubtful starter for the Terriers and this is big, for Mr. Boyd is talent plus, plus.

Since the last time these two met (Jan. 6) when B.U. beat the Minutemen, 72-70 James Garvin (6'7) has been the talk of Commonwealth Ave. "He is now playing as well as any big man that I've seen this year in New England," Wilson said.

The only problems UMass has are physical. Charlie Peters is one big black and blue, but will start. And Jim Burke has a bad ankle but was seen yesterday on sturdy footing at the book annex.

The only other problem that should arise is finding a seat. It used to be a mere formality to end all previews for Cage games when Erving was around with "get there early". So, take a hint. The line forms at 3:30.

Strike???

NEW YORK (AP) — Marvin Miller, denouncing an "illegal threat of a lockout" by major league baseball clubs, said Monday player representatives would meet here Friday to discuss the owners' latest offer.

Miller, the executive director of the Major League Baseball Players Association, indicated the player representatives probably would take the proposal to the entire membership. Such an action would take up to three weeks and could result in a lockout March 1.

The owners, in making their latest offer last Thursday, announced they were postponing early spring training which was to have opened this Wednesday for invited players, usually pitchers and catchers. Miller, however, said that spring training does not technically start until March 1, the date set forth in all player contracts.

Don't Stop The Adrenalin Now

The Big Apple—For 23 years John Condon has been the placid voice of Madison Square Garden. When I first came in visual contact with the man, he dealt such phrases as "Massachusetts goal by Julius Erving"... "That was Mike Paglia for the Redmen" ... "And at the guard position, Steve Previs and George Karl for North Carolina" ... And you know, I think it's just a question of time before I'll hear Condon's wrap again...

Yes, believe it or not the "Big Apple" or, more specifically, the Garden on 32nd Street, is very close at hand. Yes, the NIT adrenalin has started to flow. And if you happened to be one of the unfortunate "800 Club" Saturday night, you'd know what I mean.

Well, Jack Leaman, you and that kid from the Bronx named McLaughlin have done one helluva job ... Yes, your Minutemen now have a better than average shot at the Beanpot ...Tonight and Saturday and a weekend ski trip to Maine and New Hampshire will settle that issue. Vermont at home will be a tuneup for those Yankee toughies on the road ... And as you contemplate the Terriers tonight, Jackie Leaman, you do have a five game win streak ... But here's a few more things you have going for you ...

First of all, welcome back Tom Austin. Once a clutz, first a clown, and now, a first rate starter for a major New England college team. Given the chance you've performed when critics wanted to count you out. And another fellow, Tommy "Toast" (Gillams) is slowly on his way back. You'll see him tonight. And for the bruises, scraped knees, and battered bones, you can catch another glimpse of the gutty Charlie Peters ... He just doesn't quit (great comment).

The UConn win had all the aura of the Erving Era ... Aisles bulging ... Cops summoned to disperse the caucus of 800 ... Seats on top of the practice baskets sold out ... A ring of students around the court turning the Cage into the death trap it is for opposing teams ... And you kind of sensed the Cagites wouldn't let the Huskies out alive.

Hey, don't forget that Al Skinner was on the bench for a major stint in the Husky debauchery. And so was Mr. Peter Trow ... Remember him. Well, they say competition is healthy and when Peter will be back. Another plus for the voyage to New York. With Peter on the bench you know this team has talent. Congratulations Mr. Burke, Mr. Pitino, and Mr. Endicott ... I'm sure Peter's getting tired of talking to Chuckie Olson ... But Chuck doesn't mind the company.

So the frontcourt and backcourt is combinationally set. And with the best of Gillams, Trow, and Murphy to come—lookout. So I think that a 12-6 record and 5 wins in a row, including walkaways with the Cross and the pompous Eagle away from home, and the Husky at the Cage, we should be convinced that Leaman's amazing discipline has produced a winner. And that tented circus called Boston University will get disgraced tonight ... You wait. The fans will eat them alive.

UMass is not a one man team. If they were Tommy Mac would be more selfish and shoot more. But to one individual, Al Skinner, save your best for Keaney Gymnasium on the campus of the University of Rhode Island Saturday night. If you win this one, you could go to the NIT, Jack Leaman (hey, I picked the Harvard football win didn't I?)

Let's face one more fact. If the Minutemen stumble in the Conference, they don't deserve the NIT. But if the officials don't give Skinner and his anti gravity moves (Earle Barrollism) four fouls in the first half ... the Rams will fall. And playing both Maine and New Hampshire in one weekend will be so frightening that it will be fun and emotionally relaxing to dominate both...

And then you have "Senior Night" with Fordham—the last melee at the Cage ... Oh, My God ... But tonight and Saturday, this parable could end abruptly ... But don't bet on it ... John Condon is counting on us ...

'Rents And Fees' Extends Discussion On Rate Uniformity

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU

The Rents and Fees Committee of the Student Senate, according to its chairman Mike Gregory, "does not believe that educational equipment for Residential Area courses should be funded by rent money." At its meeting last night in the Campus Center, the Committee also decided to further discuss the question of a uniform rent rate throughout the campus. Committee members are to seek further opinions from their constituencies.

The Committee moved to seek a stronger financial commitment from the Provost's office for the Residential Area academic courses since, without these courses, the University would have to compensate by offering additional courses.

The matter of uniform rates for dormitory rooms was brought up when Mike Gregory submitted a motion to propose to Vice-Chancellor for Administrative Affairs Thomas Campion, that Residence Hall Trust Fund (RHTF) and UMass Building Authority (UMBA) money be comingled, "to equalize the student per capita debt service."

Charles Hampton, Staff Assistant for the Vice-Chancellor, explained that it would require an act of the state legislature for the UMBA to buy out the RHTF. And since there are so many new legislators who do not fully understand the issue, such a bill at this time would be easily voted down.

One alternative suggested was that the rent for the Sylvan Area be frozen until the rents in the other areas catch up. This would mean that the residents in the other areas, especially in the older lower-cost dorms would have to bear Sylvan's inflationary maintenance costs beyond its own frozen $700 per year rate.

Gregory concluded that the Committee was not ready to take a stand on this issue. Hampton maintained that the differential "quality of life" in the dorms was "subjective".

Also discussed was the Residence Hall Telephone Trust Fund's Projected Ending Balances. According to the Memorandum submitted by Charles Hampton to the Rents and Fees Committee: "The Essence of this statement is that we have a surplus by the end of the Fiscal Year '73 rather than a deficit as budgeted. The reason for this is a combination of factors, the primary one being that Fiscal Year '72 deficit did not occur. The surplus projected in Fiscal Year '73 will be carried into Fiscal Year '74 to offset any rate increases or other higher operating costs."

The memorandum lists as the budgeted Projected Ending Balance as of June 30, 1973, a deficit over one thousand dollars and an estimated actual balance, as of the same date, of over twenty-two thousand dollars.

Hampton said that he was "happy to see it end in the black," that "there is no indication that the telephone company will be able to push through another rate increase," but that the surplus would "provide a good cushion" for any such possibility.

Budget Comm. Recommends Index By Subscription

By BRIAN COYNE

In a meeting last night, the Student Senate Budget Committee recommended the sale of the yearbook, INDEX, on a subscription basis and the transfer of the publishing rights to the campus humor magazine, YAHOO, to a private student. They also opposed the funding of the Amherst Women's Abortion Action Coalition.

Paul Doran, committee chairman, said that the decision to put the INDEX on subscription would result in a decrease of the Student Activities Fee Tax by approximately $60,000. Presently, about $3.83 of every student's activity fee goes toward the funding of the book. The resolution would make the INDEX available only to those wishing to buy it. The estimated cost of the book next year is between $7.50 and $10. The vote was unanimous in favor of the bill.

James E. Gold, former editor-in-chief of the COLLEGIAN, came before the committee with an offer to buy the rights to YAHOO from the Senate for one dollar.

His proposal read: "Whereas the Student Senate apparently desires not to fund YAHOO; whereas I feel YAHOO is desired by at least a large minority of students.

"Moved: that the Student Senate transfer to me, James E. Gold, all publishing rights to YAHOO for $1.00 and 50% of any net profit which might be derived from its publication of such a magazine for the first three years of private ownership. The Student Senate agrees not to publish anything using the title YAHOO. Also, the Student Senate agrees not to publish any humor magazines.

"This bill is contingent on the striking of the YAHOO budget for the academic year '73-74."

Gold said he didn't expect to make much money with his project, but only wished to gain more publishing experience.

The abortion coalition submitted a rationale for funding before the committee, saying that there was much work to be done in educating the community about services available which came as a result from the Supreme Court's recent ruling on abortions. They also discussed the possibility of getting abortion service into the infirmary.

Doran led the opposition to funding the group on the grounds that the same type of work can be done by already existing groups on campus. He said, "Our problem on campus is too many groups doing the same thing...There's a whole lot of duplication." He cited the Women's Center in Southwest as being the organization most likely to help disseminating abortion information.

The vote was unanimous except for one abstention against funding the coalition. Doran emphasized that the committee's action was not final. The bill still must come up before the Student Senate for a final vote. That is expected to happen sometime next week.

People Responding To 'Their' Market

By FRANCES BROCK

An enthusiastic and crowded response has greeted the People's Market in the Student Union, with the store racking up approximately $750 in sales since its opening Monday.

The market, whose aim is to sell groceries to students at lower prices than other stores in the area at a non-profit basis, met with two main complaints from customers--a shortage of some varieties of food and occasional crowding.

According to Gail Sullivan, one of the proprietors of the store, many of the customers coming into the store the first day "just came in and bought an apple, or looked around."

The small size of the store is to blame for both the crowding and the empty shelves (because of a lack of storage space), according to the store's proprietors. "We can't do anything until the Science Fiction Library (next to the store) finds new space to move into," Ms. Sullivan said.

Ms. Sullivan said the store's goal was sales of $2-3,000 a week. At that rate, she said, the store could pay its labor and other costs, and begin to repay a $4,000 interest-free loan from the Commuter Assembly.

Poem For Tyrants

sentient beings are numberless—
I vow to enlighten them all —The First Vow of Buddhism

it seems I must love even you easier loving the pretty things the children the morning-glories easier (as compassion grows) to love the stranger

easy even to realize (with compassion) the pain and terror implicit in those who treat the world around them with such brutality such hate

but oh I am no christ blessing my executioners
I am no buddha no saint nor have I that incandescent strength of faith illuminated

yet even so you are a sentient being breathing this air
even as I am a sentient being breathing this air
seeking my own enlightenment
I must seek yours

if I had love enough
if I had faith enough

perhaps I could transcend your path and alter even that forgive me, then—

I cannot love you yet

DPW's Haslegrave Reviews Recent Snow Removal

By GABE IMPERATO

In an interview, Daniel W. Haslegrave, Assistant to the Superintendent of the Department of Public Works, spoke of the Town's snow removal operations, focusing on UMass' latest snowstorm.

There are four divisions at the Department of Public Works: the Highway Division with 9 snow plows, 2 sanders, a snowblower, 3 bucketloaders, 2 pickups and 20 employees covering snow removal for the Town of Amherst.

"This is not enough equipment to handle heavy snowstorms," Haslegrave said. Consequently, he said, Public Works rents trucks from New England Tree Co., Puffer Construction Co., Karl's Excavators or Stowell Trucking during snow emergencies. Haslegrave explained, "Heavy storms are so infrequent that it doesn't pay to keep extra equipment."

There are 9 snow plow routes in Amherst, and each route is covered by a tandem team. During the last snowstorm, Public Works hired six extra trucks to cover the routes.

The Department's sanders were out by 5 p.m. on Sunday, February 4th, and the snow plows were out by 2 a.m. Monday morning.

Haslegrave said, "This was overtime for employees, but all employees usually show for snow removal, because they have a sense of responsibility towards the townspeople."

"It is true that the crew received overtime pay, but," he added, "a large part of their incentive to work was the fact that they knew they were being counted on."

To emphasize this, Haslegrave said, "Weather reports come in, and when a storm is predicted over a weekend, all the guys who know they're needed, will stay around or let you know where they can be reached. They don't really have to do that."

During the recent storm, the snow crew worked from 5 p.m. Sunday, February 4th until 5 p.m. Monday, February 5th, with the sanders and snowplows going all the time.

The crew was not able to get a day off although they had worked the night before. Consequently, by 5 p.m. Monday, the crew had worked 24 hours straight. "The men had to be given time off; how much can you ask a guy to work?" asked Haslegrave.

Between 5 p.m. Monday and 3 a.m. Tuesday, the crew was off duty. On Tuesday the crew stayed on until 4 p.m. During this time, the crew attempted to clear snow from the center of town, but "there was a hell of a lot of snow" said Haslegrave. By the time traffic started to build up in the morning, only a bit of snow had been removed.

A snowblower is used to clear snow in the center of town. The blower fills a dump truck, which proceeds to a landfill on Belchertown Road, and dumps the snow.

On Tuesday morning, the amount of snow allowed only for a minimal clearing of the streets. When local traffic started to build around 7:30 a.m., the speed at which the truck coud travel to and from the landfill was hampered so that operations were greatly impaired. The snow removal equipment was moved out of the town center to another site which was less congested.

Haslegrave felt the University should have called off classes, traffic builds up and snow removal is hampered from operating efficiently.

According to Haslegrave, he knew of no consultation or communication between the Department of Public Works and the University during snow emergencies.

Faculty Bargaining Agent Uncertain

By CINDY GONET

Collective bargaining for faculty has received much publicity recently. Unionization may come within a week, but which union will bargain for the faculty is still under discussion.

If and when the campus's 1500 faculty decide to use collective bargaining, there are two organizations vying to represent them: the National Education Association (NEA), and the American Association of University Professors (AAUP). The NEA would function on this campus under the auspices of a joint coalition of the Massachusetts Society of Professors and the Massachusetts Teacher's Association (MSP/MTA).

The NEA, through its newly formed affiliate, the Massachusetts Society of Professors, (MSP) has a full time representative working with this campus. The AAUP does not.

According to Cyril Solomons, a physical chemist who worked as a special consultant to the MSP in September, the NEA is the only national organization with the resources to provide such aid to its local affiliates. He predicted that as a result the UMass faculty will choose the local affiliate to represent this campus.

Solomons said that former chancellor Oswald Tippo's resignation last fall caused many faculty to fear that this campus may suffer as other UMass campuses are upgraded.

In September, Solomons stressed the "bread and butter" issues of salaries, but said the faculty was also concerned over course load, class size, and tenure.

He said a collective bargaining agent could represent faculty interests to the administration better than a faculty member on the Board of Trustees.

On Thursday, the AAUP held an astounding meeting. For 3-1/2 hours faculty members bickered among themselves over whether collective bargaining was necessary. Remarks by AAUP members indicated the "tweed and pipe" set felt it might be lowering itself if it unionized for collective bargaining.

If the AAUP did affiliate with the MSP/MTA in coalition, the AAUP decided it would be condescending to a body of high school teachers only to achieve collective bargaining.

Because the university is split into factions of the MSP/MTA and the AAUP, it seems feasible that a coalition of the two groups would bring about collective bargaining much sooner.

Because the American Association of University Professors, (AAUP) is affiliated with its national chapter which

The situation if further complicated because the American Association of University Professors, (AAUP) is affiliated with its national chapter.

A Professional Unity Agreement was drawn up between the AAUP and the MSP/MST for the purpose of a collective bargaining drive. When the National chapter of the AAUP got wind of the agreement, they began "pressuring" the local chapter into amending the original agreement which was drawn up to allow payment of dues to the national AAUP.

The National chapter of the AAUP therefore made it mandatory for all members of the affiliated AAUP and MSP/MTA to pay for dues of the combined unions. All faculty members would pay National AAUP dues of $12 to $36 (depending on rank), MTA dues of $76, MSP dues of $3, and AAUP local dues of $4.

Monday afternoon MSP met to ratify the Professional Unity Agreement. They did so, but just in case the agreement was not ultimately approved, the MSP circulated an A&D card (Authority and Designation) to name the bargaining agent independent of AAUP.

If, by direct petitioning, the MSP can accumulate 30% of the faculty's endorsement, the union may be chosen by the election process as the official bargaining agent of the UMass campus.

Before calling an election, the State Labor Relations Commissions must hold hearings to determine which faculty members may make up the bargaining unit. Teaching assistants and librarians are among those whose role would have to be decided.

If the MSP can conceivably receive 50% of the faculty vote, it would be certified as the bargaining agent.

Walter Denny, a professor of Art, and a member of the AAUP and the MSP told MDC that the collective bargaining drive would favor both the faculty and the students. That Collective bargaining would make for "better quality education" is the major premis in the coalition.

Since a liberal Executive Board has been elected Denny felt that negotiations would run smoothly with the students and the administration alike. The students and faculty at this time have more power and more money than the faculty, said Denny and student observers hope that a student voice will be heard in any dealings concerning collective bargaining.

State Youth Services Dept. To 'Restructure'

By NILS J. BRUZELIUS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)—The Massachusetts Department of Youth Services, in what appears to be a policy shift, plans to open two new "intensive treatment units" for "hard-core" youngsters in its care.

Acting Commissioner Joseph M. Leavye, who took over from controversial former Commissioner Jerome G. Miller, said the new facilities will probably be located at the department's closed detention centers at Worcester and Westfield.

Leavey, who announced plans to "restructure" the department at a news conference, denied emphatically that his plans were a "reversal" of the policies of his predecessor. Miller left the department in January after three years to take a similar job in Illinois.

Commissioner Leavey also said the department has asked the attorney general's office to investigate a "group home" facility in Cambridge, one of many under contract with the department.

He said an evaluation and audit of the Libra Youth Home turned up "sufficient inconsistencies to warrant further investigation by the attorney general."

"We're evaluating every program if there's any kind of practices where we think there could be any criminal involvement we would turn the matter over to the attorney general," Leavey said.

"I'm not saying there is or there isn't" criminal involvement at the Libra facility, he added.

The commissioner said the new "secure" facilities would hold 12 to 15 youths each. The department's only other "secure intensive care unit" is the Roslindale detention center, which Leavey said has a capacity of 35 youngsters.

He said the new facilities would open within six weeks "to provide increased services for those few children who present a danger to themselves or the community.

"Each of these units, while secure will provide medium to long-term treatment in a manner envisioned, though not implemented, by the previous commissioner."

Miller's program, which resulted in the closing of the Worcester and Westfield detention centers and other large institutions operated by the department, drew fire from some legislators and others who charged the department with being too "permissive" with its charges.

Leavey said he shared Miller's "fear" that small secure facilities would expand gradually until they took on the same scope as the closed detention centers, and he said he would establish programs to ensure this did not happen.

He said, however, that existing programs based on community foster homes and group homes "haven't caught up to some kids.

"There are some kids who from the start are flying so high that we'd better give them some kind of a program that will be secure."

Dr. Henry Kendall, an MIT professor and a member of the Union of Concerned Scientists, spoke last night of the danger of nuclear leaks at various reactors. He claims that the A.E.C. is indifferent to the danger. (MDC Photo by Sue Goldbaum)

Prof. Warns Of Nuclear Leaks

By ED FOGARTY

Dr. Henry W. Kendall of the Union of Concerned Scientists (UCS) said last night in Hasbrook Hall that the Atomic Energy Commission is suppressing reports relating to the safety of nuclear reactors.

In the Emergency Core Cooling Hearings in Washington, D.C., the A.E.C. has refused to allow the Consolidated National Intervenors (C.N.I.) to discuss the technical aspects of safety design. The CNI are opponents to A.E.C. policy. The A.E.C. said that this was out of order. Only aspects included in their design standards may be allowed, he said.

Dr. Kendall, a professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, said a letter received from William Cottrell, Director of Oak Ridge Laboratory in Dec., 1971 was suppressed from the public and branches of the A.E.C. The letter contained doubts about the safety standards of the A.E.C. The A.E.C. sent the letter back to Oak Ridge Laboratory on the basis that it was a draft. Cottrell stated in later testimony that the letter was not a draft.

Dr. Kendall said that the Emergency Core Cooling Hearing has been going on since Jan. 1972, and has accumulated much criticism of A.E.C. safety standards. The A.E.C. does not pay attention to the hearings findings, he said. The A.E.C. has a double responsibility. They must determine safety standards, and promote the nuclear power industry. The safety issue has taken a back seat because of this split responsibility, said Dr. Kendall.

He said that the size of the nuclear reactors has increased in the 60's and so have the problems. The safety standards established for the small nuclear reactors of the 50's are inadequate.

Dr. Kendall said that the likelihood of a major accident in the pipe system of a nuclear reactor are 0.001. By the end of this century there will be approximately 1000 reactors. That will mean one major accident per year, he said.

This probability is established by the A.E.C. He said adding that he considered the actual probability is higher.

In the event of an accident in the pipe line, Dr. Kendall said the nuclear material would leak in to the atmosphere and sink into the earth below the plant.

A plant such as the Pilgrim Plant in Plymouth, Mass., would be lethal to an area within 100 miles he said. Land would be also non-usable for about 1000 miles, he said.

He said that a nuclear reactor contains radioactive fallout equivalent to 1000 Hiroshima-type bombs.

Besides the problems with the construction of the nuclear reactors, there is also a problem of what to do with the nuclear waste of these reactors, he said. This waste cannot be allowed to enter the environment, but must be stored.

Dr. Kendall said that there is no adequate means to store this waste at the present time.

Dr. Kendall suggested that more money be put into alternative sources of power, adding that little research has been done in the area of solar power or geo-thermal power.

Dr. Kendall advocates a moratorium on all present construction of nuclear power plants.

Dispute Over Tenure At Smith

A Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination (MCAD) hearing is scheduled for this morning in Northampton in the case of two Smith College junior English professors who claim they have been denied tenure because of their sex.

The hearing concerning Profs. Maurianne Adams and Mary Schroeder is to begin at 10:30 this morning in Alumnae House at the College. The hearing is open to the public.

At the same time, a petition signed by 993 Smith students was delivered to the office of President Thomas C. Mendenhall yesterday afternoon demanding that the "Committee on tenure and promotions halt and postpone all department recommendations concerning tenure until:

—The ad hoc committee reviewing tenure makes its report.

—Negotiations concerning student appointment to committees discussing tenure have begun."

There are 2,400 enrolled students at Smith College.

The office of President Mendenhall said yesterday afternoon that he could not be reached for comment on the situation for the rest of the evening, and that in any case, he usually "does not discuss situations like this over the phone."

Teacher evaluations filled out by students at Smith have little or no value, according to one professor there. The professor claimed that Smith students are given the least responsibility for their own school of all five college students.

In a related case, the Smith economics department has recommended that tenure be denied to Associate Professor Charles Sackrey and Assistant Professor Mark Aldrich.

The final decisions on the two professors are now in the hands of the Smith Committee on Tenure and Promotion, which can either accept or reject a departmental decision to deny tenure. Its decisions are expected early in March.

The unfavorable recommendations allegedly were based on the beliefs of the senior tenured members of the economics department that the two professors were not sufficiently committed to either tradition analytical economics or to Smith College as an institution.

Both are members of the Union of Radical Political Economist, a splinter group from the American Association of Economics Professors. They are both friends of Harvard economics professor Samuel S. Bowles, who is being considered as a candidate for appointment to the UMass economics faculty.

The student newspaper at Smith, THE SOPHIAN, printed a lengthy letter from Sackrey to the Smith Economics department last Thursday disputing the criteria on which the pair had been "fired"

Penn Central Asks Passenger End

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The bankrupt Penn Central railroad asked U.S. District Court Tuesday to approve suspension of all passenger service it operates in 16 states except for some profitable commuter trains in the New York City area.

The nation's largest railroad told U.S. District Judge John P. Fullam it wanted to get out of the passenger business on Sept. 1 - claiming it is losing millions of dollars every month - unless city, state or federal governments pay the entire cost of operation.

Efforts to get more subsidies will continue, the railroad said.

Fullam, who is supervising reorganization of the railroad under the federal bankruptcy laws, didn't set any date for a hearing.

Penn Central also asked the court to allow it to stop freight service immediately over one-fourth of its 20,000 miles of track, also because of heavy losses.

Penn Central alleged in its petition that it was losing money on virtually all its passenger operations, including the long distance trains it now runs for Amtrak.

O my darling troubles heaven
With her loveliness

She is made of such cloth
That the angels cry to see her

Little gods dwell where she moves
And their hands open golden boxes
For me to lie in

She is built of lilies and candy doves
And the youngest star wakens in her hair

She calls me with the music of silver bells
And at night we step into other worlds

O she touches me with the tips of wonder

Two POWs Home, More Later

Two POWs Fly Home

By PETER ARNETT
AP Special Correspondent

CLARK AIR BASE, Philippines (AP) — Two American war prisoners flew home Tuesday and officials said most of the others here will be back on U.S. soil for the weekend. But doctors reported a few asked to remain for plastic surgery on wounds before going home.

Official sources said about 20 prisoners will fly to the United States Wednesday afternoon after completing their processing and medical examinations.

The sources said the group is scheduled to leave Clark at 5 p.m.-4 a.m. EST-on a C141 Starlifter for Travis Air Force Base in California. The 15-1/2 hour trip will include a refueling stop at Hickam Air Force Base in Hawaii.

It will be the first regular flight home for the 143 POWs released in Hanoi and South Vietnam on Monday. The two men who left Tuesday were rushed through processing because of illnesses in their families.

Another group of 20 was expected to leave at 8 a.m. Thursday and a third group at 5 p.m. Thursday.

One source said plans were for about 20 men to be in the first group, "but hopefully it will be more than that. It all depends on the tests and how fast we can pump these guys out."

Officials said the names of those to leave were not available.

The plastic surgery some POWs will undergo here is for wounds that require further repair.

"It's less cosmetic than practical," said a hospital staff member. "Some of these men have bad scars on their arms from being bound for a long time with wire. In others their war wounds healed badly.

One of the 27 Americans freed Monday by the Viet Cong reported he spent much of his five years' captivity in shackles and solitary confinement.

"I have spoken more since I was freed yesterday than in all the five years I was a prisoner," Michael Hugh Kjome, a civilian from Decorah, Iowa, told staff at the Clark Air Base Hospital.

Captured During Tet Offensive

A contract employe with the Agency for International Development, he was captured in Saigon during the 1968 Tet offensive.

A few other Americans reportedly told of beatings and ill treatment, such as salt rubbed on wounds by their captors. Their comments were relayed by military spokesman and others at the hospital. Tight security prevented newsmen from talking directly with the returned prisoners.

Hanoi's Vietnam News Agency charged that most of the Viet Cong prisoners released by South Vietnamese Monday were "in bad shape due to savage torture, inhuman treatment and frequent transfer from one prison to another."

Reliable sources reported that more of the former American POWs at Clark will fly home Wednesday, making room for 20 more U.S. prisoners North Vietnam has promised to release within the next few days.

Waving exultantly, Air Force Capt. David E. Baker, 26, Huntington, N.J., is carried down the ramp of the C-9 airplane that brought him and 25 other Americans to Clark Air Base after their release by the Viet Cong in South Vietnam a few hours earlier. (AP)

POWs Go On Shopping Spree

By LEONARD PRATT
ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

CLARK AIR BASE, Philippines (AP)—It was a shopping trip like no other for more than 100 returned American prisoners of war at the Clark Air Base exchange.

Jewelry, men's clothing, valentines, peanuts, cigarettes, paperback books, coffee, shaving lotion, stereo equipment and records—they all got the once-over during the Tuesday night binge. Many items were also purchased in the special evening opening of the exchange for most of the 142 POWs who flew to Clark Monday after their release in Hanoi and South Vietnam.

They arrived in buses from the base hospital and were greeted by shouts of welcome from a few military dependents gathered outside.

The first man through the checkout line, after apparently giving his autograph to the Philipino cashier, got an immense hug and a kiss in return.

Military police kept reporters from entering the exchange, but the returned prisoners and their escort officers could be seen through windows as they strolled the aisles. Most wore blue or striped hospital gowns. But some were dressed in bright short-sleeved shirts, shorts and knee socks.

Hanoi To Free 20 More

By GEORGE ESPER

SAIGON (AP) — Hanoi said it will release 20 more American prisoners of war from North Vietnam in a few days, and the four-party military peacekeeping commission here was summoned into session Wednesday to make the arrangements.

At the same time, Col. Bui Tin, chief spokesman for the North Vietnamese delegation to the commission, said the second group of American prisoners of war held in South Vietnam will be released in 10 to 15 days, possibly near the same site where 27 U.S. prisoners were freed Monday.

Tin said he had no details on the impending release of the 20 prisoners in North Vietnam.

Jerry W. Friedheim, spokesman for the Defense Department in Washington, said on Tuesday the Pentagon had received the list of names of the 20 Americans to be freed in North Vietnam and their families were being notified. Included on the list are four Navy men and 16 from the Air Force.

A total of 116 American prisoners were freed by Hanoi on Monday in addition to the 27 released in South Vietnam. The release of the additional 20 will bring to 163 the number of American prisoners released by the Communists in both the North and South, including eight civilians. It will leave 320 American prisoners held in North Vietnam, 99 in South Vietnam and nine in Laos. These include 19 civilians in South Vietnam and two in Laos still in captivity.

The Pentagon indicated that North Vietnam's action apparently is a goodwill gesture following a four-day visit to Hanoi by U.S. presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger, who negotiated the peace agreement under which all American prisoners of war are to be freed by March 28.

Friedheim said the Pentagon was informed of the release by North Vietnam through "communications channels." He did not elaborate but said the measure apparently was connected with Kissinger's postwar discussions with the Hanoi leadership.

Kissinger arrived in Hong Kong earlier Tuesday for a two-day stop before continuing on to Peking on Thursday for talks with Chinese leaders.

Kissinger had said he expected that all of the American prisoners will be released in four increments of roughly equal numbers in two-week intervals. The peace agreement signed in Paris on Jan. 27 states only that all prisoners are to be released within 60 days, or by March 28, and makes no specific time provisions.

Hanoi To Allow Red Cross Help In MIAs Search

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP)—North Vietnam has agreed to allow the International Red Cross to help look for the 1,328 missing U.S. servicemen in Indochina, Maj. Gen. Daniel James said Tuesday.

James, assistant U.S. secretary of defense in charge of war prisoner affairs, said a Thailand headquarters will be set up to supervise the search, in which the United States will take part.

"We are going to leave no stone unturned to account for these men," he said in an interview. "The North Vietnamese have agreed to be responsible for accounting for the missing."

James said the International Red Cross has also been invited by North Vietnam "to inspect the prison camps in which our POWs were held."

"Devaluation Only Temporary"

Nixon May Ask Tariffs

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon said Tuesday he will ask Congress for authority to erect tariff barriers if necessary to follow up devaluation of the dollar.

He told Secretary of the Treasury George P. Shultz that "devaluation of the dollar is at best only a temporary solution of the problem."

"That is why trade legislation must follow," Nixon said. "... only by getting trade legislation and changing or reducing the huge deficit can the huge pressure on the dollar be taken off."

"Fair Shake"

And signaling a tougher stance, Nixon said as part of an effort "to get a fair deal and a fair shake for American products abroad" he would ask Congress "for the right for our negotiators to go up or down" with tariffs in trade talks with other countries.

"We have gone into too many negotiations abroad in which all we have done is to negotiate down whereas others have negotiated up," the President said.

His comment came as he began a meeting with Shultz 12 hours after Shultz' dramatic announcement that the United States was devaluing the dollar by 10 per cent.

Reporters who were allowed to overhear a portion of Nixon's conversation with Shultz heard the President say "other nations must get away from their discriminatory policies and we must be in a position to bargain harder."

Threats to Business

Nixon singled out Japan and Europe when he talked of threats to U.S. businesses, saying:

"The United States being the best market in the world—and this is not criticism of our Japanese and European friends—they are loading it into this market and they can drive U.S. businesses out of existence . . . and lose Americans their jobs."

The President gave no further specifics on the legislation and his aides said they did not know when it would be sent to Congress.

Meanwhile, the State Department said the other major trading nations of the world have been too slow in eliminating the trading and monetary surpluses that have thrown the American international economic position out of equilibrium.

Department spokesman Charles W. Bray said, "the time has come for action across wide and complementary fronts" to solve the international economic problems.

Must Work Quickly

Bray's statement came as State Department officials warned these trading powers, particularly Japan and the European Common Market, that they must work quickly to restore balances or face severe reaction by the United States in the form of U.S. restrictions.

Concerning the new American devaluation pplicy announced Monday night, State Department officials said there was clearly a relationship between that announcement to remove American restrictions on capital movement by the end of 1974 and the barriers now in existence against American investment overseas.

Bray said the American announcement is "designed to move us further along the path" toward a balanced system of monetary reform and a more equitable world trading system.

Europe, Business Praise Move

By FRED COLEMAN
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP)-European governments praised the United States on Tuesday for swiftly and decisively bringing to an end the crisis of confidence in the dollar.

The surprise American decision Monday night to devalue the dollar for the second time in 14 months, and this time by an unexpectedly large 10 per cent, was seen in Europe as almost certain to stop the unprecedented selling wave of dollars on world money markets.

Other Currency Confusion

But fears were voiced at the same time that what has largely been a dollar crisis may now turn to speculation against other currencies and a fresh round of monetary turmoil sooner or later. Adding to the confusion was the fact that five financially important countries are now allowing their currencies to float outside fixed exchange rates.

Italy was the latest to join this group Tuesday. The others are Britain, Canada, Switzerland and Japan.

Furthermore all the new exchange rates-in effect changes in the price of money-were bound to affect world trade by revising export prices.

The dollar opened Wednesday at 273 yen for interbank transactions in Tokyo. The rate was 301.10 yen on Friday, the last trading day before closure of Tokyo's foreign exchange market.

Temporary Solution

In Washington, President Nixon warned that the dollar devaluation was at best only a temporary solution to the free world's trade and monetary problems. British Chancellor of the Exchequer Anthony Barber voiced the hope that the dollar devaluation would speed efforts toward longer-lasting reforms in the world monetary system.

The first hint of how well the devaluation is likely to work was not expected before Wednesday when most of the world's foreign exchange markets reopen for the first time since last Friday.

U.S. Tourists Caught

American tourists caught by the rate change found their travelling money did not go as far as before the move. The German mark, which cost 31 cents before the crisis, now costs 34-1/2 cents, according to exchange rates announced in Bonn.

The French franc, which cost 19-1/2 cents before the crisis, has risen to 21-3/4 cents.

On the other hand, the British pound, which is floating, was expected to rise only maginally.

AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP)-American business applauded the devaluation of the dollar Tuesday. Most business leaders expressed hope the move would help to boost foreign and domestic sales by making U.S. goods cheaper abroad and foreign goods more expensive in the United States.

The stock market reacted with an initial burst of enthusiasm and analysts predicted a fresh flow of foreign investment. But some economists were lukewarm about the decision of the Nixon Administration and predicted it would heat up inflation.

"Commend Initiative"

"We strongly commend the administration's initiative" in seeking the devaluation as well as domestic legislation to lower many existing international trade barriers, said the Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York.

Like many other banks across the country, it praised the government for taking "forthright and positive" steps to help reverse the country's massive foreign trade deficit by making American goods cheaper and more competitive abroad.

Multinational companies that have also felt some pressure from low-priced imports-automotive manufacturers, steel markets, chemical firms and textile manufacturers-stood to gain the most from the devaluation.

Monsanto Co., which makes chemicals and textile fibers, said the devaluation "will benefit companies" like it which have large export sales. An opposite view came from textile industry representatives, who said the devaluation would do little to offset the mushrooming domestic market for imported fabrics.

Congratulated Nixon

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States congratulated Nixon on consulting with the country's trading partners before the devaluation and said it "will surely be a giant first step leading to a thorough-going monetary reform."

Most analysts said the devaluation would have little impact on the average American consumer. But one area where a price hike seemed likely was in international air fares.

Pan American World Airways and Trans World Airlines, the country's two major international carriers, said they planned to maintain current prices. But Pan Am added: "We anticipate the members of the International Air Transport Association will hold a conference in the very near future to adjust air fares."

Airport Security Ordered By Friday

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Aviation Adminstration ordered airport managements Tuesday to post an armed guard at each boarding point beginning Friday.

The notification followed failure of legal moves to stave off the requirement.

The guards will replace the U.S. deputy marshals and customs officers now employed to provide assistance, as needed, to airline employes screening boarding passengers and inspecting hand luggage.

Polling Airports

The Airport Operators Council International (AOCI), which had won a court postponement of an earlier FAA deadline, said it was polling airports to find out the likely degree of compliance to the order setting the new effective date.

"The situation is very confused," said J.J. Corbett, AOCI vice president of federal affairs.

"Some airports already have complied even though no regulation was in effect.

"Boston is okay because it will be using off-duty state troopers at Logan International.

"Chicago couldn't spare any fully qualified personnel so it is using police cadets who need five more months of training.

"A lot of airports plan to use a combination of local police and customs security officers.

"Lot of Problems"

"Many of the airports have a lot of problems not yet resolved."

Initially the FAA had ordered the airports to take over the security responsibility, with locally hired guards, by Feb. 6.

In response to an AOCI petition, U.S. District Judge John Lewis Smith issued a 10-day restraining order against the FAA Feb. 5, just a few hours before the planned deadline.

By that time, however, a number of airports had already started hiring their own guards. Some airports went ahead and placed the men on duty Feb. 6, while others withdrew their job offers or delayed hirings pending the court's ruling.

Compliance Assured

The FAA reported later that by Feb. 5, complete compliance had been assured at 483 of the 504 airports then served by the airlines.

The agency reported that 287 already had complied and 196 more said they would meet the deadline.

Of the total, the FAA said, 20 airports asked for assignment of federal air security people on a reimbursable basis, and this will be done, the FAA said.

Last Friday, before Judge Smith, AOCI urged that the FAA be enjoined from enforcing the new regulation. The airport operators complained that they had been denied the statutory 90-day advance notice and hearing period.

Resource Conservation Urged

WASHINGTON (AP)—A report from researchers and businessmen says the United States must reduce its consumption of certain raw materials and help avert a global crisis in natural resources. It said the industrialized world in general and the United States in particular should begin to slow its consumption of highly depletable resources and move toward greater use of abundant materials.

It mentioned forest products, which are renewable, and said also "offshore and deep sea waters should be looked to as an abundant source of materials."

The report was issued by the National Commission on Materials Policy and is based on a series of cisscussions held last year among representatives of industry, government, universities and private research groups.

It said that U.S. resource needs are virtually certain to increase and imports would continue to rise. The developed nations, it said, are becoming increasingly dependent on the mineral reserves of developing countries.

"As projected demand curves push up against known reserves, a global crisis may occur if there is not a movement toward cooperation in the exploitation and distribution of world resources," the report said.

The experts said that any natural resources policy must include measures to equalize the incomes of those nations and individuals now classified as rich and poor.

The coming resource pinch, they suggested, would require deep changes in the market system and in manufacturing designs and methods to decrease the use of raw materials and to recycle those which are used.

Other points, summarized by the commission included:

—"The changes most required seem to come down to two: one, a substantial intervention in the market economy to provide needed public goods; and, two, a substantial shift in the distribution of income toward greater equalization."

—"The idea of a no-growth economic policy in the immediate future was rejected out of hand. Zero population growth, however, was very strongly supported. . ."

Walpole Calm, Inmates Remain Locked Up

WALPOLE, Mass. (AP)—Troubled Walpole Prison was calm Tuesday as inmates remained locked in their cells after two nights of violence.

Monday night's problems started about 5 p.m. when 300 inmates refused lockup in the maximum security sections of the prison. Authorities said some of the inmates then began to set fires.

"The inmates set fire to anything that was combustible," said Corrections Department spokesman John MacLean. "Anything that would burn."

MacLean refused on Tursday to give any estimate of the damages to the prison.

Additional corrections officers from nearby Norfolk State Prison were called in to the prison, and MacLean said the inmates were subdued by 8:15 p.m.

Approximately 100 State Police troopers in riot gear were called to the prison, but authorities said they were not sent inside.

A dispatcher at the Walpole Fire Department said five trucks were sent to the prison and that the inmates were "setting fires faster than we can put them out."

Fire trucks were not sent to the prison Sunday night when approximately 150 inmates refused lockup and set fires in the maximum security cell blocks.

On Sunday night, a force of 30 correction officers in riot gear and carrying shotguns forced the inmates back into their cells. There were no reports of injuries.

For the past month, the 580 inmates in the prison have been locked up in a shakedown that has turned up weapons, drugs and evidence of inmate-run rackets such as prostitution and gambling.

A spokesman for the correction department said the lockup might have been a factor in the two nights of violence, but he said, "We don't know what the precise incident is that triggered this."

Last week, the month-long lockup at Walpole was ended and Superintendent Raymond E. Porelle told a news conference that inmates were found to have been running a prostitution business from the prison infirmary. Prostitutes were signing in as visitors and meeting inmates in the infirmary.

He said the inmates also were found to have been running a highly profitable gambling racket based on numbered laundry tickets.

Porelle said some contraband and money had been found in the lockers of correction officers.

He said he has notified the prison staff that anyone involved in the rackets had a chance to come to him, and otherwise, "they can expect to meet me before the grand jury."

Walpole and Norfolk prisons have been the scene of violence and death for more than a year.

Several months ago law enforcement officials said organized crime figures within the prison had day-to-day control and were able to decide who should live and die.

Stabbings and shootings last year resulted in a dozen deaths at the two prisons.

O She Is As Lovely-Often

And tallness stood upon the sky like a sparkling mane

O she is as lovely—often as every day; the day following the day . . . the day of our lives, the brief day.
Within this moving room, this shadowy oftenness of days where the little hurry of our lives is said . . . O as lovely—often as the moving wing of a bird.
But ah, alas, sooner or later each of us must stand before that grim Roman Court, and be judged free of even such lies as I told about the imperishable beauty of her hair. But that time is not now, and even such lies as I told about the enduring wonder of her grace, are lies that contain within them the only truth by which a man may live in this world.
O she is as lovely-often as every day; the day following the little day . . . the day of our lives, ah, alas, the brief day.

MBTA Officials Testify Before DPU

BOSTON (AP)—Smoke from a burning subway car which left one man dead from inhalation and more than a hundred persons hospitalized was drawn by a ventilating fan in the same direction that passengers were being led to safety, officials of the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority testified before the Dept. of Public Utilities Tuesday.

Three MBTA officials were able to extinguish the blaze before firefighters arrived on the scene even though the officials were forced to run two-thirds of a mile through a train tunnel to the fire near South Station, the SPU was told at a hearing on MBTA fires.

Officials Find Cause

MBTA officials have blamed the Feb. 6 fire and two others—one last month and one in August, 1972—on breakdown of insulators in the "shoe" that rides on the third rail and collects electricity for the train.

They testified yesterday that 24 of the 92 cars with similar equipment have been put back in service following installation of newly-redesigned insulators.

Sixty-eight other cars are still awaiting installation of the new equipment and as a result service on the line has been slowed. MBTA officials said four trains on the Harvard-Ashmont and Harvard-South Shore line broke down Tuesday morning and had to be pulled out of service—leaving only 58 cars to cover routes normally served by 104.

MBTA General Manager Joseph C. Kelly testified Tuesday that a ventilating fan near South Station was drawing smoke in the direction passengers were being evacuated. Bt-asked by DPU chairman Robert L. Meade whether the fan should have been turned off Kelly said "if you turned it off, God knows what the other consequences would have been."

But he said "it might have been helpful" to have the fan turned off.

"Very Little Smoke"

Warren J. Higgins, MBTA director of operations, said there was "very little smoke" south of the train when he and two aides got to the scene. "The smoke was all going north to the South Station area," in the same direction passengers were being evacuated, said Higgins.

Higgins testified he was in his office in the MBTA operation center near South Station when the fire broke out. He was not allowed into the South Station MBTA station so he and two aides drove to the Broadway station, next stop south on the line, and the three ran back through the tunnel about two-thirds of a mile.

There, he said he saw flames leaping two to three feet from the fire site and the car's truck was red hot. The three used the train's four fire extinguishers to put out the blaze, said Higgins.

Though it was only a few hundred yards from the South Station platform, firefighters had not yet reached the site, he said.

Criticizes Reports

Both MBTA and Boston Fire Department officials, however, praised cooperation between the two agencies and criticized press reports suggesting each had sought to blame the other for problems.

Deputy Fire Chief John J. McCarthy said cooperation from the MBTA had been "tremendous."

He told the DPU, however, that as early as April, 1971, he had made suggestions to the MBTA for improvements.

He said the MBTA has now begun to mark emergency entrances into its train tunnels more clearly and is working with the fire department on finding a uniform way of letting firefighters into the tunnels through the emergency doors.

MBTA officials said that in addition to improving communications by installing two-way radios in trains, plans are underway to install standpipes in subway tunnels to provide water for firefighting operations.

Discover Emotion: A Perfect Guide for Any Situation

The human race is unaware of a powerful force of nature which, when it's recognized, reveals a personal guide for right and wrong.

Incredible as it may seem, people do not cause pain or disturbing emotion. They wouldn't even if they could. Nor do they create wonderful feelings. Emotion changes between wonderful and terrible. Disturbance occurs only with wrong situations and vanishes as correction is made. Same with pain; it cannot be eliminated without altering conditions. Feelings change instantly or gradually as situations change.

We admit most disturbances stem from wrong but not that they all do. However, conflict or an accident are examples where both sides suffer over the same wrong. So there is proof that all disturbance results from wrong. This allness makes the disturbing force of Nature a perfect, self-evident guide. Therefore, anyone can discover pain and emotion to be incapable of error.

Test the persistent diverse force of Nature affecting all life with the book, "Force Of Opposites" by Kenneth Charles. Available in hard cover at $6.00 and paperback $2.50.

Rookie Firefighter Tells Of First Lifesaving

By EARL H. DAUBENSPECK

EDITOR'S NOTE: Earl H. Daubenspeck, 27, sat down in the quiet of his Philadelphia home last Jan. 15 and wrote about his rescue that day of a little girl from a burning house. He wanted to preserve the emotions he experienced the first time he had saved a human life. His story, never intended for publication, was sent to the Philadelphia Bulletin by his wife without his knowledge. She said "it takes a special compassion...to be a fireman...and I can say I am very proud to be married to a fireman." Here is his article.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The call came in at 5:33 p.m.

As we hurried into our boots and coats, we had no idea what we were going to have to do.

When we turned onto the street from where the call came, we could see smoke coming out of the windows and filling the street.

There was a woman at the third-floor window yelling for help.

Hears Child

I was told to go inside the building and lead her to safety. Arriving at the third floor I could hear a child's cry partly muffled by the noise of another fireman breaking windows trying to get to the woman and take her down via the ladder.

I tried desperately to figure out where the cry was coming. I found myself in the thick smoke, stumbling over kitchen chairs, tables and other household furnishings in the heavily smoke-filled house.

I picked up several things I thought might be a child, but when I held them close I could see they were only a doll or a stuffed animal.

I crawled across the floor in what I hoped was the direction of the child's crying. I could hear myself yelling, "For God's sake, please don't stop crying!"

Then suddenly there she was, all curled up in a corner of one of the bedrooms between some kind of a chest and the wall.

Moves to Safety

I picked her up and held her in my arms as though she were my own little girl and thanked God that she was still alive. As I carried her to safety and she and her mother were taken away in a Rescue Squad to a hospital, I still wondered if she would be all right.

Soon after, I was back inside looking for someone else who might be trapped in the burning building. There was no one else. We put out the fire, cleaned up, and returned to our station.

Back at the firehouse, I called the Rescue Squad that took the woman and the child to the hospital and I learned that both were all right. The little girl was 2 years old and the mother was expecting another child.

"The Beautiful Feeling"

This was my very first rescue of a human life. No matter how routine my job may become, I'm sure I'll always have the beautiful feeling and sense of doing good that I have today."

Daubenspeck, a firemen two years, has a 2-year-old daughter of his own.

His wife said she opposed his decision to become a fireman, but his words "left me with an understanding about his job which I should have had from the very beginning."

Alleged 'Hitcher' Slayer Indicted In Boston

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — A Middlesex County grand jury Tuesday returned an indictment charging a Boston man with murder and kidnapping in the death of Damaris Synge Gillispie, one of eight young Boston area women found slain since last summer.

The indictment, returned after several hours of testimony, charges Anthony J. Jackson, 33, currently being held in lieu of $150,000 bail in the Billerica House of Correction.

Jackson, alias Wayne Eubank, has been in custody since last Dec. 26 after a shootout with Cambridge police. He has been previously charged with assault with a dangerous weapon, unlawfully carrying firearms, operating a motor vehicle to endanger, refusing to stop for a police officer and speeding.

Dist. Atty. John J. Droney, who presented the case to the grand jury, declined comment on the indictment. He had said previously that authorities had a "definite suspect" in at least one of the killings, and last week had said an indictment would be sought in the death of Miss Gillispie, 22.

Miss Gillispie disappeared from her Cambridge apartment last Nov. 29. Her nude, decomposed body was found in a wooded area north of Boston on Feb. 3.

Cambridge police have said on several occasions that three of the eight murders—one of them being Miss Gillispie's—appear related.

Droney replied he only had enough evidence to prosecute in the one case, but court sources said an indictment would be sought in at least one of the other seven slayings in this session of the Middlesex grand jury.

The $150,000 bond was set for Jackson when he appeared before Judge George P. Ponte in Middlesex Superior Court on Jan. 16. Ponte said he was granting the high bail because the prosecutor claimed "this man has four different residences and wears disguises, and his probation record indicates he probably will not appear."

Police investigators working together on the murders of the eight young women have said there are enough similarities to continue attempts to tie them all to one man.

Nixon To Give Noon Hour Talk On Network Radio

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon asked Tuesday for network radio time to make a noon hour broadcast Wednesday on natural resources and the environment—the subject of the next in his series of State of the Union messages.

Press secretary Ronald. L. Ziegler, in making the announcement, said the President has decided "to give radio speeches from time to time" on the messages he is sending to Capitol Hill as "part of his effort to report to the people."

The speech will be broadcast live after the conclusion of the 12 noon news programs, Ziegler said.

Hijack Pact With Cuba 'Near'

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Secretary of State William Rogers said Tuesday night an agreement with Cuba on curbing hijacking would be signed in a "few days".

Rogers, who arrived here with Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz to discuss foreign trade issues with AFL-CIO leaders, refused to give newsmen any furthr details at a brief news conference.

Earlier, President Nixon indicated that a hijacking agreement with Cuba was near and said Rogers would give further details at a later date.

In Washington, the State Department said a note received from the Havana government over the weekend "made it clear only procedural details remain to be worked out."'

Department spokesman Charles W. Bray expressed the hope that these details will be worked out over the next few days.

Cuba has been a favorite haven of terrorists who seized control of planes in the United States and forced pilots to fly there. Of late, however, there has been an apparent hardening of the Cuban attitude toward these hijackers.

President Nixon told reporters casually that some type of agreement had been reached with Cuba and he referred further disclosures to Secretary of State William P. Rogers.

However, Rogers was out of town and the State Department declined to discuss any of the substance of the agreement. Bray said the time intervening before a public announcement would be taken up by consultations with Congress as well as clearing up the final procedural details.

It was learned that one of the technical aspects still to be settled concerns the precise methods of signing documents and providing for an exchange of texts.

When asked why Congress was being consulted, Bray said it was to inform the many members who have expressed an interest in the hijacking problem. He indicated that there would be no need for Congressional approval of the accord.

Bray also referred to a Nov. 9 interview by President Nixon in which he told the Washington Star-News that a hijacking agreement was not necessarily an opening to better relations with the Fidel Castro government.

Mass. Woman Continues March

PHILADELPHIA, (AP) — The fighting is coming to an end in Vietnam, but Massachusetts woman continues to war against the bombing that is ended.

Deborah A. Peck, 21, a University of Massachusetts junior, is walking to Washington, D.C., from Springfield, Mass.

She walked into Philadelphia Monday in her jeans and hiking boots. After a day's rest she plans to head south Wednesday.

The Jan. 27 signing of a Vietnam cease fire agreement quieted what was once the antiwar movement.

Debbie had been on the road five days when the agreement was signed. She kept on walking.

"It didn't make any difference to my cause," she said. "I am walking to protest the bombing that happened at Christmas time," she said. "I am bringing my own check for $10 to give to the Bach Mai hospital fund, and I am asking others to contribute."

The North Vietnamese claim Bach Mai hospital, located next to an air base outside Hanoi, was destroyed shortly before Christmas in raids ordered by President Nixon on North Vietnam.

"Most people want to know why I'm still walking, now that the war is over," said the West Springfield, Mass., native. "It's because my government is responsible for this destruction.

"The truce doesn't erase the fact of the bombing. I am walking in the hope that it will never happen again..."

BOSTON (AP)—A group of 200 women students and faculty members took over the central communications center in the Boston State College administration building Tuesday and said they intended to hold the building until their demands were met.

Fourteen women barricaded themselves inside the building and took control of the main switchboard. The rest of the group sat outside on the steps or stood in front of the building.

A spokesman for the group, who said she would not identify herself because the takeover was a group effort, said, "The women at Boston State College are tired of being treated as second class human beings. Having exhausted the traditional channels for change, we feel it is necessary to take direct action to force recognition of our needs and fulfillment of our demands. We intend to stay here until those demands are met."

The demands included a place for a women's center; the use of 50 per cent of all athletic fees for women's athletics and an end to all salary discrepancies between male and female faculty members.

The group also wanted the school to establish a child care center for use by students, faculty members and the staff.

The spokesman said that although almost half of the 5,000 students at Boston State are women, only 12 per cent of the athletic fees go to women athletes.

She said that 14 students had barricaded themselves inside the building and were prepared to spend the night.

"We brought food," she said. "And, some of the people outside said they would bring us blankets."

She said, "The student government has met and passed a resolution supporting our action. They said they were against the administration sending in police to have us removed."

The spokesman also said the group has received a call from the Washington office of Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., supporting the action.

Head Of Secret Service Removed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of President Nixon's Secret Service bodyguard has been removed and two other top officials of the service are reported heading for retirement soon.

Robert H. Taylor, 46-year-old chief of Nixon's plain clothes bodyguard and of uniformed police at the White House, was transferred without announcement last Friday to what is generally regarded as a lesser post.

Ronald L. Ziegler, White House press secretary, repeatedly denied a report that Taylor had been fired because of continuing disagreements with H.R. Haldeman, Nixon's closest personal aide.

Taylor had been chief of White House protective details since 1967 and was popular among fellow agents.

To replace him on an acting basis, the Secret Service has assigned Richard E. Keyser, who has been with the agency for 11 years, the past 8 of them at the White House.

Jack Warner, chief Secret Service spokesman, also insisted Taylor was not fired but rather was transferred to a supervisory position in the headquarters office of Clinton J. Hill, assistant director for protective forces.

Warner did not deny reports that Taylor feels he has little choice now but to retire after nearly 23 years of service.

We Need You

In an effort to become more responsive to the community, the Collegian is soliciting more Third World and women's input into the newspaper this year. People are needed as reporters, editorial columnists, sports staffers, layout crew, and photographers. This is a community paper, and it will serve its purposes better if the perspectives of the whole community are included in its pages. We hope to see you tonight.

Collegian Recruitment Meeting Tonight

News

The news staff needs reporters to do everything from campus features to Amherst town coverage. Chances are you'll get a taste of practically every type of story. The only prerequisites are a desire to write, literacy, and the ability to ask intelligent questions.

Bill Ballou
News Editor

Photo

With the largest pre-recruitment photo staff the Collegian has ever had and the considerable numbers that have been turning out for photo recruitment in recent semesters, competition for staff positions may result.

However, anyone who feels capable and willing to make a consistent contribution is urged to come. Hopefully this competition will be healthy for the staff and make membership more rewarding.

Night Staff

Night staffs need people to count stories, write headlines, and lay out pages. No experience necessary. Night staffs work from 5 p.m. or so for as long as they want, Sunday through Thursday nights laying out the pages of the next day's edition. Plenty of openings.

Bob Scheier
Managing Editor

Poor Richard's

The Poor Richard's staff now consists of approximately fifteen people and the need for more members is at hand. If you have an interest in reviewing books, films or records, writing political commentary, feature articles or even learning page layout come to the Collegian recruitment meeting Wednesday evening. It'll take a little work on your part but if you stick with it you'll be part of the staff in no time at all.

Business

The business department would like to talk to people interested in being Advertising Representatives. The ads you bring in are by your initiative and you receive a commission for them.

Gib Fullerton
Business Manager

Sports

The Sports department needs feature writers and night layout editors. Features will be assigned from time to time and suggestions for topics are always welcome. We especially need people for layout.

The night editor designs the sports pages and decides where all the articles will be placed. People with creative ability are especially welcome.

Steve Crowe
Sports Editor

Editorial

The editorial staff needs people for laying out the editorial pages, for writing opinion columns on a weekly basis, and for assisting our regular columnists by researching important issues. No experience necessary.

We will train. Sometimes a lot of hard work- sometimes a lot of fun.

Bitter Irony

It is ironic that President Nixon should pardon Lieutenant Calley for the mass murder of My Lai civilians, and yet take a hard stand against granting amnesty to young men who refused to fight and kill, against their conscience, in an undeclared war.

President Nixon claims that draft resisters have blatantly broken the laws of the United States, and yet it is questionable as to whether the President himself has operated within the guidelines of the United States Constitution during his terms of office.

President Nixon speaks of a "generation of peace", and of "healing the wounds of the war", and of "bringing a bitterly divided country together again." Yet, unlike many of his predecessors, notably Abraham Lincoln, Nixon refuses to forgive the actions of those who, directed by a higher, moral law, would not commit themselves to an unpopular war.

Those who have chosen to fight in the Vietnam War should rightfully be honored for their courage and herosim, for these men took a stand in a cause which they believed was right. Those who have chosen to go to jail or seek refuge in another country should not be condemned for cowardice or for lack of patriotism, for they have taken a stand against a cause which they believed was wrong and immoral. These men should be granted amnesty.

A Look At Two Issues

For those of you who don't know it, the local elections are less than a week away. In fact, next Tuesday, Feb. 20, the residents of Amherst will be going to their prospective polling places from 12 noon to 8 p.m. to cast their ballots for, among other things, the office of Town Selectman.

However, this is the first local election in which students will play a significant role within the Amherst electorate and the first real chance for students at UMass to work hand in hand with the townspeople in making Amherst a better place to live. This is why the office of Town Selectman is so important and deserves a person who can coordinate all the residents of Amherst to work together for the common well-being of the community. This is why the office of Town Selectman requires a person like George B. Scheurer.

George B. Scheurer

Mr. Scheurer, a former UMass graduate and special graduate student in Public Health, is by no means new to the business of coordinating people and getting them to work together. He has been active in such organizations as the Western Mass. Public Health Association, the Citizens for Participation in Political Action, and the Western Mass. Clergy and Laity Concerned. While serving in the military, he was an undaunted chairman of the G.I.'s for Peace at Ft. Bliss, Texas, and because of this, he was transferred to Ft. Wainwright, Alaska, where he served as chairman of the United Servicemen of Alaska. Upon finishing his military service, Mr. Scheurer returned to become chairman of the UMass Veterans for Peace.

However, if these reasons alone are not enough to convince you to vote for George Scheurer, then look at the issues. In a recent campaign flyer, Mr. Scheurer states, "The town's budget for 1973 is 3,800,000--a 20% increase over last year. The present Board of Selectmen should have taken more initiative to control such an unprecedented increase. As your selectman, I will take the initiative to keep your property taxes and rents down--not by rhetoric but by action. I have joined people from Cambridge, Lowell and other communities in a suit to throw out the State Census and use the Federal Census which reflects twice the population for Amherst. This action will increase state funds given to Amherst that are linked to population. In State Lottery money alone, this will translate into roughly $165,000 annually for Amherst's budget."

Mr. Scheurer is also concerned with outside developers who are exploiting the town of Amherst and polluting the environment. He states, "The Amherst Sewage Treatment Plant was designed for a maximum flow rate of 4 million galoons per day. At the present time, the flow rate often exceeds 6 million gallons per day. Considering only the proposed Amherst Fields development, the additional flow rate would be a minimum of 400,000 gallons per day. With the present lack of Federal and State funds, it is impossible to predict when the proposed new Sewage Treatment Plant can be built, but estimates range into 1975 or later." Scheurer says, "In the future, I will do everything in my legal power to stop any housing developments which exploit our resources, market our town, or over-extend available services.

These are just two of the many issues on which George B. Scheurer is basing his campaign for Town Selectman. However, from just these two issues and his past record of activities within the community and throughout the nation, one cannot help but decide that he is the best man for the office. If you have taken the time to register to vote in Amherst, then you obviously care about the town and its future. If that is the case, then get out to the polls next Tuesday and vote for George B. Scheurer for Town Selectman.

Letters To The Editor

Blind Allegiance To The Flag

To The Editor:

The statements of David Mercier in the Collegian of February 12 show a complete misunderstanding of racism in this country. As is so common in the United States, he has viewed reactions to America's injustices with horror, while ignoring White America's injustices of privilege, repression and racism.

To demand universal allegiance to a government whose benefits are less than universally shared is absurd. Mr. Mercier failed to understand the significance of his own words in this respect. He protested that since America could supply the needs of all its citizens, then all of its citizens should salute the flag. The United States, however, does not serve the needs of all its peoples. The fact that it could, acts only to make our present racist situation all the more unbearable.

That supposedly patriotic people were appalled by people not standing during the playing of the national anthem is symbolic of their misdirected love of country. Blind allegiance is characteristic of automatons, not human beings. It is very easy for us Whites to want Third World Peoples to passively sit back and accept our White-imposed oppression. Only when we realize the omnipresence of White racism can we begin to appreciate Third World responses to it.

The Third World Community's sitting during the playing of the national anthem was not an injustice to "the patriotic people who attended the game." Rather, the flag, the national anthem, and those order-demanding patriots are a forceful reminder of the continuous injustices White America so casually heaps upon Third World Peoples.

Walter Laliberte

To The Editor:

In regard to David Mercier's letter "Injustice?". Dave said that the U.S. was the only country in the world that could guarantee equality, independence, and respect. Does this country really guarantee these rights to everyone, or are these rights restricted to certain groups of people? Does the national anthem really deserve the respect of the Third World? Dave, maybe you should imagine yourself as a member of a minority group and encounter some of the "respect" that you get.

George R. Nicholson

To The Editor:

This is written in response to, or more appropriately disgust of, David B. Mercier's INJUSTICE. Yes I detect a note of fatigue when you speak of how there is hardly a day going by when you don't hear of the Third World Community wanting equality, independence and respect. How many more times will you hear it before you realize the reality of the fact, that in this country the Third World people do not have these privileges, no not privileges, rights. You say ours is the only country that could guarantee the Third World wants. That is the key word here, "could".

The sad thing is that most whites are blind to the racism in this country and that it does not guarantee the Third World wants and needs. Of course, from your and my perspective these rights are guaranteed, because we're white. Is this what the American flag and all those so-called patriotic people at the basketball game stand for? I personally feel the injustice paid to our flag by not saluting it is far too mild when compared to the injustices the Third World suffers each day. You ask these people "deserve" my respect. They already have it!

Rob Fair

To The Editor:

I am writing in response to David B. Mercier's letter of Feb. 12 where he criticizes members of the Third World for not standing for the flag while the national anthem is being played.

I wish that misunderstanding people would stop using the media to demonstrate their utter stupidity. The United States flag stands for the promotion of Black repression by its investments in South Africa and Zimbabwe (Rhodesia). It stands for Black genocide by promoting birth control and mandatory sterilization of welfare mothers, and the countless numbers of unpunished killings of black people by police, National Guardsmen, and your average everyday white racist. It is the system of which this flag symbolizes that causes black people to be the killers of each other every Saturday night. This flag stands for the drug problem which is allowed to flourish in every black community across the nation.

As far as the black man is concerned, the flag stands for injustice, disrespect, self-hatred, racism, repression, facism and genocide. I can only find stupidity in a person who has the nerve to come over the news media and call us "unpatriotic" for refusing to stand for this flag.

Anti-Abortion: A Sexist Conspiracy

To The Editor:

"Clearly a basic assumption behind the anti-abortion position is that women who do not wish to have a child are not 'normal'; that they are veering dangerously away from the role of motherhood that a woman is supposed to assume."

This is a quote from last Friday's "Poor Richard's," (page 13). Quick reading of this passage gives the reader the idea that, 1) The anti-abortion people are more interested in dominating female persons than in protecting what they feel might be human life—that is, that anybody who opposes abortion is either a sexist or a Catholic (how absurd now); and that, 2) anti-abortion people think it not "normal" for a woman to seek motherhood. This is clearly not the case. Many women don't want motherhood, and the last thing one would see in them is abnormality.

Let's get the facts straight. Some people do not believe in abortion, and maybe most of the vocal ones are Catholic, however their premises are not based on dominating female people. Their premises are based on the idea that, 1) conception begins life, 2) human conception begins human life, and 3) therefore a human fetus is a human being and just because it happens to be sucking so-and-so's blood doesn't mean so-and-so should have the power to discontinue its life.

Face it—the argument is complicated and either the "fetus human" or the "fetus non-human" premises can be upheld because there are not many facts on the matter yet—it is a premise based on belief. Perhaps we may wait for the facts to come before committing our society one way or the other because of the fear of sexist conspiracy. Not much extensive study of the fetus in development has been done, although most seems to point to humanity over non-humanity as a general rule, (e.g. it is found that, the two year old has as much to go through to reach the competence of a four year old as an embryo must go through to become born, except in a different configuration).

However there are still complications. Yes, there are sexists, too. But the only thing "sexists" in the argument is the unfortunate fact that only female persons are biologically equipped for bearing children—this is no grounds for any person to base his sexism upon, if he does he shows his ignorance. Sexism is in the individual, for if it is a conspiracy, then being male in America today connotes being a sexist. Maybe this is true, but arguments against abortion are really based outside of this realm. But you see what you want to see . . .

Same Old Place

To The Editor:

I am a member of the Science Fiction Club. In regard to the Collegian's coverage of the opening of the Peoples' Market Monday in what you describe as "the old Science Fiction Library" and "where the Science Fiction Library used to be" I beg to inform your readers that we are still very much alive and active and though a bit cramped are still in the same spot as ever. The Peoples' Market occupies our old reading room while we have the other end of the area which is partitioned off from the market. We are still open and trying to serve the needs of the UMass community.

Thank You, Ed

To The Editor:

I want to congratulate and thank your reporter, Ed Fogarty, for the accurate and concise reporting he did on the interview with me as candidate for Selectman in the Town of Amherst. In his three-part series "Candidates Discuss Issues", 2/6, 2/7, 2/8, he demonstrated professional ability and comprehension of his assignment. This does not surprise me for when he phoned me for the interview and during the interview, he was courteous and well-prepared for the job.

Give my thanks to Ed. I hope he finds a career where his fairness and ability are appreciated. I would be glad to meet with any individual or group to further discuss the points in this series.

Fun Atmosphere

To The Editor:

In answer to the letter to the editor in yesterday's Collegian concerning the sexist and racist attitudes held by the board of editors at the Collegian, I would like to put in a few words for their defense, as well as my own.

As of the newspaper elections held in late January, there have been three women issue editors chosen among five possible positions. I was selected as assistant news editor, even though I was unfortunately of the female sex.

Having been a member of the Collegian staff for three months, I've found the atmosphere to be far from repressive; but rather open, lustful, at times tense, dedicated and fun.

All points of view concerning policy decisions are expressed freely by the editors and staff. The "subtle, very vague repressiveness" exists only for the observer in the news room who is present only to criticize rather than for the reason of accepting the paper as it is and slowly formulating change.

The disagreement over using an editorial point was merely a joke used to harass the female editor on the staff. Policy dictates that no minority groups should be openly and knowingly slighted.

Currently, the new board of editors are concerned with the task of recruiting more minorities on the staff. The recruitment meeting will be taking place tonight, and hopefully, some representatives of minority groups will be present.

Anyhow, Miss Magnell, how would you solicit minorities to be on the Collegian? If minorities don't want to become staffers and give representation of their ethnic groups for print, how do you force someone to present his viewpoint of a situation?

Editorials have appeared, and the doors are open for anyone who wishes to become a working member of the paper. If some have come to the conclusion that the Collegian is an "elitist rag", then they should do something about it.

Cindy Gonet
MDC Asst. News Editor

Two Comments

To The Editor:

Two comments. First, co-ops are fine, and I'm happy to see the new People's Market. But let's not pretend Amherst has no co-ops. There are already two thriving food co-ops: The Yellow Sun, for natural foods; The Amherst Food Co-op (formerly the Food Conspiracy) for fruits, vegetables, nuts, bread, eggs. etc.

Second, the new buses are great. Now how about having some at night? Even if there were only one bus per route, they would help people who have night classes, meetings or the library to go to.

Elisa K. Campbell

Editorial Points

HAPPY ST. VALENTINE'S DAY!!!

The Collegian got a lot of Letters to the Editor today, but so far, not one valentine. Doesn't anyone out there love us? Our hearts are broken.

Perhaps we spoke too soon. As these editorial points were being written, we got a package in the mail. We opened it up, and inside, sure enough, was a large red heart. Straight from zoology lab.

Last week, a man completed a cross-country trek. He walked all the way from Boston to San Francisco, and it took him nine months. Perhaps President Nixon should send him a letter, congratulating him for his amazing feat.

Speaking of President Nixon, (and who doesn't?) isn't it nice of him to condone the returning POWs who made propaganda statements on Hanoi radio? Nixon the Great Forgiver!

If you think the editorial points are bad, you should see some of the ones that don't get printed.

Decriminalize Marijuana

To The Editor:

There have been bills filed in the Massachusetts State Legislature to remove criminal sanctions for the possession of marijuana and its' sale in small amounts. The hearing for these bills is to take place before the Joint Legislative Social Welfare Committee on the afternoon of March 7. We need people to attend this hearing. We must demonstrate to this committee that there is wide-spread support for the passage of these bills. People who are interested in driving down to Boston or getting rides to attend the hearing please contact me at 106 Hills North, tel. 546-9265.

There are 20 members of the committee. People who are in the constituency of these legislators are needed to write letters. Letters can be very influential in determining the outcome of these bills. This list of legislators can be obtained by contacting me.

These bills are of vital interest to all of us. The laws governing marijuana usage affect our lives in a very direct manner. It's up to us to see that this legislation is passed.

Marijuana—It's time to change the laws.

Half A Cold Room

To The Editors:

The residents of 7-N Eugene Field House are deathly tired of cold nights. We are tired of icy windows, stone-cold floors, frozen plants and premature chilblains. We are tired of shivering between the sheets while gazing at small clouds of our own breath. These cold nights will soon be the end of us. We expected many things upon arriving at UMass, but cold nights certainly was not one of them.

Various gentlemen from the physical plant have tried to solve our problem, but have met with no lasting success. The very next night, it's back to shivering between the sheets as the room temperature drops to barely bearable. A recent article in the Collegian discussed the possibility of a hike in dorm rents. This angers us greatly, as we already pay an exhorbitant fee for one-half of a very cold room. Perhaps this fee doesn't cover the cost of heat for our rooms?

As has been previously stated, we are tired of cold nights. We need heat in our rooms. A frequent excuse has been that the altitude of our living quarters (top floor high on Orchard Hill) makes heating difficult. If the University cannot heat such a structure, why was it built? As for the heat, if the Physical Plant can't get it up, who can?

Cost Of CC Space

To The Editor:

In the Letters to the Editor column of the Tuesday, Feb. 13 Collegian, Barry Cohen, Student Senator, discussed the People's Market in light of the support given that group by the Campus Center and, hence, the student body.

Mr. Cohen is correct in stating that there is a real cost involved in granting space to a group for any purpose and the cost of this is borne by the students of the University. The cost of space covers the cost of maintenance plus the high cost of the Campus Center building. The Board of Governors understood when it granted space to the People's Market that it was subsidizing that organization. It undertook the subsidy in the belief that there is a tremendous opportunity for the People's Market to serve the students of the University. We are subsidizing this group to the same extend that we subsidize any student organization with offices in this building.

It gets really hard to figure out what students actually get for their Campus Center fee and nobody will ever succeed in rationalizing the fee, but we can certainly expect that part of it would go to cover costs involved in supporting worthwhile services like the student market.

Electronic Brain Control For Law Enforcement

By RUTH TEBBETS

SAN FRANCISCO (PNS/LNS) — Electronic behavior control is moving out of the province of science fiction writers. A recently published proposal by Dr. Gerald Smith and Dr. Burton Ingraham, two scientists spearheading this movement, explores the potential use of electronic technology on parolees, high risk ex-convicts, and people on bail.

This proposal (aimed, according to Smith, at "stirring up interest in the Justice Department"), advocates the use of electronics "to maintain twenty-four hour-a-day surveillance over the subject and to intervene electronically or physically to influence and control selected behavior."

Ingraham and Smith explain how their system might work: "A parolee with a past record of burglaries is tracked to a downtown shopping district and the physiological data reveals an increased respiration rate, a tension in the musculature, and an increased flow of adrenalin. It would be a safe guess, certainly, that he was up to no good.

"The computer in this case, weighing the probabilities, would come to a decision and alert the police or parole officer so that they could hasten to the scene; or, if the subject were equipped with an implanted telemeter (long-distance transmitter-receiver system) it could transmit an electrical signal which could block further action by the subject by causing him to forget or abandon his project."

The system proposed by Drs. Ingraham and Smith would work like a thermostat. A prisoner is equipped with an unremovable, electronic device implanted in his brain. It transmits basic information to a central computer. The computer analyzes the data and sends back electronic messages to "correct" the behavior of the prisoner, if it does not conform to the computer's expectations.

I. In the Laboratories

"What I propose is the adoption of a strategy for mental planning. The project of conquering the human mind could be a central theme for international cooperation," says Dr. Jose Delgado, the "father of electrophysiology"–the study of brain nerves. He explains that current brain research supports the conclusion that "motion, emotion, and behavior can be directed by electrical forces and that humans can be controlled by pushbuttons like robots."

Delgado has developed a technique, electronic stimulation of the brain (ESB) to control brain nerves. Through a simple operation, electrode shafts, very fine wires insulated with teflon and scraped bare at the tips to permit passage of current, are inserted in the brain. The ends of the wires are soldered to a small socket anchored to the skull.

By applying electric current to the electrode shafts, Delgado has been able to invoke all kinds of behavior in experiments with monkeys, cats, birds, and humans. Fear, anxiety, apathy, disorientation, loss of memory, blackout, as well as pleasure, sexual excitements, and euphoria can be induced electrically.

Delgado stresses the significance of experiments done on a monkey named Paddy in which brain patterns were effectively filtered. Each time a computer picked up electrical impulses coming from the area of Paddy's brain correlated with aggressiveness and excitement, a punishing ESB was sent to a part of the brain associated with fear and pain.

This ESB had an effect similar to slapping a child's hand each time she or he touches a forbidden object. Within two hours impulses coming from the brain's aggressive area decreased by 50%. A few days later there were practically no impulses at all. Paddy's changed behavior–less aggression, diminished appetite, and laziness–lasted two weeks.

II. Out of the Laboratories Onto the Streets

While Delgado's experimentation quietly progresses, the technological links are being forged to take brain control out of the laboratory onto the streets. Delgado and other advocates of electronic behavior control are quick to explain that prototypes for a system to control prisoners over long distances already exist.

The recently developed science of telemetry--long-distance, remote-control measurement and control of given phenomena--provides a basis for the practical implementation of Delgado's work. (Delgado, by the way, is a Yale professor of Physiology, and author of a recent book, Physical Control of the Mind). First used to study such things as migration patterns in birds, and the hibernation and spawning of animals and fish, telemetry now has been perfected to monitor human behavior as well.

Presently, telemetric control of humans is used on a volunteer basis for such cases as heart patients, alcoholics, and epileptic children.

But one-way telemetry is already being applied to law enforcement purposes. One system presently operating in two U.S. cities, the Automatic Vehicle Monitor (AVM), provides the location of "tagged" motor vehicles every five seconds with an accuracy of about one block.

In a proposal for the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, the Institute of Public Administration notes, "Another, secretive, law enforcement use of AVM would be in 'tagging' suspect vehicles, valuable shipments, etc....Future refinements may make it possible to implant a transponder (receiver-transmitter) on the subject's person, in his shoe, for instance."

The step from bugging vehicles to bugging parolees is already being seriously considered. With the end of the Vietnam war, the electronics industry is shifting its allocations from overseas defense projects to domestic research and development. There has been a marked increase in investments for expanding law enforcement technology.

Dr. Gerald Smith, a University of Utah professor, maintains that electronic control of prisoners is "the cheapest and most effective way" to remedy the chronic problems of this country's penal system, its tremendous costs and lack of success in "changing people."

Dr. Smith is confident that "by 1985 it will be used in an experimental way and by 1995 in a practical way. If we don't do it," he says, "someone else will."

Pianist Carlson To Perform

Jane Carlson, pianist, will present a program of Bach, Mozart, Chopin, Hindemith, Rachmaninoff and Ravel in an Artist Recital Series Concert tonight at 8:15 p.m. in Pratt Auditorium at Mount Holyoke College.

Miss Carlson, a Naumberg Award winner and student of Carl Friedberg and Myra Hess, has appeared in many of the leading concert halls of the United State and Europe. Her numerous performances in Europe included recitals in London, BBC broadcast recitals, and appearances in Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Brussels and Berlin.

As a concerto soloist with orchestra, Miss Carlson has performed in many cities in the United States, including New York and Chicago, and in the European countries of Holland and Sweden amongst others. Hailed as an interpreter of contemporary works, and chosen by Paul Hindemith himself to perform his works in concerts which he conducted, she at one time gave the first performance in New York of his "Four Temperaments."

A newspaper in Vevey, Switzerland, wrote of her performance of Hindemith's "Second Sonata' and "Ludis Tonalis", "The clarity and precision of the astonishingly alive and sensitive playing, which never ceased being intelligent, gave a rare intensity to the clever counterpoint of the German master. Spirituality and beautiful sonority, results of a superb, warm, velvety touch, were thus united, and without doubt gave more than one listener a comprehension much deeper of a composition which is very little known here."

Miss Carlson is presently on the faculty of the Juilliard School of Music.

Health Resources Seminar For Greeks

A Health Resource Seminar is being offered to Greeks through the cooperation of the Health Education Division of the Health Services. Its purpose is to offer a one credit program to students who would like to be a resource to their House. The course is designed to give participants the background to help their peers develop an awareness of available health services and how to use those services wisely. Also, participants will explore creative methods to promote interest in various health issues. Although some basic first aid and "home care" information will be considered, the seminar should not be considered a first aid course.

More information, including a tentative schedule of topics and course applications, can be obtained from House Presidents. This information can also be obtained by calling the Health Education office at 545-2492. These are due on February 16th.

'Action' In Africa Meeting

Professor Heinrich Fenner will give a report on his recent trip to the state of Ivory Coast in West Africa, the development of the country, the involvement of Action and its future program. The informal presentation will be illustrated by slides and followed by a discussion. Refreshments will be served.

WALTHAM--$95-MILLION BUILDING WITH PROBLEMS- Plywood patches cover blown out glass windows of New England's tallest building, the John Hancock 60-story tower in Boston. The mirrored glass windows are blown out and walls crack and shatter whenever stiff winds blow. New Cell Theater To Present 'The Madman And The Nun'

The New Cell Theater Ensemble, an experimental theater group consisting of students and residents from the Five College area, will be presenting a production of S. I. Witkiewicz's "The Madman and the Nun" tomorrow through Tuesday, Feb. 20 at Amherst College's Stone Basement Theater.

The play, translated from the Polish and adapted by the New Cell Ensemble, concerns the events at The Asylum of the Jugged Hare and the workings of the twisted minds of its inmates. The set which the ensemble has constructed puts the audience directly in the asylum with the inmates.

The New Cell Theater Ensemble has been working together since September. Its name derives from the Living Theater concept of "new cells" working as a constructive and artistic force within the greater community. Their rehearsals have placed primary emphasis upon yoga and vocal and body training. Through these exercises, the ensemble has developed a group sense for performing as a cohesive unit. The New Cell Theater Ensemble also plans to present further dramatic pieces, and to sponsor concerts and art exhibits in the area. They welcome anyone with energy to contribute in any of the fields of art. For further information concerning the New Cell Theater Ensemble, their productions and their plans, contact Christopher Torch at 542-3084.

Tickets to the productions of "The Madman and the Nun" can be obtained by contacting or visiting Amherst College's Kirby Theater Box Office between 1 p.m. and 5 p.m. or by calling 542-2277. Stone Basement Theater is located at the southeast end of the Amherst College campus, to the right off College Street. All seats are reserved, but seating is limited.

Scheurer On OH Tonight

George Scheurer, candidate for Selectman, will make his third campaign swing on campus tonight in search of votes in the Amherst town election next Tuesday, February 20th.

Tonight Scheurer will canvass door-to-door in Webster House on Orchard Hill, accompanied by Ellen Kirsh, one of his dorm campaign workers.

Scheurer intends to make at least two more appearances on campus before Election Day.

The 27-year-old special graduate student in Public Health has been campaigning hard on the issues of rent control, child care, taxes, traffic and hitchhiking problems, and ecologically-safe town growth.

Exchange With UHelsinki Open

Next fall will be the second year of the University of Massachusetts academic year exchange program with the University of Helsinki in Finland. This year only one UMass student was sent to Finland on the exchange. Next year, it is hoped that about 3 UMass students will be able to participate. The program is open to juniors and seniors, although exceptions are made for qualified sophomores.

The University of Helsinki is located at the very center of Helsinki, the capital of Finland. The University with a student population of nearly 25,000 is the largest university in Northern Europe. Its location also offers a unique opportunity to travel throughout Europe, including Russia.

The University of Helsinki includes Faculties of Theology, Law, Medicine, Philosophy, Social Sciences, and Agriculture and Forestry. The Faculty of Philosophy is divded into two parts; the Humanities and the Sciences. UMass students receive full academic credit towards their degrees for courses successfully completed at the University of Helsinki. Last year's exchange student, a sophomore in Political Science, was able to take courses in Finnish politics at the Institute of Political Science at the University of Helsinki, which offers courses conducted in English. He also took "Finnish for foreign students" while at the university.

Some knowledge of Finnish is recommended but not required. Most lectures are given in Finnish or Swedish, but many professors are willing to give exams in English as well as providing alternate English reading lists. Special courses for foreign students, taught in English, are also available.

The basic costs for a year in Finland under the exchange program are approximately the same as at the Amherst campus. The only additional cost is international air fare. A limited amount of financial aid is available towards travel costs. Students interested in applying for the exchange should contact Mrs. Burn in the International Programs Office, 239 Whitmore, as soon as possible. The deadline for applying is March 9, 1973.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Aries likes to get in the first and last word. For Aries, victory has to be complete. The warrior in Aries makes these natives competitive, often creative and most certainly inventive. The Aries person is imbued with pioneering spirit, enjoys lively discussions with Gemini, has doubts and fears about Pisces, is physically attracted to Leo, often marries Libra, travels with Sagittarius and must exercise caution with Aquarius, Cancer and Capricorn. Greater freedom, more opportunities for happiness indicated for Aries in 1973.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Home, marriage, personal environment—these are highlighted. Get going with new project. Stop feeling that others would be offended if you made abrupt change. Those who really care will understand, including mate or partner.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Spiritual qualities surface. Meditate. Forces are scattered. However, if you give yourself time, success emerges from welter of confusion. Aquarian has lesson to impart. Be receptive even if pill is bitter.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Study Taurus message. Open yourself to creative experience. Emotional responses are honed to razor sharpness. Give yourself room to create. Revere your own style. Be yourself. Hear sound of your own voice.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Recent experiences, efforts have been frustrating. But now you can apply lessons learned. You did it and get to heart of matters. What was a roadblock suddenly is transformed into open door of opportunity. Take the plunge!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are aided through unorthodox procedure. Obtain hint from Gemini message. Write, speak, communicate. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Answers are obtainable if you will but ask. Analyze—draw conclusions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Avoid mistake of mixing friendship with money. Otherwise, you might lose both—key now is to be diplomatic without being weak. Gift is on agenda. Be thankful without being maudlin. Taurus, Libra persons are featured.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Creative spark could ignite advancement, trigger event which leads to fulfillment of ambitions. Be a self starter. Mold events. Take charge. Be master of your own destiny. Stop brooding. Be decisive. You come through test with flying colors.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Financial situation improves. You work harbor but results are constructive. Relationships intensify. What appeared to be out of reach becomes available. Capricorn is involved. Behind scenes activity benefits you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You are able to reach more persons—ability to distribute, communicate is enhanced. Ideas sparkle. Be confident. Unusual procedure succeeds. Highlight versatility. Use alternatives. Relative figures prominently.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Don't overreach-protect capital. New approach could bypass roadblock. Do plenty of listening, observing. Check legal papers. Mate, partner should be included in plans, decisions. Going it alone might be interpreted as arrogance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Teach and learn. Excitement of discovery is featured. Many now are influenced by your ideas, concepts. Know it and respond accordingly. Take one step at a time. Avoid extremes. You can gain valuable allies.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Creativity abounds. You are able to put something of yourself into projects. People recognize your unique style, touch. Sagittarian is in picture. What was a money dispute is settled in your favor. You can celebrate.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are perceptive, fond of travel, possess intellectual curiosity, would make fine writer, reporter, photographer. Your horizons broaden in 1973 and August should be an outstanding month for you this year.

Co-captain Kurt Syer won the Giant Slalom at Pleasant Mt., but finished 23rd in Slalom at Attatash. (Photo by D. Ferris)

Skiers Bow to BU

By MDC STAFF

Saturday morning was bright, clear and cold at 4 degrees below zero. The giant slalom course at Pleasant Mt. in Bridgeton, Maine was hard, fast and very icy in spots. Kurt Syer, Dick McWade, Larry Peck, Tim Tague, Dave Rutter, and Dave Ferris were the sixtet chosen to ski for UMass. Bill Nebesky, Ben Ferris and Phil McKeague were skiing late in the order for fun and practice.

Kurt Syer skied first for UMass on bib 10 and had the best first run on the mountain. Dick McWade skied second for the Minutemen on bib 20 and lost a ski on impact with a bump and was out of the race. Everyone else had good, but not great, first runs. Kurt had a second run which was also the best on the mountain and was first over all with 97.6 seconds for the two runs and the first win of his career. Ken Biederman of B.U. got close with 97.8 seconds. Tim Tague had the second best performance for UMass A team - 104.1 and an 8th place finish over all. Larry Peck was next for UMass with a 106.8 and 14th place in spite of trouble in both runs. Dave Rutter had a 108.2 and 23rd place to round out the best four for UMass A team time of 416.7 seconds. It was good, but not good enough to head a "juiced up" B.U. team which had a total team time for the best four men of 413.1 secons. The UMass Ski Team was stopped for the first time this season by 3.6 seconds.

Ben Ferris and Bill Nebesky skiing "B team" for fun and practice both had a very good day. Bill skied on bib 70 and got a 106.1 to finish 11th over all. Ben skied on bib 80 and finished 6th over all with 103.3. His second run over the chopped up course was second best for UMass in spite of the deteriorated course.

For the day, the Minutemen lost to B.U., but finished ahead of B.C. which had a 419.7, Amherst which had 425.3 seconds, Northeastern which had 432.6 seconds. Other schools in the order of finish were Tufts, UConn, Princeton, Bently and AIC. The Ski Team win-loss ratio is now 44 to 1 the right way. B.U. is shaping up to be a tough one and if B.C. can figure out a way to get it all together they could also win. They finished 4th, 7th, and 9th and if they had one more good run it would have been all over.

On Sunday, Coach MacConnell decided to change his race order and ski freshmen Bill Nebesky and Ben Ferris on the A team. Both did well on their first varsity outing but too many mistakes were made by the team and UMass finished behind both BU and Northeastern. The team tried to "go for it" on the icy, sharp turning slalom course. Syer, McWade, Peck and Ferris all fell on their first runs putting UMass out of it right off the bat. The rest of it was a heroic salvage operation. Frosh Tim Tague and Bill Nebesky put two good ones together and finished 14th and 19th. Dick McWade had the best second run on the hill for the day and his two runs were good enough for 10th place. Kurt Syer powered in a very good second run and finished 23rd over all. The UMass team time for the best four men, absorbing two falls by Syer and McWade, was 391.4 a very large 20 seconds behind BU's 371.4 and four-tenths behind Northeastern's 391.0. Bob Morrow of N.U. won the race with an 86.0, BU got second and third places with runs of 88.3 and 89.0.

Washington's birthday weekend is an open weekend and the Minutemen will be at Haystack Mountain Saturday, Sunday and Monday sharpening their slalom skills for the two slaloms at Prospect Hill in Waltham on February 24th and 25th.

Minutewomen Stuffed by Springfield, 52-34

The Minutewomen basketball team was soundly trounced last Thursday at the hands of Springfield College, 52-34.

The girls started the game well and led at the end of the first quarter, 13-10. But due to a poor second quarter (UMass was outscored 14-7), the Minutewomen trailed by four at the half, 24-20.

It was during the third quarter that the girls fell apart. "They completely lost their poise," said Coach Jane Farr.

However, it was more than just the third quarter that hurt the Minutewomen, as no one on the team was having a good game. UMass shot only 27% from the floor, while Springfield hit for 38%. UMass had 31 rebounds to Springfield's 42 and turned the ball over 17 times.

Jen Edminster was the only Minutewoman who stood out in the final statistics. She had 16 points and pulled down 9 rebonds.

In the preliminary match, the UMass JV's fell to the Springfield subvarsity five. The teams started out evenly and were tied at 5-5 at the end of the first quarter. But the second and third quarters did their toll as Springfield rolled ahead, leading 23-11 at halftime and 36-20 after three.

Ann Foley was again high scorer with 15 points and 13 rebounds. Co-captain Sue McNamara followed with 8 points and Mary Dowling had 9 rebounds.

This Thursday, the Minutewomen play host to UNH. Coach Jane Farr expects a tough game because of UNH's height. They have a 6'2" center; UMass starts 5'7" Pat Glispin in that position. The efforts of the UMass team may be further hampered by the absence of Co-captain Beth Fay due to injury. The ankle injury sustained in practice last week may keep her out of Thursday's game.

Bruins Extend Streak

BOSTON—Veteran Johnny Bucyk and rookie Gregg Sheppard scored two goals each Tuesday night as the Boston Bruins extended their National Hockey League winning streak to four games in a 7-3 victory over the Vancouver Canucks.

The Bruins spotted Vancouver a 1-0 lead on a goal by Gerry O'Flaherty midway through the opening period and then struck back to go in front 4-1 by the end of the session.

Sheppard tied the score with his 16th goal at 13:43; and Bucyk connected on a power play for his 28th to put the Bruins in front to stay at 16:18.

Don Marcotte and Bucyk added two more goals before the period ended.

Vancouver's Richard Lemieux tipped in a screen shot on a power play for the only goal of the second period.

Icy Ruts Give Women Skiers 5th

Competing in their first slalom race of the WISC League, the UMass Women's Ski Team finished in fifth place. The competition was stiffer than usual with Middlebury College added to the line-up.

The UMass girls were on top after their first run, but had some difficulty on their second, which set them back to fifth place.

Radcliffe placed 1st, followed by Wellesley, Merrimack, Mount Holyoke, Middlebury, and UNH.

Shelly Wilcox placed 3rd for the day for UMass with teammates Heather MacConnell (5th) and Isabelle Yingling (13th) also finishing in the top twenty out of a total of 55 girls.

On Sunday, the girls competed in the Giant Slalom. Again, the girls had fantastic first runs, but trouble on their second due to the icy ruts. Middlebury College took 1st place followed by Radcliffe, UMass and UNH (tied for third), Wellesley, Merrimack, and Mount Holyoke. Heather MacConnell finished 5th individually and Cindy Rosati 9th.

Next weekend the girls will be back at their training grounds, Haystack Mt. in Vermont.

Minutemen Bomb Terriers, 85-65

By EARLE BARROLL

UMass unleashed its esprit de corps, both on the court and in the stands, last night and engulfed Boston University's multi two-man attack with enough of what they either didn't want to see or never heard of in soundly whipping the Terriers, 85-65.

It could have been St. John's or St. Joseph's or yes, even Providence College for that matter. The Cage is fast becoming its old self once again. The count last night was 3200, but it was concentrated where it counts, in the lower stands.

Coming off their resounding tatooing of UConn, the Minutemen were a bit on the sluggish side. Leaman admitted after the game, "We weren't sharp. It's awful hard coming back emotionally after a game like UConn.

"But we played hard enough to win. And that's good enough. Like running their win skein to six, their overall record to 13-6, their Conference slate to 6-2, B.U. to 12-8 and 4-3 in the league and fostering an added impetus for their late season surge to the N.I.T.

B.U. had all sorts of problems. First the Terriers were without the services of their best all-around player, Ken Boyd who had 35 at the Cage last year. Then there was the added problem of what B.U. was trying to accomplish themselves. One theory centers around "the hard top" version of basketball, most easily distinguished by two players scoring 19 points (James Garvin and Kerry Walker) while only one other (Glenn Goodier) managed as much as ten (six in the waning moments).

Someone (A.K.A. Al Garber) called B.U.'s version of defense "the 20-pointer". And someone else (A.K.A. Jack Leaman) praised "the zone" in unravelling the Terriers. Whatever it was it coupled itself with a few guys named Al Skinner, Charlie Peters, Rick Pitino, Bill Endicott and Tom Austin in dismantling the Commonwealth Ave. two.

Skinner actually broke the game open two minutes into the second half when he put on a virtuoso unanswered ten point solo escalating what was a 46-38 UMass spread to a 56-38 bulge, resulting in garbage time and the insensitive to get everyone on the bench into the scoring column. Earlier in the game the 6'4 junior electrified the Cage with a "steal and a deal" or a three-pointer off the full court trap, that incidentally produced UMass' first half cushion, 44-34, five buckets worth.

Peters ("He's getting balls off the floor 5'9 guys should be getting"—Leaman) between less than pleasantries with B.U.'s Garvin (who did a few things with the basketball that can be termed "inhuman") grabbed ten rebounds mainly of the offensive variety with elbow defying bulwark moves, skin shaving dives and a peek-aboo style that fended off would-be jabs, hooks, etc.

Pitino (floormanship and sneaky steals), Endicott (bombs and impregnable defiance) and Austin (lean and now mean) destroyed B.U.'s version of countering a full court trap en masse. On one occasion Pitino swiped a dribble blindside and sent Skinner in all alone with a jam (no, not really, but darn that rule). And yet, another time Endicott took a sneering Vic Gathers right to the bucket with a steal after Gathers had apparently dealt out a dosage of his own on Endicott down his own end.

After the Minutemen followed Skinner's lead and pounced on the Terriers with John Murphy's aerial show getting the lead as high as 21 (65-44) and again at 67-46 (Tom McLaughlin 30-footer) either UMass or B.U. decided to keep the partisans a little longer than it appeared at the time.

B.U. outscored the Minutemen 11-4 cutting the lead to 71-59, but eight straight (six by McLaughlin, two by Peters) within a minute set the stage for Chuck Olsen's bid for a deuce that was thwarted by two "round-the-rim-and-out" jobs.

Rick Pitino drives toward the hoop in last night's conquer of Boston University. The Minutemen were again up to true form, blowing the Terriers off the court with their pressing defense and their red hot shooting. (MDC photo by Gib Fullerton)

Gymnasts Whip M.I.T.

By MDC STAFF

Basketball or gymnastics? That was the question last night for UMass sports fans. While students braved the cold at the Cage, a powerful junior varsity squad overwhelmed a weak MIT team, 135 to 115. Not only did it give the JV's a chance to show their "stuff", it also gave an injured and tired varsity team members a much needed rest.

The Minutemen swept five of the six events while placing first, second, and third in the all-around. Strong performances were turned in by Steve Scuderi and Phil Aubrey on floor. Roy Johnson and Brian Hassig tied for the side horse honors.

Rings showed future promise with strong routines from freshman Bruce Mawhinney and sophomore Bill Brouillet. Sophomore vaulters placed one-two-three with Jack Fabricante placing first and Roy Johnson and Brouillet tying for second. Rich Seikunas and Brouillet tied for the top spot on parallel bars. Bill Brouillet was also the all around winner for the evening, which was clinched after his first place high bar routine. Seikunas and Aubrey placed second and third respectively.

An all important Navy meet will take place this Saturday at Annapolis. A fine showing this past Tuesday proves that UMass has yet to reach its high potential. To see the UMass varsity at its best, come to the Cage next Wednesday night at 8:00 p.m. to see the Minutemen take on Springfield College.

Wrestlers Host UNH

By JOHN BOCK

With the exception of hockey the University of New Hampshire can't exactly be termed a threat to any athletic team from UMass.

With that thought in mind and the fact that UNH finished last in the Yan Con this past Saturday at URI with a grand total of 5 points (they had one point going into the finals of the consolations when UMass had 66) Coach Homer Barr has decided to move the whole team up a weight class for this evening's last home match.

Moving everyone up a weight class will give the varsity a chance to gain a little strength for the upcoming weekend triangular at Wilkes College with the third ranked Small College Colonels and the Cadets from West Point. It is also giving guys like Carl Dambman a chance to make weight. Carl will wrestle the rest of the season at 190, after this evening at heavyweight, and is just over two hundred now and stands a good chance of making it.

This will be the last time the university community will see the Minutemen until next weekend when they are the host team for the New England University Wrestling Association's Qualifying Tournament.

Tonight will also be the last dual match at home for Senior Captains Dave Amato and Carl Dambman and as such they will be recognized. Amato is 11-2 on the season and Dambman is 6-2. Dave has been twice NEIWA Runnerup at 118 and was the YanCon Champ this year at 118. Carl is the defending NEIWA Champ (winning it the last two years) and had a ninth place finish at the Nationals last year.

The shuffled lineup looks like this: 118 Steve Ruggeri, 126 Dave Amato, 134 Larry Reynolds, 142 Mike McGlaughlin, 150 Steve Rome, 158 Cliff Blom, 167 Chris Cadwallader, 177 Doug Rumpf, 190 Bill Rich, Heavyweight Carl Dambman.

There are no JV matches scheduled so the Varsity will get under way at 8:00 P.M. in Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

J.V.'s Win Thriller

By MDC STAFF

For most of the season the Junior Varsity story has been told by two individuals—Greg Duarte and Mike Stokes. But last night 6'9" Tom Ryan got into the act and it's a good thing he did.

Ryan saved the best of the prelim for the final 8 seconds last night as he calmly slipped in a soft jumper from the right side giving the Yearlings a trying 85-83 verdict over Boston University's preview of the late show.

Stokes and Duarte contributed their usual on offense with 27 and 26 respectively, but it was Ryan who happened to steal the cigar. After Stokes barely missed a free throw on a one and one opportunity with 10 seconds to play, the little Terriers lost control of the rebound under the boards, setting the stage for Mr. Ryan.

But it was ironic that Ryan would be the hero. With everyone expecting Stokes and Duarte to do wonders next year for an already stacked varsity, you'd kind of think that the good Lord would summon either Stokes or Duarte to come through under pressure, but no deal . . .

Last night Greg held the matchbook, Mike struck the match, and Mr. Ryan smoked the cigar . . .

Ali vs. Bugner Tonight

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Muhammad Ali and England's Joe Bugner easily passed their pre-fight physicals Tuesday for Wednesday night's 12-round fight at the Convention Center.

Dr. Donald Romeo pronounced both in great shape and said Bugner appeared a little more excited than the former heavyweight champion.

Ali's blood pressure was 118 over 70 and the European heavyweight champion's 128 over 80.

A controversy over gloves was settled with a set made in Mexico approved by the managers of each fighter.

Also apparently settled was a taxation problem with Bugner to pay 30 per cent of the purse he collects in the United States. A spokesman for the Internal Revenue Service said the money from closed circuit television in Europe would not be affected.

Bugner reportedly will be paid $40,000 in the United States and get a total of $125,000, counting foreign closed circuit television.

Ali collects $275,000 for his efforts and rates at 8-1 or more to turn back the 22-year-old Hungarian-born Englishman who holds the European heavyweight title.

Gold Gets Yahoo Publication Rights

By STEPHEN FINE

After rescinding the 1974 budget rationale of the humor magazine "Yahoo" and approving the publication of one more issue for the fiscal year of 1973, the Student Senate recommended the Board of Trustees transfer its publishing rights to James E. Gold, former Editor-in-Chief of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

In other business the Senate voted to have a campus-wide referendum for the students to decide how the Student Government Association President should be elected. The proposals which would appear on a ballot include a general election, an electoral college system, and the present system where the Senate elects the President. In addition, the Rugby Club was promised a second hearing on their defeated rationale if the Athletic Council should reject sponsorship of the club.

The real winner of the night, however, seemed to be both Jim Gold and "Yahoo".

Profits Split

The agreement entails Gold buying the rights for one dollar and split 50% of the profit the magazine should make in the first three years of publication with the Senate.

The action, which is still pending, has to still be approved by the Trustees, also specifies that the Student Senate agree not to publish anything using the title "Yahoo" and "not to fund any humor magazine for the academic year of 1973-74.

Gold, who is in his fourth year at the University, said that he wanted to publish the magazine mainly to gain more publishing experience.

The first action of the night on "Yahoo" came when a motion was made to strike the previously approved rationale of the fiscal year of 1974.

Senator Estelle Michelson, who is a member of the Senate's Budget Committee, said that the magazine's rationale was reconsidered and defeated after the first issue came out.

"Renaissance"

Yahoo's editor, Sue Chamberlain, speaking before the Senate said she had tried to create a new "Yahoo", but this could not be achieved in one issue.

"Give it time," she said. "The magazine is in a Renaissance and has the momentum to build up a good reputation."

In response, Senator Skip Casper, the Senate's new Communications Director, said that he was tired of "Yahoo" and a new magazine was in order. To this Senator Michelson agreed, stating that "Yahoo" was filled with sexism and pornography.

Rationale Defeated

When the vote came, the rationale was struck down 26-8.

A second motion then arose to strike the monies from "Yahoo's" 1973 budget. This was defeated under the reasoning that material had already been prepared for the next issue.

The referendum to decide how the S.G.A. President should be voted in received wide support throughout the chamber.

Senator Nick Apostola saw the vote outcome as giving students wider participation in student government. Apostola pointed out that presently the elections now are held in the closed atmosphere of the Senate.

Senator Casper said he favored the measure because he believed it was too long that the students have been removed from campus government.

Three Questions

When the referendum is presented to the students, it will include three questions to choose from.

The first choice would be to have a general election throughout the campus for the post.

The second question would entail an electoral college system where the 5 area governments are. The Greek council, and the Senate were apportioned a certain number of electoral votes.

As the approved motion for referendum stands now the area governments and Greek Council would receive 6 electoral votes apiece, with the Senate having a total of 48 electoral votes.

Nomination Procedures

The president would be nominated in the same manner prescribed under the S.G.A. Election Rules Act, and would be elected only by receiving a majority of the 96 electoral votes.

In the event that no candidate receives a majority of the 96 votes, the two candidates receiving the largest number of votes shall be the final two candidates. There then would be another election in which those two candidates were eligible to run.

The date for the referendum would be set by the Government Affairs Committee.

Budget Defeated

In defeating the rationale of the Rugby Club, the Senate assured the group that if the Athletic Council defeated their request for funds, they would reconsider their rationale in two weeks.

Robert Chiller, Senate Treasurer, said the purpose of this move was to make the Athletic Council more responsive to the needs of students.

A resolution passed by the body stated in effect: "Whereas the Senate believes that an Athletic appropriations should come from the Athletic Trust Fund, be it resolved that the Senate direct the Athletic Council fund the Rugby Club, and members report back to students in wo weeks, as to the Athletic Council to fund small sports."

In Further Business, the Senate:

—Granted the People's Co-op Market the right to show a negative balance in their funds.

—Expressed support to stop the deportation of Babak Zaharaie and Siamak Zhraie, two Iranian students who were asked to leave the country by the Immigration and Naturalization Department.

—Approved the rationales of WTOY, the student videotape group, Ahora, a group organized to serve Spanish speaking students; International Programs Office a group which helps bring Americans and Foreign Students in contact with each other.

Alleged Rapist Charged

A 25-year-old laborer from Orange has been accused of the recent rape of one UMass coed and the attempted rape of another, in an arrest Amherst police say accounts for all alleged rapes reported in Amherst this year.

Bail was set at $10,000 Wednesday morning in Hampshire County District Court for Walrey Warren Wirth Jr., who pleaded innocent of four charges and was remanded to the Hampshire County House of Correction in lieu of $5,000 bail on each of two charges.

The alleged assault and battery offenses and the alleged rapes reportedly occurred in the Puffton Village area. Wirth was apprehended Tuesday night by Amherst police as he was operating a motor vehicle on North Pleasant St.

Rapes Charged

Bail was set on complaints Wirth raped one of the UMass students January 29 and attacked her with a knife, and was alleged to have attempted to rape the other February 4, and to have attacked that student with a knife.

District Court Prosecutor Donald Dunphy asked presiding Justice Luke F. Ryan to set bail at $20,000 because "these are serious charges."

Atty. Norman T. Callahan of Greenfield represented the defendant and argued for a $3,000 bail, saying Wirth lives with his parents and is in the process of obtaining a divorce.

A meeting dealing with the recent rapes, as well as other problems in the Puffton Village area such as the dangers of hitch-hiking by students to and from class, has been called for Sunday, February 18 at 7:30 in the North Congregation Church in North Amherst.

The meeting has been called by the Precinct 7 committee and the Everywoman's Center. Committee member John Adams said that although the Amherst selectmen have recommended police patrols in the area be increased he felt there was the need for grass-roots organization.

The group also plans to discuss the role of the management of apartment complexes in the area in community problems, and the possibility of better lighting and construction materials in the areas to prevent breaking and entering and assaults.

The management of the complexes are invited to attend.

Food Theft Indictments

Two UMass employes have been given seven days to file special pleas following their indictment Tuesday on charges of stealing food.

The two, Patrolman Thomas F. Quinlan, of Hadley and Raymond M. Grabiec of Northampton have been released on personal recognizance following their indictments in Hampshire County Superior Court in Northampton. Both pleaded innocent to larceny charges.

Quinlan was a member of the UMass Dept. of Public Safety, and Grabiec was head cook at Worcester Dining Commons.

Secret Indictments

The secret indictments returned by the Hampden County Grand Jury charged the pair with taking property from the "Boarding Hall Trust Fund" at UMass. The complaint contained no description of the amount alleged to have been taken.

University officials had estimated the amount of food taken at between 20 pounds of meat and cheese products, to as much as 200 pounds of steaks.

The two had been asked to resign December 15 by their departments following a probe conducted after a December 9 food check which indicated food losses in Worcester Commons.

An earlier investigation had followed a series of articles in the Collegian about possible food theft from the commons.

Ozawa Named BSO Music Director

By JOHN J. MULLINS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)—With high praise for Boston and its Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, who will be the orchestra's music director next year, yesterday announced plans for that year and later.

"Boston to me has always been the must musical background city of North America," Ozawa told a news conference at Symphony Hall.

He said he thought the city and the orchestra had a "great tradition" in classical music. Ozawa, who also is music director of the San Francisco Symphony and has a contract there until 1976, is music adviser for the Boston Symphony this season.

But, this is the only week he will spend in Boston during the 1972-73 season, and an orchestra official said it would include Ozawa conducting five concerts and five rehearsals as well as making a recording.

Ozawa said he would spend 12 weeks with the Boston Symphony in Boston and on tour during the 1973-74 season plus the summer concert series at Tanglewood in the Berkshires. Ozawa said principal guest conductors next season, as this season, will be Michael Tilson Thomas, the young late 20s conductor whose career has been with the Boston Symphony, and Colin Davis of England, conductor of Covent Garden Opera.

Ozawa said he did not know whether they would continue in that capacity after next season, and that he would have to know "more about the Boston Symphony itself" before he could say.

Guest conductors next season will be: Carlo Maria Giulini of the Chicago Symphony, Okko Kamu of Finland, Rafael Kubelik of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York, and William Steinberg, who was music director of the Boston Symphony from 1969 until last fall and who is conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra.

Next season will be a "big Schonberg year," Ozawa said, noting that it will be the 100th anniversary of that composer. Another to be performed during the season is a newly discovered violin concerto by Paganini.

Ozawa, 37, said he has much interest in works by Berlioz and Haydn and they would be included in long range plans. He said he also wants to include, at the rate of one or two a year, works by Mahler and Bruckner.

Asked why he had chosen to come to Boston at this time, there was a long pause before he said, "I never thought about that one."

He then said that when the position was offered to him, "I really thought about it for two months, every day and night." He said the decision "was really deciding my life, too," and it was a "very strong decision" when made.

He said it couldn't be said that he had chosen Boston because no other orchestra was offering him a position at the time.

Asked if he planned any changes, he said that his being new in Boston was a change in itself both for him and the orchestra members.

Tenure Controversy Continues At Smith

By BILL DENSMORE and ALICE SUNSHINE

A student at Smith College claims college president Thomas C. Mendenhall called a petition signed by one-third of the school's undergraduates which called for more student participation in the tenure granting process "foolish".

The office of the President said yesterday that he would be unable to respond to the comment until tomorrow, when a statement will be issued from the College's public relations office.

Patricia V. Linton, 18, a sophomore at Smith from Long Island said yesterday that when she presented Mendenhall with the petition on Tuesday, he said, "I don't recognize demands like these."

The petition read as follows:

"We the undersigned demand that the Committee on Tenure and Promotions halt and postpone all department recommendations concerning tenure until:

1. The ad hoc committee reviewing tenure makes its report.
2. Negotiations concerning student appointment to committees discussing tenure have begun."

Linton, who represents a campus organization called the Smith Political Action Committee says that, in her words, Mendenhall "finds that students should not have a say in the (tenure) decision making process, and they should remain having a say in course evaluations such as we have now."

"He does not believe that student input is suitable for a tenure decision," Linton said yesterday, claiming that Mendenhall "does not believe the perspective of the student is open enough."

President Mendenhall, interviewed yesterday by a reporter for the Smith student newspaper, THE SOPHIAN, said "the whole question of student representation on the Committee on Tenure and Promotion was gone into great lengths two or three years ago by the Committee on Governance which had three or four student undergraduates."

And Mendenhall added that the committee had "reviewed the whole matter and decided that, no, students should not be on the (tenure) committee."

Students at the college presently fill out evaluation forms at the end of each semester which are then forwarded to departments and evaluated. It is not known how much bearing these reports have on tenure decisions.

Students at the prestigious all-women's college are reacting to the denial of tenure for four junior faculty members--two of them because of alleged "sex bias" at the College.

The college has formally denied any discrimination, according to Olaf Larsen, who is representing Smith at a series of Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination (MCAD) hearings. A public hearing had been scheduled for this morning on the College campus but it was cancelled for unknown reasons.

Mary C. Schroeder, 32, and Maurianne Adams, 34, both English professors, filed complaints with the MCAD in April 1972 after receiving notice from the school that their tenure had been denied.

The English department at Smith employs 13 tenured professors, nine of whom are men. Of the four women, three teach part-time.

In another case, Associate Economics Prof. Charles M. Sackrey, and Asst. Economics Prof. Mark Aldrich have been denied tenure by the college allegedly because they are not committed to the principles of orthodox economics.

Both are members of the Union of Radical Political Economists, a splinter group from the American Association of Economics Professors. Sackrey is a friend of Harvard economics professor Samuel S. Bowles, who is now being considred for a tenured position on the University of Massachusetts economics faculty.

Student concern focuses on a system which will only allow the granting of tenure to a fraction of the 70 junior professors eligible in the next 7 years. Many students fear that top-notch faculty will be discouraged from accepting appointment at Smith because they will almost surely not receive tenure after five years. Others fear that faculty who are willing to accept the small chance of getting tenured will as a consequence work so on publishing that they will not have time to teach adequately.

Teaching evaluations filled out by students at Smith have little or no value according to Sackrey, who has received consistently favorable evaluations.

In a letter to Sackrey during January announcing his denial of tenure, members of the economics faculty said that they had "serious doubts as to your long-run commitment to Smith College as a valuable educational institution", citing his failure to do faculty committee work or attend faculty debates.

The letter said that "we respect your concern for our present student population, and we note their positive response to that concern," but they said that student evaluations indicated that Sackrey relied too heavily on "persona" rather than enthusiastic presentation of the material.

"We would be grateful," the letter said, "if having concluded your course, your students found economic analysis as interesting and exciting as they find you."

The letter concluded by saying that Sackrey's teaching was "within an acceptable range of competence," but that his "negative attitude toward economic analysis", scholarly work on the "periphery" of a definition of economics, and "laissez-faire attitude towards organization within the department" combined to provide sufficient reasons for denial of tenure.

Both student and faculty sources at the College indicate that Sackrey is not well liked among senior colleagues because of his style of life and non-traditional economic analysis. And Sackrey himself feels that his making student participation in tenure decisions a public issue has caused some faculty to claim he is waging a personal vendetta.

"Maybe I'm just paranoid," says Sackrey, "Smith College will either sink slowly into the background or it will change itself."

ROTC Making Bid To Remain With Credit

Editor's Note: The following article is the first of a two-part series on the current status of the ROTC Program.

By DON BISHOP

The ROTC program, stripped of academic credit last spring by the UMass Board of Trustees, is currently making a strong bid to have this credit restored, thereby allowing the program to remain on campus.

In one week, the Faculty Senate will vote on a resolution to "recommend that ROTC remain on campus", while also restoring academic credit to courses taught by the Division of Military and Air Science.

The outcome of the Faculty Senate's vote will be passed along to the Office of the Provost and that of the Chancellor who will recommend their feelings on ROTC credit to the Board of Trustees, with whom the final decision on the regranting of academic credit lies.

The motion to be considred by the full Faculty Senate has come from the Academic Matters Committee of that body. This committee itself adopted the resolution by a vote of 12-0 on December 7th of last year.

Credit Recommended

Earlier in that meeting they had been presented with a report from the Military Affairs Sub-Committee of Academic Matters, which recommended to the parent committee that academic credit be regranted or else the Military Affairs Sub-Committee be abolished.

After some discussion, the Academic Matters Committee, which contains three student members from the Student Senate, adopted the resolution to restore academic credit.

In an interview yesterday, Dr. Ernest Buck, Chairman of the Committee, stated that when the Faculty Senate voted to cancel credit for ROTC courses, neither the Academic Matters Committee nor the Sub-Committee on Military Affairs were consulted beforehand.

Buck saw this as a matter of concern, with the possibility of establishing a precedent for the arbitrary removal of credit from other academic programs.

"Emotional" Action?

Buck felt that the Senate had acted "emotionally" last year when they took up the issue of ROTC. The entire issue had come into focus as a result of the student strike of last April.

The history of the academic credit debate for the ROTC program goes back to 1969, when the Faculty Senate originally voted to remove credit. The Board of Trustees changed the Senate's recommendation, directing that the Division of Military and Air Science modify its courses to permit participation by regular UMass faculty, in order to retain credit.

These modifications were made by the Division and approved by the Military Affairs Sub-Committee, from where they were sent to the Provost's office.

The modification proposals were in the Provost's Office at the time the Senate voted to suspend its rules and reconsider the 1969 proposal for the removal of credit.

Administration Agrees

Within two weeks of the Senate's action on the matter, concurrence was received from the Administration and the Trustees.

Buck stated that both he and the committee members were impressed with the changes and the modifications made over the last two years in the program, including changes in the Division of Military and Air Science's faculty.

In debate at the December 7th meeting, a number of committee members expressed their views as to why they felt the ROTC program should be continued with credit at UMass.

This included the arguement that having ROTC on campus subjects the future officer to the liberalizing atmosphere of a college campus.

The point was also made that the program as presently reviewed by the subcommittee is more carefully screened than various colloquia programs which are given credit.

No Comment

Colonel Paul Fisher, head of the Division of Military and Air Science and Professor of Air Science would not forecast on what he feels are the chances for a "successful" reconsideration of the credit issue.

Neither would he say whether both the Military and Air programs would definitely be cancelled by the government although the Air Force has not renewed its contract with the University because of the current loss of credit and the Air Program is presently not enrolling Freshmen or Sophomores.

In anticipation of the reconsideration by the Faculty Senate, the Division has prepared a 21-page pamphlet providing factual information on the ROTC program here, which has been distributed to all Faculty Senators, and is available upon request to other members of the university community.

Fisher stated that he had seen over half the Senate members personally since November.

110 Enrolled

Currently there are 110 students enrolled in the Military Program and 28 in the Air. Fisher said that there had been some drop in enrollment over this current year, reflecting what he called the "penalty" imposed on those who want to take the courses without receiving credit.

If credit is restored, Fisher feels that there will be noticeable increase in the AFROTC enrollment.

Student Senate Cuts Red Tape

By BARBARA VOORHEES

Are you hassled by registration? Tired of standing in line and running from office to office with administrative problems?

The Student Affairs Blue Ribbon Committee on Red Tape headed by Assistant Dean of Students Robert N. Brooks, is here to help you.

The committee, which is made up of a number of administrators, was formed several years ago under the direction of former Vice Chancellor Bromery in order to simplify and remedy procedural barriers which confront students and to investigate rules which have little validity.

Brooks said that the committee has discovered a number of problems and solved them but that it has a great need of student feedback.

"If we as administrators could find a number of rules and procedures which were invalid and unnecessary, students must be aware of hundreds of them," said Brooks.

"Students have come to accept things they shouldn't. They've given up or given in because they don't have the time to work out the problems," Brooks said.

Brooks expressed the hope that his office can become a central resource agency and a clearinghouse for student problems.

Brooks said that a student can come to his office with any problem.

"I will assume the responsibility of keeping up to date on who does what at the University. If I can't help a student with his problem I can refer him to someone who can. A student won't have to go from office to office."

Among past accomplishments, the committee lists the new registration and add-drop procedures and the new procedure of withdrawal from the University, which formerly required eight signatures and now requires only three.

Brooks said that the committee is now looking into easier ways of cashing checks and into easier access to departmental library material. Departmental libraries are now closed during certain hours.

The Student Affairs Office is located in 229 Whitmore.

Three Quintuplets Taken Home

By C.G. McDANIEL
Associated Press Writer

NORTHBROOK, Ill. (AP) — "I'm sure our household will be very wild and a lot of fun," Mrs. James Baer said as she and her husband took three of their month-old quintuplets home from the hospital yesterday.

The two smallest babies remained in Evanston Hospital on Chicago's North Shore where the five babies were taken soon after their birth Jan. 5 at Highland Park Hospital, 15 miles away.

"I don't feel like a celebrity," Mrs. Baer told a news conference at the hospital. "I feel like a special person that has a beautiful family."

Mrs. Baer, 26, had taken a fertility drug. She said she had expected more than one baby--but not five.

The infants who were taken home are Douglas, 5 pounds, 6 ounces; Leslie, 5 pounds, 3 ounces, and Vicki, 4 pounds, 13 ounces.

Thomas, 4 pounds, 3 ounces, and Elizabeth, 3 pounds, 1-1/2 ounces, will remain in the hospital until they gain more weight. The hospital said Thomas may be able to go home in a week or 10 days; Elizabeth, in three or four weeks.

The Baers have said they will not allow their children to be involved in any commercial enterprises and have guarded the family's privacy with great care.

Baer said special security precautions have been taken for the babies' safety at home, but he did not elaborate. Baer said he and his wife have received many letters, almost all of them warm and generous, but it is "always possible we will become the target of a demented individual."

The 30-year-old stockbroker said Wednesday's news conference was the last time he and his wife would meet with the news media.

Previously, they had spoken with reporters only at news conferences arranged by the hospital and through a hospital spokesman.

"We want the children to be brought up as normal as possible," Mrs. Baer said.

Jews and Racism Discussed

By ANNE COLTINGTON

"We have to continue to care as a people--about everybody--not as suckers or as a scapegoat--but we must continue to care." This was the feeling conveyed by Mr. Noah Hasachar, an undergraduate at the University of Massachusetts, last night in a lecture entitled "Jews and Racism".

Speaking before a small audience in the Student Union, Mr. Hashachar, a Jewish black, explained that "racism is nothing new to Jews...they've often been the object of racism, sometimes referred to as anti-Semitism."

He said that although the Jew has been persecuted for many reasons and for many centuries, "the outside pressure is now more relaxes...He is more like everyone else...In America, the handwriting is on the wall for the Jew." Hashachar remarked that he himself is "on both sides of the fence", since he sympathizes with both minorities: blacks and Jews.

The Jew, according to Hashachar, is "making his mark". He finds out "he's not a liberal, since his is a base of operation that is definitely not liberal." He should be recognized, however, as being "closest to the plight of unfortunate people" since it is "mainly Jews who are caught up in opinions"--or envisioned as being "less".

Referring to The Jew in American Politics and The Jewish Mystique, Hashachar also scorned myths such as the classic "Jewish mother" or the community that produces "Jewish doctors". He said, "We know what it's like not to be cared about...we've been around so long...the Jewish race defies everything in history and in evolution."

On the issue of racism, Hashachar considers this problem to now be the "main front". He said, "In terms of the world, it looks pretty bad. I hate to see the Jew caught up in it."

A discussion period followed. When asked about his personal social difficulties, Hashachar said, "I get flack from blacks like you whites get it from whites (as Jews)...because I'm different, my values are different...they're in conflict with the Third World Alliance, because that means I'm against myself."

Hashachar also feels that "Jews are in a better position to help blacks (as a minority) than, say, Catholics or Protestants," because they can "feel and understand what they're saying, what they're going through." He said that, in such a case, sympathy does have power: "the power to help".

Hashachar said that he sees anti-Semitism in the United States as "both blatant and subtle". He also said that he sees blacks and Jews "at each other's throats..I see racism as a major battleground...it's very easy to open up wounds in Jews, too."

He commented briefly on his own personal experiences from childhood through adulthood, noting various difficulties as a member of two "repressed minorities".

US, Hanoi Map Rebuilding

By FRANK CORMIER
Associated Press Editor

WASHINGTON (AP)-Hanoi and Washington announced agreement Wednesday on creating a joint economic commission that will help map out dollar aid to rebuild war-battered North Vietnam.

The disclosure came in a joint communique outlining nearly four days of recent talks in Hanoi by Henry A. Kissinger, President Nixon's chief foreign policy aide.

Ronald L. Ziegler, White House press secretary, said Kissinger and North Vietnamese officials did not discuss the scope of potential U.S. reconstruction assistance.

Predicting the joint commission would be set up in about a month, Ziegler said any dollar figures would first be discussed in that forum, and would be subject to further consultation with Congress.

The 700-word communique expressed hope the Kissinger visit "will mark the beginning of new bilateral relations."

It also spoke of "imperative measures" necesary to carry out the Vietnam peace accord signed in Paris on Jan. 27. It did not elaborate.

Ziegler said in response to questions that one such item on which Kissinger and the North Vietnamese agreed was the need to set up a system for trying to trace Americans still listed as missing in action in Indochina.

The communique said Kissinger and Hanoi officials "also agreed that would continue to have periodic exchanges of views" with the aim of making sure the Paris accords "are strictly and scrupulously implemented."

Kissinger was en route to Peking via Hong Kong and will leave there next Monday, making an overnight stop in Tokyo before returning to Washington the next day.

Ziegler said Kissinger would hold a news conference on his Hanoi and Peking talks soon after returning here.

The communique said Kissinger and Hanoi officials "exchanged views on the manner in which the United States will contribute to healing the wounds of war and to postwar economic construction in North Vietnam."

It said they agreed on a joint commission, with an equal number of representatives from each nation, to develop economic relations between the United States and North Vietnam.

There has been persistent talk of $7.5 billion to be distributed throughout Indochina over a five-year period to help repair war damage. Of the total, North Vietnam presumably would claim about $2.5 billion.

The United States would be but one of a number of nations and international organizations contributing to such a fund. Nixon's latest federal budget, for the bookkeeping year that begins July 1, contains no money earmarked for North Vietnam.

Administration officials have indicated that if aid money is needed during the time span of the new budget, the funds would have to be diverted from some other section of the federal spending blueprint.

Nixon Restores Veterans' Benefits

By MARGARET GENTRY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon was reported today to have ordered the Veterans Administration to rescind proposed revisions in disability benefits that critics said would have cost Vietnam-era soldiers millions of dollars in government aid.

A House committee official said he had been told the administration will announce later today that the proposal has been killed.

The proposed revision in disability ratings aroused strong opposition from veterans' organizations and congressmen on the House and Senate Veterans Affairs Committee after it was circulated last week.

Several officials said then that they understood the revisions would have cut off $160 million in benefits for disabled veterans and would have hit Vietnam-era soliders hardest.

Oliver Meadows, staff director of the House Veterans Affairs Committee, said he was notified this morning by a White House representative that Nixon has ordered the VA to withdraw the proposed rating schedule.

The proposed revisions, for example, could have cut total family benefits from about $6,740 a year to $1,272 for a veteran who left a leg in Vietnam.

It would have raised ratings for some categories, primarily for psychiatric disabilities, but benefits for most amputees would have gone down.

Cease-Fire Often Violated; State Department Steps In

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) — A top-level State Department official joined yesterday in efforts to stabilize the Vietnam cease-fire that in 18 days has been riddled by violations.

At the intervention of Deputy Asst. Secretary of State William H. Sullivan, the four-party Joint Military Commission agreed to do something about trying to stop the shooting in which Saigon has reported more than 13,000 Vietnamese casualties.

The senior American military representative to the commission warned the Viet Cong meanwhile, that the United States will not tolerate any future delays in the release of American war prisoners in South Vietnam.

The Viet Cong delayed release of 27 American prisoners Monday for more than 10 hours.

Representatives of the United States, North and South Vietnam and the Viet Cong also discussed the 20 additional American prisoners to be released from North Vietnam in the next few days. But it is understood that no firm release time has been set.

U.S. officials made Sullivan's intervention with the Joint Military Commission known shortly before the United States and North Vietnam issued a joint communique on talks Sullivan and Henry A. Kissinger held in Hanoi for four days.

Exchange of Views

The communique said the participants "had frank, serious and constructive exchanges of views on the implementation of the agreement on ending the war and restoring peace in Vietnam."

While Kissinger flew into Hong Kong Tuesday on his way to China, Sullivan slipped quietly into Saigon.

In a series of meetings yesterday, Sullivan conferred with all four parties to the Vietnam peace agreement.

It was understood in Saigon that President Nixon has instructed both Kissinger and Sullivan to make efforts to get the Vietnamese to reduce hostilities, which though declining, have persisted through the cease-fire.

Official Protest Note

Maj. Gen. Gilbert H. Woodward, the chief U.S. delegate to the Joint Military Commission, handed an official protest note to the senior Viet Cong representative saying the Viet Cong violated the peace agreement signed in Paris Jan. 27 by delaying the release of the 27 American prisoners at Loc Ninh, 75 miles north of Saigon.

Woodward accused the Viet Cong representative at Loc Ninh of trying to induce the U.S. representative at the site, Brig. Gen. Stan McClellan, to "sign a receipt on which had been added a remark falsely ascribing to the Republic of South Vietnam responsibility for a delay in receipt of U.S. personnel."

The Viet Cong commander at Loc Ninh would not release the American prisoners until the Communist side had its own POWs back. The Communist POWs scheduled for release at Loc Ninh staged a sit-down at the prison camp at Bien Hoa until they could meet with their representative on the Joint Military Commission. The result was a delay of more than 10 hours.

A Viet Cong spokesman claimed that a team of the Joint Military Commission sent to Can Tho in the Mekong Delta to inspect a camp where Communist prisoners are held was denied the opportunity to carry out its mission.

POWs Shop, Catch Up; 40 More Due Home Today

CLARK AIR BASE, Philippines (AP) — Released American war prisoners wandered through a U.S.-style supermarket Wednesday catching up on American fashion like so many Rip Van Winkles, returned from captivity instead of sleep.

About 35 of the 120 former POWs still here chatted with newsmen about themselves and their feelings while they shopped in the Clark Air Base Exchange just 12 hours before some of them were to board planes to the United States.

Hanoi Goodwill Gesture

Sources said they expect 40 more former prisoners to fly home today making room for 20 additional prisoners to be released from North Vietnam within days in an extra goodwill gesture by Hanoi.

The first regular homecoming flight took off from Clark Wednesday, a C141, carrying 20 prisoners to California. Two prisoners had flown home Tuesday because of illness in the family.

The shoppers at the modern base exchange reacted with joy, excitement and near disbelief as they were introdced to styles and products many of them had never seen before.

"I tried to find a conservative outfit for myself, circa 1965 or 1966," said Cmdr. Geral L. Coffee, 39, of Los Angeles. "But I found they don't exist any more."

Sensitive Conversation

Only a few newsmen were allowed to talk with returned prisoners while they strolled through the exchange. The reporters were escorted by spokesmen for Operation Homecoming who occasionally broke off conversations that strayed into what were considered sensitive areas.

"We all realized that our country would never let us down, and we trusted the government and the people," said Navy Capt. Walter E. Wilber, a prisoner for almost four years. "There was no question about that."

"The most fun now is all the happy faces at the hospital," said Wilber, 43, of Millerton, Pa.

Returned prisoners have been issued $250 as an advance on their back pay, but can draw more if they want it.

Few of the returnees spoke of their captivity.

But Chief WO James H. Hestand said his "most despondent time was when the truck that brought us down to be released–Monday–turned around and we went back to the camp."

"I almost jumped out of the truck," he said.

"Hanoi Hilton" Was "Hell Hole"

By EDITH LEDERER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)—The "Hanoi Hilton" where American war prisoners are beginning to check out is a shabby city jail nicknamed "Hell Hole" by the Vietnamese themselves.

A member of the International Commission for Control and Supervision who was in Hanoi 15 years ago and toured the facility Monday described the prison conditions as "pretty grim."

It is, he said yesterday, a block-square city jail in the heart of Hanoi that was constructed by the French sometime after World War II during the days when Vietnam was their colony.

The jail has generated wide interest among Americans who wondered where and in what their loved ones were imprisoned. U.S. pilots, some of whom ended up there, baptized it the Hanoi Hilton.

The returning control commission member outlined what he saw during his tour on condition neither his name nor his nationality be disclosed.

He said the prison is called "Hoa Lo," slang that translates to the "Hell Hole." But even Hanoi radio picked up the name Hanoi Hilton and used it in its broadcasts on the prisoners and U.S. bombing.

"To an American arriving from the States it would be a hell of a place," he added. "So I think you would have to say that the conditions were pretty grim for those men. But on the other hand, they were no worse than the conditions under which most Vietnamese live, except the confinement."

Touring commission members, in Hanoi for the first prisoner release, walked through a gate in high walls into an area with two courtyards. Off one were three large sleeping rooms, each about 30 by 55 feet, he said.

He said the North Vietnamese told them each room would accommodate about 30 men. One room had a raised platformin the middle "which was wide enough for two men to sleep sort of end to end—so that the men slept in two rows along this raised platform."

A second room of the same size had a similar cement floor but a different arrangement.

"Sleeping platforms were along the two walls and the sort of depression, alleyway, was in the middle," the commission member reported.

On the raised platforms there were "wooden pallets which were three or four feet wide, and there was a thin straw mat on top of each one."

Toilet facilities, he said, were "just sort of a hole in the floor that you squat over and some of them had just a honeybucket underneath which had to be emptied by hand—the original toilet facilities of 1920 and old France."

"There was a sort of shower arrangement where there were three sort of brackets coming out of the wall and they said they simply brought hoses in and hung them over these brackets and that's where the showers were."

"In the courtyards—they were sort of primitive—there were volleyball nets and basketball hoops and checkers and sets of chess and cards and things."

There also was a 35-bed infirmary, he said.

The tour was made by representatives of all four members of the international commission— the Poles, Hungarians, Indonesians and Canadians.

U.S. Balance Still In Red Despite Narrowing Deficit

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The U.S. balance of payments deficit narrowed in the last three months of 1972 and for the year as a whole but still remained deeply in the red, the Commerce Department said Wednesday.

Despite the fourth-quarter improvement, the yearly deficit still was the second highest in the nation's history. The department said the deficit dropped from a third-quarter reading of $4.6 billion to $1.4 billion in the fourth quarter, using official reserve transaction figures. The yearly deficit hit $10.1 billion, compared with 1971's record $29.8 billion.

Using another measure of the deficit, the net liquidity balance, the nation rang up a $4-billion deficit in the last quarter compared to a $4.5-billion reading in the third quarter. For all of 1972, this deficit totaled $13.8 billion, compared with the record $22 billion in 1971.

The reserve transaction figures primarily measure transactions with government and central banks. The net liquidity balance is regarded as a measure of most financial transactions between private Americans and foreigners.

The fourth-quarter improvement, the department said, was caused by calmer foreign exchange markets following an end to the monetary turbulence after the British pound was floated last summer.

That calmness didn't last very long, however, and a new crisis led to the Nixon administration's decision Monday to devalue the dollar.

The improvement in the deficit is expected to help keep foreign exchange markets calm after the dollar devaluation, even though the report dealt with financial events long before the latest currency crisis.

The Nixon administration said it expects the latest devaluation, the second in fourteen months, will turn around the deficit in the second half of this year and perhaps toward balance by the end of 1974.

Nixon Asks Action On Environment

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon urged Congress yesterday to complete its "unfinished environmental business" by acting on 19 bills proposed by the administration in the last session and still pending.

In a nationwide radio address he said this country is heading for victory in what he called the war against environmental degradation.

Nixon promised a number of additional initiatives in a forthcoming, and presumably more detailed special message to Congress later this week. But informed sources did not anticipate any major new departures. The President's proposed budget for fiscal 1974 holds a tight rein on environmental and resources spending and offers little encouragement to new programs that would cost substantial amounts of money.

Among the legislation to be reintroduced, Nixon said, would be bills too: encourage state land-use planning; modernize federal mining and mineral leasing laws; improve federal land management; and achieve "enlightened regulation of surface and undergrounding mining."

He also said the administration in 1973 will address three other major subjects: "wise land use, energy, and a healthy, expanded farm economy." Much of his speech was devoted to reviewing what he considered his administration's environmental achievements.

"Day by day," Nixon said, "our air is getting cleaner. In virtually every one of our major cities, the levels of air pollution are declining.

"Month by month," our water pollution problems are also being conquered, our noise and pesticide problems are yielding to new initiatives, our parklands and protected wilderness areas are increasing.

"Year by year, our commitment of public funds for environmental programs continues to grow."

Suspect Held In Slaying Of Boston Co-ed

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)—Anthony J. Jackson, 33, of Boston, will be arraigned Thursday in Middlesex County Superior Court on charges of murder and kidnapping in the death of Demaris Synge Gillispie, one of eight Boston area women slain since last summer.

A Middlesex County grand jury Tuesday indicted Jackson, alias Wayne Eubank, with murder and kidnapping in the death of the 22-year-old Boston University coed.

Jackson, who has been in custody since Dec. 26, after a shootout with Cambridge police, is currently being held at the Middlesex House of Correction in lieu of $150,000 bail on charges of assault with a dangerous weapon, unlawfully carrying firearms, operating a motor vehicle to endanger, refusing to stop for a police officer and speeding.

The killings of young women, dating back to July, have been described by police as the area's toughest homicide case since the Boston Strangler slayings a decade ago.

At that time, 13 women ranging in age from 19 to 76 were strangled in their apartments. No one was ever brought to trial for the slayings although Albert DiSalvo once confessed to being the Boston Strangler.

DiSalvo is serving a life sentence in a Massachusetts prison for unrelated assaults on four women in the Boston area.

Middlesex Dist. Atty. John J. Droney declined comment on the indictment. Droney has said for a month that authorities had a "definite suspect" in at least one of the killings.

Miss Gillespie, 22, disappeared from her Cambridge apartment last Nov. 29. Her nude body was found in a wooded area in Billerica north of Boston Feb. 3.

Cambridge police said they thought at least three of the eight slayings were related, but Droney said he only had evidence to prosecute the Gillispie case.

The $150,000 bond for Jackson was set by Judge George P. Ponte when the man appeared before him in Middlesex Superior Court Jan. 16. Ponte said he granted the high bail because the prosecutor told him "this man has four different residences and wears disguises and his probation record indicates he probably will not appear."

Jackson was in the state prison hospital at Norfolk for several weeks following his Dec. 26 arrest. He was under treatment for wounds suffered in the shootout with police.

Detectives working on the slayings have said there are enough similarities to warrant attempts to tie all the murders to one killer.

After a meeting with police officials last week, state Attorney Gen. Robert H. Quinn said all the victims originally were from outside the Boston area.

Randolph G.I. Still Missing

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

RANDOLPH, Mass. (AP) — As some Vietnam prisoners of war headed home Wednesday, priests said prayers of remembrance for Navy Lt. Joseph Dunn, one of the war's missing who has never been accounted for.

Dunn's plane was shot down five years ago Wednesday. At a concelebrated Mass in his honor, priests asked that Dunn and the nearly 1,400 other men still missing not be forgotten in the excitement of the returning POWs.

Dunn's wife, Maureen, and his six-year-old son, Joe-D, were among the 100 persons who attended the Mass at St. Mary's Church. For her, the ceremony was different from the four previous ones she had attended, because, she said, it may be the last.

"It seemed a little more apprehensive," Mrs. Dunn said. "If the moment of truth is near...I hope it's closer to the end."

But since the North Vietnamese furnished a list of the prisoners, Mrs. Dunn said, she has lost her confidence that she will see her husband alive.

"I don't have any kind of feeling any more," she said.

"The love is there, and the desire is there to see him home, and the desire to find out his fate is still there, but the feeling that I definitely would see him again was killed two weeks ago when the military released the list.

"Now I just want to know what happened to him," she said. "This limbo is hell."

After the Mass, Mrs. Dunn smiled and shook hands with the priests. Joe-D lit a candle.

The prisoner release has been hard on her son, she said, because he cannot understand why some fathers are coming home and his is not.

"I'm not so worried about my outlook as I am about my son's," she said. "It's so hard to say, 'The first real thing that you've ever tried to attain you're not going to get,' How do you do it, I don't know."

Mrs. Dunn, an activist in groups that worked to rally support for the prisoners, said seeing the men now coming back left her and her son with a feeling of being cheated.

"It's not bitterness, and it's not jealousy," she said. "I just feel an injustice had been done on us."

On Saturday, when the names were announced of the first batch of POWs to come home, she broke down and cried in front of her son. And she felt depressed and defeated for the rest of the weekend.

"But when I got up Monday," Mrs. Dunn said, "I rolled up my sleeves and said, "By God, I'm not going to give up fighting.' "

"I'm not going to allow him to be anonymous. I deserve to see Joe again, even if it's in a casket. I deserve to see him resting in peace in the country that he loves as much as the others deserve to see their sons and husbands," she said.

Even learning that he had died and where he was buried, she said, would be better than the uncertainty of not knowing what happened to him.

Dunn's wife, Maureen, and his six-year-old son, Joe-D, were among the 100 persons who attended the Mass at St. Mary's Church. For her, the ceremony was different from the four previous ones she had attended, because she said, it may be the last.

Elm Span Worm Disappearing

By DON MEIKLE
Associated Press Writer

HARTFORD (AP) — The elm span worms which have plagued Connecticut for several years, chewing up foliage and dripping from the trees in squirming millions, are disappearing from the state.

"The elm span worm will be effectively removed from Connecticut this year," says Paul Waggoner, director of the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station.

Waggoner gave the good news to the legislature's Appropriations Committee, which reviewed the experiment station's budget Wednesday.

But he cautioned the legislators not to expect such dramatic results from every environmental program.

The hero of the fight against the elm span worm, said Waggoner, is a tiny wasp with a long name–"Ooencyrtus Clysiompae." This wasp lays its eggs in the eggs of the elm span worm moth, and the offspring of the wasp devour the offspring of the moth.

In an interview after his appearance before the Appropriations Committee, Waggoner said the "Summer blizzards" of white elm span worm moths should be a thing of the past, thanks to the diligent acitivites of the parasitic wasp.

"In 1971, up to half the wooded acreage of Fairfield County was defoliated by the elm span worm," he said. "It was an alarming situation."

The greedy worms "advanced like a big wave across the state," Waggoner said, spreading north and east into Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

Lobbyist Asks Support For Drug Law Change

By NANCY BASMAJIAN

A member of the Committee for a Sane Drug Policy spoke in John Quincy Adams Tower to recruit lobbyists to appear at a public hearing March 7 on three bills to change marijuana laws.

Committee member Steve Newman said the 20 members of the Joint Legislative Social Welfare Committee must approve the bills before they are allowed to appear in the legislature.

Eight persons attended the meeting in the twelth floor lounge of the dorm, at which Newman suggested persons write to members of the Social Welfare Committee.

Briefly, the three bills are:

The Frank-NORML Bill, filed by Representative Barney Frank and the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws. This bill would free state officials from law enforcement duties with respect to marijuana. It would do nothing to change Federal laws.

The Backman Bill, filed by Senator Jack H. Backman, would put into effect the major recommendations of President Nixon's National Commission on Marijuana and Drug Abuse. This would involve "removing all penalties from possession of marijuana and profitless transfers of one ounce or less."

The Black Caucus Bill, filed by Representatives Royal Bolling, Royal Bolling, Jr., Mel King and Bill Owens, anticipates the repeal of prohibition by state and Federal governments. It would initiate a study to decide the best method for the legal distribution of marijuana.

The bills were filed in January, and if they are approved by the Joint Committee it will only be the beginning. They will then simply have earned "the right to be considered by legislature," said Newman. "I would imagine people who voted for it (in Committee) could vote against it when it comes up on the floor (of the legislature)," he added. At any rate, he continued by saying in regard to lobbying, "If there's any possibility of having an effect it's on the state rather than the national level."

Outside of Boston, Amherst is the only outpost of the Committee for a Sane Drug Policy. There are individuals working in Belchertown, Springfield and Greenfield, and Newman is hoping to establish additional contacts in the other four colleges of the Five College area, but there is still a great need for people to write to the members of the Joint Committee, particularly the one member to whom they are constituent. People are also needed to appear at the public hearing in March to demonstrate interest in the fate of these bills is essential.

Testifying in favor of the bills at the public hearings will be Edward Brecher, author of Licit and Illicit Drugs; Keith Strovp, Director of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws; and Joseph Oteri, a Boston lawyer who has done previous work with the Massachusetts Marijuana laws.

Steve Newman teaches a drug class here at UMass, and he has students from his class working on the lobbying effort. He feels that it is educating to see how the bills are dealt with. In addition, he is interested in hearing of cases of people who have been convicted or charged under Massachusetts laws since July first of last year. He may be reached at 20 Rivell Avenue in Northampton.

John Finlator, former Deputy Director of the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs, revealed the urgency of the situation in a few words.

"Regardless of one's views toward marijuana, the ineffectiveness of the criminal laws as a deterrent to use is astounding. Meanwhile, we have ruined the careers and lives of hundreds of thousands of otherwise law-abiding citizens by needlessly subjecting them to the ramifications of being defined 'criminal'."

Mom And Kids Charged In Theft

HARWICHPORT, Mass. (AP) — A 58-year-old mother and her three children were arrested Tuesday night and charged with commiting at least 10 house breaks in the Harwichport area.

Police said they recovered more than $10,000 in stolen property from the home of Mrs. Charles Leff. The property includes guns, stereo consoles, narcotics, jewelry, television sets, and police scanner radios, police said.

Mrs. Leff; her son Charles, 17; daughter, Patricia, 19; and a 16-year-old son are being questioned in connection with other breaks in the areas.

Coed Continues Peace March

By DON GLICKSTEIN

Deb Peck is still walking to Washington.

A junior Human Development major, Ms. Peck began her walk from Springfield on January 23 as a prsonal statement against the war.

At that time, she admitted that her walk wouldn't end the war or stop the bombing. Rather, she said, it was an "attempt to take some personal responsibility to oppose death and restore some life".

Since the cease-fire, Ms Peck has tried to publicize the efforts of "Medical Aid to Indochina", a group which is helping the survivors of American bombing in Vietnam and other war tragedies.

Averaging 11-12 miles per day. Ms. Peck hopes to reach Washington on Feb. 25. The next day, she will present her own contribution to ex-Attorney General Ramsey Clark–a "Medical Aid" sponsor-for the Bach Mai Hospital Emergency Fund. Hanoi's Bach Mai Hospital was destroyed by United States' bombs last December.

Ms. Peck, with the aid of friends, clergy and her parents, made arrangements to stay in private homes each night at every leg of her walk, which will last a total of 35 days.

A friend of Ms. Peck's, graduate student Steven Shirey, joined her briefly in New York City last week. He said she is walking less for the publicity than for herself and for her hometown of West Springfield. Ms. Peck was a popular high school athlete there, and her father is the West Springfield town counsel.

It took eight days for Ms. Peck to reach Philadelphia from New York, where she is shown here, resting at the home of a sympathetic friend. She hopes to reach Washington on Feb. 25. (AP photo)

Prof. Claims Racial Views Cause For Degree Denial

By PETER MUCCINI
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Prof. William B. Shockley, a Nobel Prize physicist, said yesterday a British university is withholding an honorary degree from him because of his racial views. He has expressed belief that as a whole blacks are genetically inferior to whites.

Shockley, in London to mark the 25th anniversary of his invention of the junction transistor, said the University of Leeds will not confer on him a degree of honorary doctor of sciences as planned for May.

In an interview with The Associated Press, the American scientist said he was told of the decision by Lord Boyle, a former British minister of education who is now vice chancellor of Leeds University.

Shockley learned the decision on his 63rd birthday, Tuesday.

"It was a birthday present in reverse," he said. "When Lord Boyle spoke to me I asked him: 'Would you like me to forge the whole thing?' He replied: 'Yes, we would like you to forge the whole thing.' " Asked for his reaction, Shockley said: "If life gives you a lemon-make lemonade."

University officials said no one was available for comment.

Shockley's views about racial differences first appeared in January 1965 in a paper, "Population Control or Eugenics," presented at Gustavus Adolphus College in Minnesota.

Eugenics is the study of how to improve hereditary qualities in human beings by selective breeding, mating and reproduction.

Shockley said yesterday he held to his view that the American Black is "genetically disadvantaged" as compared with the American white.

"Not all Negroes are inferior to all whites but the dysgenic threat is greater for the blacks than the whites," he said.

The term "dysgenic" refers to anything which is harmful to genetic or racial improvement because of the effect it has on human reproduction.

Shockley said he is anxious to "alter the position of the rudder of public opinion and turn the ship of civilization away from the dysgenic storm that I fear is rising in the future."

"My research leads me to the inescapable opinion that the major cause of the American Negro's intellectual and social deficits are hereditary and racially-genetic in origin and these are not remediable to any major degree by any practical improvements in environment," he said.

Shockley, born in London, is professor electrical engineering at Stanford University. He won the Nobel Prize for physics in 1956 for his work with the transistor. After working for the Bell Telephone Laboratories he served during World War II as director of research for the U.S. Navy's anti-submarine warfare operations research group and as an expert consultant for the office of the secretary for war.

Devaluation Favors USSR

By STEPHENS BROENING
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — President Nixon's decision to devalue the dollar gave the Soviet Union a $100 million windfall, economic experts calculated yesterday.

The analysis was based on the amount of unfilled orders placed in the United States by the Soviets but not yet paid for.

The Soviets can now obtain the dollars required for payment 10 per cent cheaper since Washington devalued the dollar by that much on Monday.

There are roughly $7 billion worth of Soviet orders on the American books. The bulk of it represents the undelivered portion of the $1.2 billion Soviet purchase of American grain last year.

U.S. officials said the grain deal requires payment in dollars as the wheat, barley and corn are loaded on the ships in American ports. Delivery was to be over a three-year period.

Officials said that between $330 million and $400 million had been spent so far by the Soviets for the grain. That left a balance of $800 million to $870 million to be paid by the Russians at a 10 per cent saving.

The same kind of contract covers Soviet purchases of American machinery. Officials said the unfilled orders totalled about $150 million, including a $50 million order from Caterpillar, and a $40 million contract with International Harvester.

By selling gold or a reserve currency to obtain dollars, the Soviets should, in effect, be getting the machinery at a 10 per cent discount.

U.S. officials said there was no likelihood the United States would try to renegotiate the grain sale or the machinery sales.

Munchies Menu

The Illicit Consumption of Euphoriants. Appalling to parents, Clergymen, and Representative Louis Morini. Something for hard-pressed sociologists to study. And a way of life for others.

The illicit consumers can be split up into distinct categories. Firstly, there are those who rely on the hard stuff for deliverance from reality. Secondly, there are those who don't care for grovelling and vomitting that sometimes goes with the hard stuff, but will go to any length to gain acceptability in the NOW generation. And finally, there is that self-disciplined constituency which scrupulously confines its consumption to the least objectionable of the Euphoriant category, Botannica Misdemeanorus (Grass).

This constituency is indeed growing, and gaining in prestige. Dick Cavett and Tony Curtis have been reported among the conspirators against decency. Bill Buckley, the Almighty's Right-Hand Man, has advocated the legalization of the stuff, and admits to having grown some on his yacht. And Kim Agnew and R. Sargent Shriver, Jr. seem to think its OK. So do some of our best friends.

A few tokes can do amazing things to the Ten O'Clock toker. It can glue him to the television for hours. It can inspire poetry, enhance the appreciation of great music (or bad music), and add zest to discussions on a range of topics, such as politics, philosophy, religion, or sex. And speaking of sex, the word around town is that a more potent aphrodisiac cannot be found. And of course, we mustn't fail to mention the effect that the stuff has on the consumer's appetite.

The Munchies. An insatiable craving for all types of cuisine. The manifestations of the effect are as follows: 1) parched feeling in the throat; 2) exhausted lungs; 3) tingling on the tongue; 4) twinkle in the eye. Where the hell's that menu?

Where do the munchied go? If there is food in the vicinity, and if it's cheap, there they goeth. For some, Pizza or Subs is the old standby. There are others who turn into galloping gourmets. To them, Pizza and Subs are for the Masses. Their tastes are far more discriminating. Where do they go?

If money is available, they can really splurge and go to that new Polynesian Restaurant on Route Nine. The Pu-Pu Platter (yes, Pu-Pu) seems to be the favorite of those who get the Oriental Munchies. But due to its rather high price tag, it can't be more than an occasional celebration. The same goes for Italian food.

There is another place, however, which can please the most discriminating gourmet with a fat wallet as well as the less affluent appetite. I'm referring to the Florence Diner in Florence, Massachusetts. Just stay on Route Nine past Northampton.

The Florence Diner looks like the average clatter-platter of the Nineteen Fifties. There are tables, but due to the usually long lines, it pays to grab a seat at the counter if there's one available. There's something for everyone on the menu. Lobster Newburg, Rock Cornish Game Hens, and Roast Beef Au Jus for those with an extra buck and a sense of adventure. For those who have a less bourgeois outlook, there are a wide variety of sandwiches and ala carte dishes. And for those who are just interested in stuffing as much food as possible down the hatch, there is the Fried Chicken and Spaghetti plate, complete with potato and vegetable. And not to forget the desserts. They can be a meal in themselves. Every conceivable type of pie, pudding, and for the big mouth, there is the popular Baked Alaska.

Oh, yes. The prices. They can't be beat. Not only does the atmosphere exuberate with nostalgia, the prices do, too. No matter what type of munchy, Flo's is the place to go. Even for the uncorrupted. They'll like it, too.

That Ol' Time Religion

Part I: The Germ Lives

During the past few days in the Coliegian letters page, a slew of letters have appeared which have been bemoaning a variety of things—from the Coliegian's ineptitude in handling minority issues to the "gall" of Third World people refusing to stand for the National Anthem. The problem with all these various viewpoints, although some expositions have been quite good, is that they seem to favour the immediate reaction versus the problem as a whole. Somewhat akin to hitting the symptom of a disease rather than attacking the disease outright.

The United States is a nation of cultural deficiency. This is not the type of culture one would gather by going to, say, an art exhibit, and voila, you're cultured. It doesn't work that way. Culture is a living, breathing thing, composed of people and their approaches to live and living, and as such is an ongoing experience. However, here in this country, understanding and enlightenment comes with the almighty buck. An uncomfortable cultural contact will be unenlightening, simply because we are taught to shy away from that which causes a questioning of values. I mean, why bother? If you're white, middle-class, you're pretty safe in your values.

All of which brings me to the main point of this exercise. There are several problems to be dealt with, once they admit that there are problems to be dealt with. If there's not a dollar in it, then chances are that it won't be dealt with, until it's too late.

Part II: The Big Dig

Have you heard the one about the (pick minority group)? Well, if you haven't chances are you will within the next few hours. God bless me, folks, it's wonderful to live in a 'melting pot', where, of course, everybody gives up their own ethnic absurdities so they can join in the absurdities of American culture. And with more minorities around, the more fun we can have making jokes about those who are not like us.

The big dig about a persons origins are just a part of the greater picture, but they form a large substratum. For instance—you're different than I am, so I have every right to make fun of you. Unfortunately, there's an abysmal ignorance behind that "fun", and that fun can and does turn into malice. Stereotypes develop from a lack of real contact, and when that real contact appears, there is a natural tendency to fit those 'minorities' into your picture of them. Either that, or to say that you're really just accepting people as they are, but whether or not you dislike them you accomplish by putting them into your own cultural set-up. Strange dichotomy of ideas.

And it's also backed up at every level in any type of market society. If we'll exploit natural resources, we'll also exploit human resources. We'll listen to the music we like and never worry about the fact that it was and is Black in origin and content (Can blue men sing the whites? Think about it.), attend to our own problems and of course never mind "the system" because it's treated me well, and isn't the point of life to GET MYSELF TOGETHER AND MAKE A BUCK AND LIVE IN A SUBURB AND . . . (Mental Feedback)

You see, now, I'm not really after you to change. I'm not at you to crawl out of your minds or even to contribute to the Bangladesh relief fund. What I'm really after is some kind of life or motion or some attempt to understand each other.

Part III: The Vegetable Reality and Life at UMass

The vegetable syndrome (dying a slow death out of cultural stagnation) is currently a reality at UMass, enforced by a little speech a man named Milhouse delivered a short time ago. In essence, Nixon was saying "Do unto others before they do unto you." Screw thy neighbour. And he is enforcing it because it's the easy way out of a problem. If you want to control a large amount of people, just have them mouthing a lot of empty phrases over and over again, until they, too, are hypnotized into believing it.

Everything's cool this time around, because even though our entertainers rip us off, and even though we rip off people more than our predecessors ever did, well, it's okay, because we're making posters live our beliefs, instead of taking care of them ourselves. Bread and circuses . . . dope and rock concerts, etc.

One of the traits you can see developing around UMass right now is a paranoid atmosphere, and this article probably won't help us out. But if we're going to let selfishness, cultural narrowmindedness, etc. rule our minds, that's when the vegetables rule. A person stop being.

It seems that anyone you talk to here at UMass has to resort to a variation on the rugged individualism theme to reinforce their ego. Fine. Nothing wrong with individuality. But it was pointed out as far back as 1830 by a gentleman named Alexis de Toqueville that individuality, en masse, tends to make each individual less individual, until he becomes nothing more than a part of the group's consciousness. And with a Nixon hot on our tails, forcing everybody to resort to the fast buck, you know that this approach will be the death of free government.

Now that we have acknowledged that fear, let's not slip back into that good ol' time religion (When Archie Shepp detected the mentality of this campus last year, he played '50's music to reflect that mentality). I've had enough of it. And so, it would seem, from the mental stagnation of the campus, that it has had enough of it too. New ideas have to be realized, rather than scoffed at, and we can't allow ourselves any more the luxury of rejecting an uncomfortable idea, because discomfort might soon prove to be death.

In short, in this editorial, I have tried to capture a mood on paper. Whether or not I have succeeded is no longer up to me. I'll try to realize my existence, and hope that this has gotten through. That's all I can ask.

We're all in pretty much the same bind, and 1950's solutions won't fit a 1970's reality. Don't retreat behind bars—come out of your cages and face the world.

I wish you realization.

Gary Gomes is an MDC editorial columnist.

Go With The Underdog

We lost at the national electoral level with McGovern. But substantial changes in government at the local level are no 'pipe dream' if large numbers of young people vote in Amherst.

So vote Tuesday, Feb. 20, for the office of Town Selectperson. If you must choose between the official nominees--Geo. Scheurer, a Geo. McGovern-type liberal grad student or Merle Howes, old guard Republican incumbent--vote for Merle because the old guard minority has a right to one representative.

But I hope you will write-in my name ERIC WALGREN, 41 HIGH STREET for Selectperson. The reasoning is simple: You can't get changes in a bourgoise suburb like Amherst unless you open up the electoral process to young people. So as an 'electoral political radical' that is my first job!

I took the Town to Federal Court because it had disenfranchised the student vote by holding the Primary on Jan. 19, vacation time. The case to overturn the election is pending, but win or lose the Town will never forget it. Scheurer backed off his protest as soon as the going got rough and unpopular with middle-aged voters. (Scheurer got 400 votes and I got 200, who knows what would have happened with 3000 students voting?)

All right, assume we get the electoral door open, then what? Elect Scheurer? Why bother. You cannot get substantial changes in our government without radical action. First was the Civil Rights Movement then the Peace Movement: both gained their principles, their energy, and their momentum from righteous radicals--like King, Hoffman, and Spock.

The Liberals follow dutifully behind and support a righteous change after the risk is over. Scheurer is a liberal politician and he would rather hustle votes than be righteous and do right. Now having no radical to follow he has nothing to accomplish.

As the TEA PARTY candidate I offer to begin radical electoral politics in Amherst (already well under way in Berkeley, Ann Arbor, and Cambridge.) It's time the radical s had their chance to show their stuff in office.

Only radical action can pull Amherst out of its urbanizing tail-spin now plunging int0 the Middle-class Morass. I call it 'radical conservation.' Only radical action can STOP TOWN GROWTH (by heavy-duty legislative and judicial means) and save the countryside while correcting our present racial and class imbalance.

Only radical action can lower the cost and raise the quality of education by officially recognizing ALTERNATIVE SCHOOLS.

Only radical action can enact a Town Ordinance making possession of MARY JANE A $5 FINE and establish a CIVILIAN REVIEW BOARD to correct police malpractices.

Only radical action can CLOSE OFF SOUTH PLEASANT STREET to automobiles in favor of FREE BYCICLES, strollers, buses, and horse-drawn carriages.

Only radical action can designate areas for NUDE sun and water bathing and legalize harmless DRUNKENNESS.

Only radical action can establish RENT CONTROLS that are enforceable and a HOME TOWN COURT with citizen judges and a jury truly of your peers.

Only radical action can REDUCE THE SIZE OF THE UNIVERSITY, Amherst campus of the state-wide system, to lovable proportions.

DON'T COMPUTERIZE YOUR VOTE, WRITE IN 'ERIC WALGREN, 41 HIGH STREET'.

Letters To The Editor

As Far As Everybody Is Concerned

The one overriding issue of the past decade, the war in Vietnam, is over for all practical purposes, and the most disconcerting aspect of this issue, the jailing of American servicemen in Vietnam, has seen the beginning of its end. President Nixon is extremely relieved, the American people are serenely relieved, the families of the P.O.W.'s are conducting themselves with restrained relief and even-tempered eloquence —after years of false alarms (last October, for instance) they will fully believe that their people are coming home when they see them get off the plane. Their attitude is thoroughly realistic. The ex-POW's will be returning with a distorted image of society, just how distorted remains for their families to be seen long after the returning men will have left the limelight. They know that in handling this they might as well start being careful right now.

One doesn't like to say that anything good has come out of this war. America's honor is an entity that a lot of people have a difficult time grasping when its price is 45,000 lives, polorization, confusion, a deflation of respect for the Presidency and the man who holds it, and years of promises, rhetoric, and pap flung at the political civilian from both ends of the spectrum. Yet "Peace with honor" is a concept that Jeremiah A. Denton, the first man off the plane in the Phillipines and spokesman for the men, has not lost track of through years of imprisonment. He thanked the President, as maligned a figure at UMass as perhaps there has never been. Who cares to argue with him? Who wants to tell him he's brainwashed, with patriotiam of Communist propaganda or anything else, when the only thoughts he has washed his brain with over the past years are that he would one day be released?

No, one doesn't like to say that anything good has arisen from this war. But it is great to have a day off from the searching for a reason, from the wrangling with one's conscience, and watch as the mental torment of the returning men comes to an end. For them the great debate ended when they were captured. If Capt. Denton does not already know of the people who tried to demonstrate and get him home faster and were clubbed, maced and shot for their efforts, or that that symbol, for which he fought and waited is displayed on the seats of people's pants or upside down, then I hope he never has to.

If you were one of those who marched, wrote letters, or struck against the war in Vietnam, you have to believe that your efforts made the war end sooner, and you do. If you were one of those who upheld the prolonging of this war for the sake of peace with honor, then you have to believe that your hope has been realized, and you do. If you left the United States rather than be drafted, or if you fought in Vietnam and then tried to point out the injustices of the war through your first-hand experience, you have to believe that you did the right thing. It's that simple. When the last prisoner has been released, I want to hear no platitudes about this confusing and sometimes demented spectre, no "I told you he'd do it" from the Nixon people, no more talk of any kind. For the prisoners, the people who had to sit and wait while they talked and we argued, are the only ones who can tell us where to go from here, and I think that they will tell us to try and forget—not their contribution, not that the U.S. dropped bombs for no apparent reason, but the hassle, and the hindsight. For the President whom Capt. Denton thanked Monday has promised him a generation of peace. And as far as everybody is concerned, he damn well better deliver.

Eight Candidates

To The People of Precinct #7:

We are eight Amherst citizens and residents of Precinct #7. Among us we represent the following occupations: a working mother, a labor union official, a public school teacher, a university employee, university student senators, and several other students in various fields.

We are campaigning for eight Town Meeting positions as a group because we believe a cohesive effort can be a lot more effective than individual campaigns. In arriving at our positions we are systematically researching approaches to local problems. We are committed to making the Town Meeting more responsive to the needs of all the people of Amherst. To this end we present the following:

I. Town Growth

In areas, such as traffic, water and sewer systems, schools, residential developments, commercial construction, there has been an obvious lack of responsible town planning. We will seek to rectify this situation. We are opposed to having Amherst become a "bedroom" community for Springfield and Holyoke. We also deplore the creation of commercial strips such as Route 9 going toward Hadley.

II. Rent Control

The lifting of federal controls on rent increases points out the possibility of yet higher rents in Amherst. Our goal is the establishment of local rent controls that include prompt services to tenants. We are also circulating a petition calling for the establishment of a town commission to study the entire area of rent control.

III. School Budgets

At the present time, the Town Meeting has the authority for approving annual appropriations for the schools of Amherst. We believe that this power carries with it the responsibility for knowing what these monies will be used for. We will seek to generate this responsibility in the Town Meeting.

IV. Child Care Centers

More child care centers are needed in Amherst. We are committed to the expansion of low cost child care facilities in cooperation with local, state, federal and university authorities.

The date for voting is Tuesday, February 20th.

The Polls are open from 12 Noon to 8:00 P.M.

The voting place is the Auction Barn in North Amherst at the intersection of Meadow Street and Route 116. Go to Watroba's General Store on No. Pleasant Street in North Amherst and turn left on Meadow Street to get there.

Your vote is necessary.

If you wish, save this list and take it with you to the polls.

Get To Know Us

To The Editor:

Hi, we'd like to introduce ourselves. We are Gamma Sigma Sigma, and we are a sorority—but we're not Greek and we don't have a house. We are a service sorority.

We just finished running a used book exchange at the Student Union and we've also organized Heart Fund walks from this campus. Every semester we help with the campus blood drive. We also work off campus— at Belchertown, the Shriners Hospital in Springfield, and local nursing homes. Maybe you've run into one of our fund raising drives—selling candy, baked goods, or Christmas notions. Or if you belong to an intellectual athletic team maybe you played against us in football or volleyball.

Now that we have been properly introduced, would you like to get to know us better? We'd like to meet you. Why not drop by one of our coffee hours this Wednesday or next between 7:30 and 9:00 in the Colonial Lounge at the Student Union. We think you would enjoy knowing us better.

Editorial Points

There used to be a time when you could walk around campus, and your biggest worry would be whether or not a bird would shit on your head.

Now this place has turned into a regular city. We're plagued with one of mankind's greatest problems— doggy doo.

And if you think it's bad now, wait until the springtime thaw comes. Then you'll find out why this place is called UMess.

Vote For Scheurer

To The Editor:

A few short months ago, when faced with the prospect of four more years, hundreds of people in the Amherst area rallied to the cause. A national election is important, for its result will have a strong influence on our lives for four LONG years, as we are presently finding out. The results of local elections also exert a profound influence on our lives, yet these elections usually attract only a small percentage of the voters.

Are you satisfied with the quality of apartments in Amherst and the rents that are charged? Do you enjoy the bumper-to-bumper traffic on Route 9? Would you like to see an effective regional mass-transit system or a child care center? Would you like to see new construction in Amherst take into account the ecological balance of the community and not merely the money-making aspirations of promoters who desire to make Amherst another bedroom community for Holyoke and Springfield?

If you feel you have a stake in what happens down at Town Hall then get out on Feb. 20 and VOTE. The choice for Selectman is between Merle Howes, the Republican incumbent, and George Scheurer. I feel George is more responsive to the needs of this community. As a graduate of, and now a special grad student at UMass, George has gained insight into the needs of students and Amherst's present lack of concern in meeting them. As an apartment dweller, George knows full well the problems that exist between landlords and tenants in a town where the rents are higher than other towns with a similar tax base.

You can help shape the future of Amherst. On February 20, vote George Scheurer your Selectman.

Robert L. Cohen

Why Not Go All The Way?

To The Editor:

Congratulations to Ms. Gavin and Ms. Sullivan, the Commuter Assembly, and the UMass community on the opening Monday of People's Market. But why just food? Why not clothes? books? records? cameras? Why don't you go all the way with the idea?

When I was a student at The University of Texas, I made every possible purchase at the CO-OP, a store owned and run by students. Although the CO-OP did not carry groceries, it did offer texts and other books, school supplies, clothing, records, small appliances, cameras, toiletries, check-cashing facilities, and several other departments. The prices were about the same as in other stores, but profits were returned to customers at the end of each semester. All one had to do was to keep his or her cash register tapes and return them to the CO-OP. Distributions were made in accordance with the amounts each student had spent. I seem to remember getting back $15-$20 each time, and that was back in the dark ages when texts cost about $6! It was no fortune, but it would either (a) finance a post-finals party or (b) buy my gas home. Which reminds me—why not gasoline, too? At the new UMass CO-OP, I mean.

Real Fears At 10 P.M.

To The Editor:

Rape has become the issue of the semester. As the chapel bell tolled ten o'clock P.M., I was still sitting in the Campus Center faced with indecision on how to get back to my apartment. The choices I had were whether to walk or thumb. If I thumbed I would run the risk of being picked up by a pervert. Would I take this risk? So I contemplated the alternative of walking on poorly, lit streets, by wide open spaces and perhaps assault by a rapist that lurks over Puffton Village. . .

It is sad that we have to live with these fears. UMass has grown to the size that surpasses many cities. It has become a city within a town. Coupled with its size are the problems of big cities, so now we as a community have to deal with these problems. THEY ARE REAL!!!

We, as the commuters of UMass urge the Student Senate to appropriate funds for a nightly bus service to all locales that they service in the day.

'Shield' Law Urged By Newsmen

BOSTON (AP)—Editors, reporters and legislators joined yesterday to urge legislative support of bills to provide newsmen a "shield" against being forced to disclose their sources.

But there was disagreement about how far the "shield" should go—whether newsmen should have an absolute privilege against revealing their sources or should be compelled to testify in some circumstances.

Though only one member of the public testified against the shield bills, the Senate chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Sen. William M. Bulger, D-Boston, made it clear he was unconvinced by the proponents of the laws. He called the issue "a tempest in a teapot."

"I have no doubt that ultimately you will get a shield law," Bulger told a newspaper publisher at the hearing. "But it will be passed for all the wrong reasons. You are a very powerful force."

Bulger suggested reporters seek the "martyrdom" of going to jail to protect sources "so they can get on the college lecture circuit."

Most of the support at the hearing went to two "qualified" shield bills under which a superior court judge could compel a reporter to give information if he finds that information is needed to permit prosecution of a felony or to protect human life.

And Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn submitted a new version of his shield law proposal which would leave it to a single justice of the Supreme Judicial Court to decide whether the reporter would have to testify.

"To take the unprecedented step of granting newsmen absolute privilege would open a Pandora's box and could very well backfire on society," said Quinn. He claimed his bill "goes beyond anything else proposed— short of absolute privilege—in respecting the confidential nature of news gathering in some of its aspects."

Gerald T. Tache, publisher of the New Bedford Standard-Times, asked the legislature to grant "unqualified protection for the press."

"The First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution is crystal clear," said Tache. "We deeply regret the need to seek corrective legislation, because the First Amendment should be enough."

William L. Plante Jr., executive editor of the Essex County Newspapers, spoke for the Massachusetts Newspaper Editors Association in backing two of the "qualified" shield laws.

Plante said "fear of reprisal" has sometimes blocked the free flow of information, and told the committee "the sources are chilled and they're drying up. We're living with the problem. We're dealing with people who are afraid."

The two sponsors of "qualified" bills which won most support at the hearing both said their bills met the challenges raised by the U.S. Supreme Court in its decision in the case of New York Times reporter Earl Caldwell and other journalists.

Sen. Alan D. Sisitsky, D-Springfield, said his bill strikes "a careful balance between the rights of the press and the rights of the public."

And Sen. John M. Quinlan, R-Norwood, said the Supreme Court decision was "unfortunate," but said "we must accept the responsibility shunned by the Supreme Court.

CLARK AIR BASE, Philippines (AP)—The second large group of released American war prisoners left the Philippines for home Thursday morning, just a day after they had wandered through a U.S.-style supermarket like so many Rip Van Winkles returned from captivity instead of sleep.

The 20 men, smiling and waving, boarded a C141 Starlifter hospital plane and took off on the 15-hour journey to Travis Air Base in California.

Twenty other former POWs left for Travis on Wednesday, and two went home earlier because of family illnesses. Another group of 20 men was scheduled to depart later Thursday.

Just as the doors on the huge plane were to close Thursday morning, a girl student from Wagner High School here ran up the ramp and presented one of the departing men, Maj. Robert D. Jeffrey of Los Angeles, Calif., with a letter and a POW bracelet with his name on it.

"Ten years ago he taught me to swim," said the student, brown-haired Elizabeth Towers, 16, daughter of a civilian employee at Clark. Tears were streaming down her face as she told newsmen the letter gave thanks for Jeffrey's safe return from nearly eight years of captivity in North Vietnam.

Leading the departing group of POWs was the senior naval officer held prisoner in North Vietnam, Capt. James B. Stockdale of Abingdon, Ill. He said in a farewell statement: "I want to thank all the people at Clark for the expressions of kindness we have received.

"We have been smothered with affection, kindness and expert medical care. We learned something as we came in the other day, something in the welcoming expressions on everyone's faces.

"We are quite excited that we will soon be reunited with our families."

Six of the 20 men who flew out Thursday morning were wearing hospital gowns.

As each man stepped from the bus to walk the red carpet to the waiting aircraft, he saluted the American flag held by the honor guard.

One man with a crippled right hand saluted with his left.

The departing men were seen off by Lt. Gen. William G. Moore, commander of the 13th Air Force. Several hundred spectators watched.

The departure left 100 former POWs at Clark. Twenty more are to be released from North Vietnam within days in an extra gesture of good will by Hanoi.

On Wednesday, 35 POWs catching up on American fashion at the Clark Air Base Exchange chatted with newsmen about themselves and their feelings as they shopped.

More Bombing?

HONOLULU (AP)—U.S. aircraft, including B52s, continued operations over Laos and resumed operations over Cambodia yesterday at the request of the government of these two countries, the U.S. Pacific Command said.

As usual, the brief announcement provided no amplification.

French Novelist To Speak On Women's Movement

The well-known French novelist Christiane Rochefort will be on campus today as a guest of the French and Italian Department. She will give two talks:

At 1:00 p.m. in Room 904-908, Campus Center, under the auspices of the Everywoman's Center, she will speak in English on the MLF (Mouvement pour la Liberation de la Femme) and the Women's Movement in France.

At 8:00 p.m. in the Third Floor Lounge of Herter Hall, the Department will host "An Evening with Christiane Rochefort" which she will open with an informal talk, in French, on her conception of literature. This will be followed by a general discussion and a reception open to all.

Mme. Rochefort has written many novels of social criticism and satirical humor dealing with French bourgeois life. She came on her first visit to the United States at the invitation of the Modern Language Association to participate in a forum on the Woman Writer at its annual convention. Since then she has been traveling across the country to make contact with Americans and especially to get to know the University scene.

Emergency Rules Drawn For Abortion Clinics

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Public Health Council has implemented emergency rules governing abortions performed in licensed hospitals and clinics and initially approved locating a clinic in the controversial Crittendon Hastings House in Boston's Brighton section.

The clinic is opposed by Brighton residents. Officials estimate it could handle 100 abortions a week.

The approved regulations take effect immediately, but are subject to amendment.

They require:

—Licensed hospitals and clinics to have resuscitation equipment;

—The gynecological surgery to be performed only by a physician who has the qualifications to work in a hospital;

—The availability of a physician, certified by the American Board of Obstetrics and Gynecology;

—Complete testing of the woman and a complete medical history compiled before the operation;

—Tests for venereal diseases and cervical carcinoma;

—Each clinic must have a transfer agreement with a licensed hospital to provide emergency service.

'Free' Blacks Building Destroyed By Fire

BOSTON (AP) — An explosion and fire Wednesday destroyed what is believed to be the oldest building in the nation constructed by free blacks, Boston fire officials said.

Fire officials said the blaze in the 167-year-old synagogue at Smith Court was touched off when a welder's torch ignited two 50-gallon oil tanks behind the building.

Workers were rennovating the building and converting it to a Museum of Afro-American History. Bryon Rushing, a spokesman for the museum said no one was hurt in the explosion and the workmen escaped.

A fire department spokesman said at the height of the blaze, fire officials received word the roof was in danger of collapsing. He said all firefighters were ordered out of the building and just after the last one got out, the roof did fall in.

The spokesman said buildings on the street were so close that firefighters had to climb the roofs to adjacent buildings to fight the flames. He said at one point, small fires burned in two nearby buildings, but they were quickly extinguished.

Ex-Heroin Addict Warns Of Signs Of Early Drug Problem

By JURATE KASICKAS
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — An ex-heroin addict who supported her habit as a prostitute advises parents to react immediately to a child's drug problem.

"At the very first sign that something's wrong, parents should seek professional help for their children; there's no time to feel guilty or worry what the neighbors will think," says Barbara Quinn, who grew up from a teen-age gang leader to a community affairs worker in New York.

Mrs. Quinn works with the Addiction Services Agency of New York City, recruiting addicts off the streets, making speeches and developing programs to fight the drug problem.

Moderated Drug Panel

She recently won an Emmy from the New York Television Academy for a cable television series she moderated called "Drug Line".

The program, aimed at parents as well as the young, used junkies, pimps and prostitutes to talk about the drug scene in New York.

"You have to nip the problem in the bud. I don't think kids are even ready to smoke marijuana. The young can't handle it, and if that's not available they'll soon be trying something else," said Mrs. Quinn.

Suspicious Symptoms

She noted several physical symptoms that shoud make parents suspicious that their children might be taking drugs.

"A very withdrawn child who suddenly becomes talkative, starts offering to help clean the house when he's never lifted a finger before, might be taking pills they call "uppers." Mrs. Quinn said, "If he seems sleepy and irritable most of the time, starts letting himself go physically, 'downers' might be the cause."

Parents should try to talk to their children about the drug scene. "But if there's never been any real communication between them, no kid is going to admit he's on drugs. And that's why professional help is the only answer."

As for her own experiences:

"I just didn't wake up one morning and become a dope fiend," said Mrs. Quinn, now 31, and married to her second husband--a jazz musician. She has a 14-year-old son. "My insanity started when I was 7 with the lying and the stealing and snowballed until it was out of control."

A vivacious, slender woman with dark eyes and hair, she talks easily now about a past that included several arrests, lesbian affairs, a hapless teen gang leader in Yonkers, in the suburbs of New York City. Her first arrest came at 14 for a sexual attack on another girl. Her drug habit started with cough syrup.

"I was drinking five and six bottles a day. And then I tried heroin and I was hooked."

There wasn't enough money in purse-snatching and shoplifting to support her habit, so she moved in with a junkie in Harlem and began "hustling". She was 19 years old.

"I was a lousy prostitute. I talked too much and all those old men who looked just like my nice Jewish grandfather kept trying to rehabilitate me," said Mrs. Quinn.

"Married to Heroin"

Cooky was soon making $200 a night, wining and dining at the Plaza, but she preferred the quick $10 "tricks" so she could hurry back to her drugs. "I even thought of tatooing an 'H' on my wedding finger to show the world I was married to heroin. I wanted to die a junkie."

She spent 90 days in the Women's House of Detention--what she calls the most degrading experience of her life--but was back on the streets again.

"By now I weighed only 100 pounds. I'd lost most of my teeth, and was sick with a kidney infection. It was summer and those damn boots all hookers wear were intolerable. I knew I couldn't turn one more trick."

Throughout the years when she was broke and desperate, she would return home, but always managed to conceal her life style from her parents.

"I don't think they ever knew how sick I was, and if they did, they never wanted to admit to themselves that something was wrong."

She finally admitted all and begged them for help. Soon she was enrolled in a program of drug rehabilitiation run by Synanon, a self-help organization, and began a 2-1/2 year climb back to sanity.

Doesn't Regret Past

"I don't regret my past. But I'd only do it over again if I knew I could end up the way I am now," says Mrs. Quinn.

One day she'd like to work on a national drug problem. "Parents must be made aware that the drug problem is here to stay. They've got to know when a child is asking for help even without saying 'help'."

Eight New Colloquia Offered In Quad

By STEVE RUGGLES

The Northeast Area Government, Tuesday evening, voted to fund an initial group of eight colloquia to be offered in the Quad this semester.

Colloquia funded at this meeting were: Lifesaving, Embroidery, Basic Bar Service, Sign Language, Yoga, Backpacking and Mountain Climbing, Photography, and Self-Defense. The offering of these colloquia now depends upon their enrollment, credit status, and acceptance of the contract by the instructor.

Tabled until next meeting, were decisions on: Dog Care and Training, Elementary Auto Mechanics, Leather Crafts, Silver Crafts and Sexism.

Any instructor of Quad colloquia desiring salary, must submit a proposal to the Area Government.

In other business, the position for an Administrative Aid to the Area Government has been opened up to the area. Any interested applicants should see Dana Marchant, Government President, before the weekend. Interviews will be held Wednesday evening.

The Area Council heard a proposal from Colby Smith of the Area Office for Student Affairs concerning the establishment of a center for educational innovation, a women's center, and a center for racial understanding and awareness. The Government sent this proposal to a special committee, and were told that a more detailed and specific proposal would be forthcoming.

As a part of N.A.R.P., the Government voted to pay a total of $800 to three people for services involved in setting up the program.

Bill Hassan asked the Quad Government for financial support of the Black Musicians Conference to be held in April. This will be acted upon at the next meeting.

Fellowships Offered In Public Administration

Students interested in a career in Public Administration in the national, state or local government are offering an opportunity to apply for a fellowship to study at two different universities. Candidates must be American citizens who have completed or who will complete a bachelor's degree with any recognized major by June of 1973.

Each fellowship for single fellows has a total value of $4,600. The stipend is $3,300 and the remainder of the grant consists of the remission of fees and tuition at the three cooperating universities. Each fellowship for married fellows has a total value of $5,000. The stipend is $3,700 and the remainder of the grant consists of the remission of fees and tuition at the three cooperating universities.

Beginning this June, fellows will serve a ten-weeks internship either with a department of the state government in Alabama, Kentucky, or Tennessee or with a federal agency in the South such as the TVA. During the 1973-74 academic year, they will take graduate courses in public administration at the University of Kentucky and either the University of Alabama or the University of Tennessee.

Volunteer positions are available in day care centers, nurseries, elementary school tutoring, and recreation activities for youth. To volunteer, one need only visit OUTREACH, at their office in 318 Arnold House, or call 545-2021.

University involvement in public service allows the community to become a part of the higher educational goals expounded by the university. The community also gains through the great wealth of supplies in terms of educational resources, ideas, and manpower. Moreover, the student gets a chance to merge academic study with practical experience. Next Thursday (Feb. 22) in 163 Campus Center, over 30 representatives from agencies will be available for the student to talk to.

Research Could Lead To Syphilis Vaccine

A significant fact about the bacteria Treponema pallidum, the cause of syphilis, is that it has never been cultivated in the laboratory. Dr. Charles D. Cox, professor microbiology at UMass is beginning a three year project which he believes will not only result in a successful method of laboratory cultivation, but will develop a good supply of a virulent strain of the bacteria.

This could lead to the development of a useful vaccine against syphilis, help studies on the mechanism of disease production and aid in the solving of the complex immunologic problems associated with the disease, Dr. Cox explained.

In his three year study, supported by a $122,000 grant from the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, Dr. Cox will try a new approach. He explained: "We intend to take a close look for the first time at the T. pallidum organism grown in rabbits. We'll also take a close look at certain basic characteristics of this organism which we expect will then tell us certain things that will help us successfully grow it in the laboratory."

Dr. Cox has devoted ten years to the study of the bacteria Leptospira, a spirochete similar in many ways to the bacteria that causes syphilis. Over a year ago he spent three months at the National Library of Medicine, studying the original literature on the syphilis bacteria, especially its maintenance and cultivation. One conclusion was that the cultivated strains of the syphilis bacteria now available are a virulent and of little value in vaccine research.

A feature of the study will be an active exchange of ideas with Dr. Ercole Canle-Parola, a colleague in the UMass microbiology department. Under a separate National Institutes of Health grant, Dr. Canale-Parola is studying the structure and physiology of strains of spirochetes that are cultivable.

According to Dr. Cox, "From the public health standpoint there seems to be a general agreement that we are in a period of sharp increase in syphilis. We apparently have reasonably good diagnostic tests and adequate chemotherapy available but we know very little about the actual mechanisms that produce the disease in man."

"The ability to cultivate and grow this bacteria would not only permit the more rapid development of a vaccine for syphilis but would permit the accumulation of large supplies to accelerate research and lead to sophisticated biochemical studies of the disease-producing organism," he explained.

Streaks Are For Prolific Pat

By MARTY KELLEY

Ontario to Amherst-It was rumored during the holiday season that he wouldn't be back. Marriage and grades provided the block. But a new ruling by the ECAC kept him in school. So the streak continued. And although time was bought it was just a question of time before that very factor would bring it to an end. And quietly without regret, it ended...

Yes, his number should be retired. His name, never to be forgotten by those who skate here in years to come. And in a game where agility and finesse precede strength, he's given us more than we've given him in dollars and cents. And Pat Keenan does it rather quietly.

There was a rather contained gathering at Orr Rink nearly a week ago as the hockey team squared off against Hamilton. A win seemed fairly inevitable. But the question of the night...Will Pat Keenan redlight again? The All-American had scored in every test to date this season. Would the incredible goal scoring streak continue?

A first period shift on the lone defenseman, but out came the goalie, no goal for Keenan...A three on one break led by Keenan, around the defense he sped, shot...great save by Chuck Root...Easy tip in Billy Harris...Still no Keenan goal. But he ended with 4 assists.

But Pat Keenan is Pat Keenan. A couple of goals the next night at Merrimac and a hat trick for habit at UNH on Tuesday night. And now he's tied his own mark with 34 goals. Prolific Pat has more chapters to write. The final script: the ECAC Division Playoffs...

And for Jack Canniff, Pat has been more of a blessing than a phenomenon. "He exploits his strength," says Canniff. "He's a goal scorer and that's his strength. He's an opportunist and he makes the best of existing situations. Forechecking rally isn't his style.

Neither is being selfish part of Pat's repetoire. He skates with such rhythm and fluid and Canadian grace. He plays the game with his stick and not his shoulder although Pat threw more checks in his last outing at Orr Rink than he has in his entire career. Spectators were forced to react, "Is that really Number 4?".

But Kennan's game is finding the net and the line of Billy Harris and Lonnie Avery more than compliment Keenan's act. "Billy Harris is a great feeder," says Canniff of the youthful wing. "Avery is tall, fast, has a lot of strength and offers the needed bulk in the corners".

Yes, the line and Keenan's attraction for minute sections of the net and fascination for redlights has promulgated his incredible scoring streak. But one of the reasons why his goal streak could have ended was simply overall fatigue.

When the sextet went to unfriendly New Hampshire, it was to be their fourth game in six days. That's a little much to ask. Physically and emotionally the team, including puck-ridden Charley Rheault, had to be spent. Four goals in the last 7 minutes for UNH's 11th hour travesty wasn't really the fault of the anguished visitors. But still the uncanny Keenan came back with three more. That's talent...

So the schedule has been demanding, the pace-fast and furious. And still no ne can silence Keenan's act. He's brought that spark of brilliance to a program that could use just a shade more than the Keenan polish. But with it and Canniff's Patience, hockey is respectable and for the second year in a row it has a chance to reign supreme in the Division 11 anals. Keenan has had something to say on the subject.

So the quiet goal scoring legend has ended. Still the point streak which slowly approaches a national record continues.

Pat Keenan is difficult to put into perspective. He should be playing before thousands in Boston or Denver or perhaps back in the old country with the Junior A loop. But he's here and it's quite a steal. Thank God he came back...

So he scores a lot, why should he check? But there's a difference between talented execution and bullish, off the boards body work...That's the situation Pat is in. He's got fluid to offer and not bulk to deliver. The Pat Keenan Reign at Massachusetts has already produced a Division II title and with Keenan at center ice, there may be room for another. There's a lot to see on this campus...If you get the chance, catch Pat's act...It will be well worth the effort...MDC photo by Alan Chapman.

Schnellenberger To Succeed As New Baltimore Skipper

BALTIMORE (AP)-Howard Schnellenberger, connected with highly successful football teams for the past 12 years, was named Wednesday head coach of the Baltimore Colts.

In taking over the Colts, whose 5-9 record last year represented their first losing National Football League season since 1956, Schnellenberger said he would "try to bring the Colts back to the level of excellence they've enjoyed over the years-as quickly as I can."

The new coach, who was an assistant under Don Schula with the Super Bowl champion Miami Dolphins for the past three seasons, said he had signed a long-term contract. But he declined to reveal its length and the salary, as usual, was not disclosed.

General Manager Joe Thomas, who is in the process of revamping the entire Baltimore roster by trading off many of its veterans, said Schnellenberger was one of his original top choices in the search for Baltimore's third head coach in the past four months.

Thomas said he had talked with Schnellenberger, Bill Arnsparger and Monte Clarke of the Miami staff before making a decision, which was delayed because the Dolphins' coaches had been vacationing in Mexico until last week.

"I contacted the Miami coaches first because I knew them, and because they were with a winner," Thomas said. "If I couldn't get one of them, I would have tried the Washington Redskins.

Schnellenberger, an assistant coach for seven years in college at Kentucky and Alabama, and seven years in the National Football League at Los Angeles and Miami, hardly knows what it is to lose anymore.

While he served under Bear Bryant at Alabama, the Crimson Tide won the national collegiate title in 1964 and 1965. He was with Los Angeles and Coach George Allen while the Rams posted a 40-13-3 record in four seasons, and the Dolphins under Don Shula were 34-7-1 in the past three years.

The Colts, who won the Super Bowl in 1971, had a morale problem last season. Thomas became general manager in July for new owner Robert Irsay, and by October he had fired head coach Don McCafferty and benched 39-year-old quarterback Johnny Unitas.

Pats Hire A Tutor

By DAVE O'HARA
Associated Press Sports Writer

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP)-Chuck Fairbanks, the New England Patriots' new general manager and coach, hired veteran pro quarterback Bill Nelsen as a tutor for Jim Plunkett Wednesday in naming eight assistants for the 1973 National Football League season.

Nelsen, whose 10-year career with the Cleveland Browns was plagued by knee injuries, was named quarterback coach by Fairbanks while recuperating from knee surgery performed last Friday in New York.

"We are extremely pleased we were able to get a young guy who is committed to coaching," Fairbanks said while declaring that Nelsen, only 32, will be strictly a coach with the Patriots.

Nelsen, credited with helping the development of Mike Phipps while a player-coach with the Browns last year, will devote most of his attention to Plunkett, the former Heisman Trophy winner who had a disappointing 1972 season after being rookie of the year in 1971.

"I know Jim personally and I'll try to give him all the help I can from my 10 years experience," Nelsen said by telephone. "I don't know what, if any, area Jim needs to improve. However, any quarterback just going into his third year needs help."

Fairbanks, one of the nation's most successful college coaches at Oklahoma, accepted the challenge to rebuild the Patriots three weeks ago, signing a five-year contract worth a reported $1 million.

At the time, Fairbanks said he did not know whether he would have an assistant coach for quarterbacks. However, he grabbed Nelsen when the Browns' signal caller became available.

Other assistant coaches named were Hank Bullough, 39, defensive line; Red Miller, 45, offensive line; Bill Pace, 41, offensive backs; Sam Rutigliano, 40, a holdover from the 1972 team who will tutor receivers; Charley Sumner, 42, linebackers; Jim Valek, 46, special teams, and Larry Weaver, 42, defensive backs.

Fairbanks also named Peter Hadhazy as assistant general manager and Phil Bengston as administrative assistant to the head coach. Hadhazy had been acting general manager after the Patriots fired Upton Bell in their hunt for a coach with over-all authority. Bengston, former coach with the Green Bay Packers, served as interim coach of the Patriots after John Mazur quit with five games left in 1972.

Bullough and Miller come from the Baltimore Colts, Sumner from the Pittsburgh Steelers, Valek from the Dallas Cowboys and Weaver from the Los Angeles Rams. Pace has been athletic director and head coach at Vanderbilt and brings to the Patriots what Fairbanks called "the college influence."

Women Track At Cage Tonight

Charlotte Lettis, spokeswoman for the Sugarloaf Mt. A.C. a women's track club, announced today that a special track meet will be held in Curry Hicks Cage tonight at 5:00.

A limited number of events will be offered, 220 yard dash, 440 yard dash, 1/2 mile run and mile run. The purpose of this meet is to provide some sort of introductory competition to women who would like to try racing but don't know where to begin.

There has never been a women's track meet at the University and there is no official University women's track team. "The Sugarloaf Club," says Ms. Lettis, "was formed to meet the competitive athletic needs of women in the University community. I see many women out jogging and can't help but think some of them would like to see what kind of time they could do for a mile."

Members of the Sugarloaf Track Club will be at the Cage ready to help any woman who wants to run track.

Grapplers Waste Little Time

By JOHN BOCK

Possibly the quickest wrestling match in New England this year was held last night in Boyden Gym as the powerful UMass Minutemen pinned their way to a 46-3 pasting of New Hampshire in less than an hour.

The match started about 8:05 and the gym was empty by 9:00. The quickness of the match was helped by the fact that UNH forfeited two weight classes. Picking up forfeits for the Minutemen were Mike McGlaughlin at 142 and Bill Rich at 190.

Dave Amato, wrestling up at 126 pounds, made his last home dual match as a senior a memorable one as he pinned Brach Simpson in 4:50. At 134 Larry Reynolds caught his man in two five-point moves but couldn't get the fall and settled for a 19-9 superior decision.

Tony Rome had the quickest pin of the night as he took Charles Egner on a tour of the lights at 1:18 in the 150 pound bout. He had people worried for all of five seconds as he got taken down right off. Cliff Blom didn't mind wrestling up at 158 because he also scored a fall over his UNH opponent at 6:03. Blom was leading 15-5 when he stuck his man.

Chris Cadwallader looked impressive at 167 as he moved all over Dave Benner on the way to a 9-4 win. Steve Dimobric provided Minuteman Doug Rumpf with his first win on the season as he fell 4-3, the victim of two reversals.

Carl Dambman was the other senior to be honored for the last home match and he brought his own personal record to 52-13-1 as he pinned Russ Walters at 6:06 of the bout. Carl was in a lot of trouble at the beginning of the second period as he fell into a five point move. By degrees he brought the match back into reach, first by getting a point for a technical violation on Walters part, and then by getting an escape as the buzzer sounded at the end of the second period. Carl is always looking for mistakes and found one at the beginning of the third period and that was all she wrote.

Dambman has had nothing other then pins in two years of wrestling in Boyden gym and has never lost there, either.

A win that big is nice for confidence and confidence is what the team will need this Saturday as they take on the third best small college team in the nation and the fourth ranked team in the East-Wilkes College. Another not so easy opponent that will be waiting for UMass at Wilkes-Barre, Pa. will be Army.

So far this year, the team hasn't won any of the big ones and this Saturday is the biggest of all. Hopefully the little confidence they got last night will go a long way.

Leaman Set For Turning Point

By STEVE CROWE

"We'll be in heaven if we get win No. 7!" That is the battle cry of Coach Jack Leaman's basketball squad as announced at yesterday's Varsity M luncheon. The Minutemen have won six games in a row now, but the most important one of the season will be this Saturday's Yankee Conference showdown against Rhode Island.

According to Leaman and assistant coach, Fan Gaudette, that game will be the turning point of the season for the Minutemen. A win here and they will be sitting on top of the conference with only three games left: Vermont at home and UMaine and UNH away. "And you can bet," said Gaudette, "that with this much on the line (the conference championship and a possible N.I.T. bid) these boys aren't going to let these games get away if we need them."

Coach Leaman commented on the play of a number of his ball players:

"People have been asking me to compare Al Skinner and Julius Erving. Up until awhile ago I couldn't do it. But now I've found something they have in common–their attitude toward the game. We'd be up and in control of the game and Julius would just wink at me and I knew everything was alright...Al turns it on when we need it but when we're ahead he likes to stand around and enjoy the game. We were up by eight, just into the second half against BU. I yelled at Al to do something out there and he went out and scored 10 straight points. Then he came back to the bench, winked and said, 'It's O.K. Coach.'"

"Billy Endicott is the type of player who will miss nine (shots) in a row, and then he looks at you and says, 'Coach, I'll get the next nine.' And you believe him!"

On Captain Tom MacLauglin...When he was offered his starting position back, after Austin had had a couple of bad games, "Mac" told Leaman to stay with the winning lineup.

"Jim Burke is the finest all-around player I've ever coached as far as knowing what to do out on the court," said Leaman. "He's not extra quick, but he has quick hands and a quick mind to make the steals. I'd give up my salary now for $10 dollars for each steal he makes in his career for UMass."

Perhaps Leaman's greatest line was his contrast between Charlie Peters and John Murphy. "Peters destroys his opponent physically. He's a bull with scrapes on his knees and bruises all over. Then you have Murphy...6-8, 220, very dainty. He knows he has to make those twenty footers he takes or I'll put him in knuckle alley."

Manager Bob Powers, back with the team after graduating last year, pointed his contribution to the team. After UConn called time out with the score UMass 20, UConn 5, he turned to Coach Leaman and said, "Well, Coach, I got you this far...now you're on your own."

"A steal and a deal for two more" (Another Barrollism). At any rate it's Easy Al gliding by Mr. Weston for a deuce in the UConn debauchery. Yes Skinner did get 10 in a row that night...MDC Photo by Gib Fullerton.

Ali!!!

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP)-Muhammad Ali slashed a cut over the eye of England's Joe Bugner in the first round yet went the full 12-round distance en route to a unanimous decision at the Las Vegas Convention Center last night.

An 8-1 favorite, the former heavyweight champion from Cherry Hills, N.J., found all he could handle in the 22-year-old European champion, nine years his junior.

Premature? No Way

By EARL BARROLL

Are we premature in our zeal with six games left to play in ballyhooing a UMass basketball trip to the N.I.T.? Yes or no, we aren't alone. Yesterday in the sports section of the Boston Globe, page 54 to be exact, the write-up of the UMass-B.U. game was headlined "UMass dumps BU, sets sights on NIT".

Appeasement? Perhaps. But just recently Northeastern has been splattering itself all over the Globe with NIT and guaranteed this isn't for the sake of print. Two days ago in the New York Times Digger Phelps, head coach of Notre Dame basketball, who had his team in the City to play Fordham was quoted as saying he'd like his Irish in the New York Classic.

Is it too early? No. College sports is not only a game of who has the best records and the best players, although these two factors can't hurt. More than this, it is a game of publicity, and gimmicks and who beats who to the papers, the microphones, and the tournament officials.

Three years ago 7,000 Umies trooped to the Gardens to see UMass almost upset 8th-ranked Marquette in the opening round of the N.I.T. A year later the count was 5,000 for an 11 a.m. game. To this day Jack Leaman is still getting compliments on both the number and the conduct of the fans. This is a trump card for UMass.

We could get into the records of other teams across the nation, we could multiply by the circumference of a basketball and pick the N.C.A.A. field and the remains for the N.I.T. We'll leave this for the officials. For us the job revolves around publicity.

As long as the wins keep coming, the verbiage is golden. Undoubtedly Providence will go N.C.A.A. Does the second best team in New England then merit a trip to New York City? It's no secret that the major conferences across the land are now deluging the N.I.T. committee with pamphlets, player profiles and probably athletic directors, mayors of cities and senators eliciting for their runner-up to get a free pass to the tourney.

What has UMass publicity done about it? Very little, I surmise. There must be at least a thousand or so of yesterday's Globes floating around campus. There is probably a bullion of them in the homes of Umies parents in the greater Boston area. Cut the article out, perhaps include a letter on what UMass basketball is all about and send it to the N.I.T. committee in care of Madison Square Garden. You might also send one to the New York Times.

It will help their decision.

For the remainder of the Yankee Conference season "it's going to be one hell of a dog fight" according to Jack Leaman. The way it stacks up now UMass and UConn are tied for the lead with a 6-2 mark while U.R.I. and B.U. are 4-3.

The following is a list of what each team has to squeeze through before a champ is crowned:

UMass—Vermont at home; U.R.I., U.N.H. and Maine on the road. UConn—B.U. and Vermont at home; U.R.I. and Maine away. Rhode Island—UMass and UConn at home; at U.N.H. and B.U. Boston University—home against U.N.H. Vermont and U.R.I. at UConn.

Breaking it down, the Terriers and Rams have one less game to play than the other two which could result in a percentage type deal. The Minutemen and the Huskies have very similar roads to travel. "The only good thing about," says Leaman, "is that UConn has to go through the same thing we have to."

The basketball movement of the year so far belongs to Al Skinner during the recent UMass-B.C. game at the Springfield Civic Center. Throughout the contest Will Morrison who made his fame on the playgrounds of Boston was taunting the ever present brilliance of Skinner.

It is a rule of playground ball that when challenged, you take the man to the hoop and make him pay. On this occasion it was late in an already decided game and someone for the Minutemen threw up a 25-footer that both Al and Morrison converged on for the rebound.

Skinner (6'4) soared over the 6'5 Morrison, grabbed the ball with both hands, landed, proceeded to give Morrison a series of baseline moves that blew his mind out right there and then shoveled a neat pass to Tom Austin for an easy layup.

It's no wonder that Leaman says of Skinner, "He has the best snake moves in New England. He goes to the basket better than anyone in New England. He has to be a first team all-New England."

C.C. Board Supports $5,000 Chess Match

By CINDY GONET

The Campus Center Board of Governors last night approved a motion supporting a $5,000 Chess tournament to be sponsored by the Chess Club, approved the designation of the Governor's Lounge as a "quiet" study area; and ruled meeting rooms in the Campus Center cannot be used for academic purposes on a gratis basis.

The Chess Club bid was supported by the Board, for December, 1973, because it's location in the Campus Center could serve to bring profits to the hotel and food services in an admittedly dead time of the season. The fund would guarantee prize money for the tournament.

The Governor's Lounge in the Student Union will be specified as a "quite" study area. The management must provide the necessary equipment, such as desks, chairs, and adequate lighting.

Another motion said the meeting rooms in the Campus Center could not be used for academic purposes. The Chairman of the Board, Richard Nelson, has the power to administer this policy.

The Board of Governors approved that $375 be appropriated out of unallocated funds for the purchase of a Foot Ball machine in the Games Room.

Unanimously passed was a motion to waive the $50 fee for the Boltwood-Belchertown Project in their use of the Student Union Ballroom on February 22.

A motion was rejected which could have granted the Campus Center permission to acquire audio-visual equipment, such as tape recorders, microphone platforms, projectors, tape recorders, and several amplifiers.

The Committee had originally received merely a list and estimated cost of the various equipment requested.

The motion to approve a $215

SGA Proposes Students Oversee 'Student Affairs'

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

The Student Government Association (SGA) has just unveiled a plan which, if adopted by the University, would make Student Affairs "accountable to the students it serves," according to Jim O'Donoghue, author of the proposal.

The proposed plan would create a new Community Policy Council to oversee the operations of the Student Affairs Division. Student Affairs, presently the domain of Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert Gage, includes the residential areas, health services, financial aid, and admissions.

The proposal would have to be accepted by Chancellor Randolph Bromery, O'Donoghue said, before it could be enacted. It is being discussed this morning by Gage, O'Donoghue, SGA President Larry Ladd, and Student Senator Elliott Sherman.

The Community Policy Council, CPC, would have the power to determine the policies of Student Affairs, to review personnel and budgets, and to establish a grievance procedure. The CPC would also evaluate the performance of Gage and have the responsibility to select and evaluate his staff.

While unconfirmed, there have been reports that administrators are unhappy with the proposal.

The CPC would have a member from every student "policy unit," such as, the area governments and the Health Services Advisory Board; a delegate from the Graduate Senate, and a delegate appointed by the SGA president, and one Head of Residence chosen by all the Heads of Residence.

The Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs, the SGA President, and the Chairperson of the Student Senate Matters Committee would be ex-officio non-voting members.

The Board of Trustees, the Chancellor and the Undergraduate Student Senate would have review and veto power over any CPC action.

A national first place safety award, just received by the University of Massachusetts urban vehicle design team, is displayed by the team's faculty leader, Paul Tartaglia, left, and UMass senior Frank Voss of Medford, the team's construction and test supervisor. A vehicle designed by a team of students won the award, one of 14 first places, at the North American Student Urban Vehicle Design Competition finals last August in Michigan. The plaque reads: "For consideration of safety in design and development of new concepts in safety systems." The UMass hybrid-hydraulic vehicle will be on display Feb. 21 and 22 at the Engineering Show in Springfield's Civic Center.

Users Snipe At Gun Controls

By NILS J. BRUZELIUS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Gun users swarmed over Gardner Auditorium at the State House Thursday to oppose stiffer gun control legislation, including a bill to ban possession of handguns entirely.

Most members of the Public Safety Committee, which heard the testimony, were as hostile as the audience to the bill. The crowd which packed the 750-seat auditorium chimed in frequently with applause or groans and hissing.

While the hearing was still in progress, the office of the Senate chairman, Sen. Stanley J. Zarod, D-Springfield, issued a statement that he believed the state's existing gun laws "should be left alone."

The House chairman, Rep. Ralph E. Sirianni, Jr., D-Winthrop, and most other members of the committee were equally critical of the proposed legislation.

Controls Attacked

Scores of legislators and spokesmen for gun clubs voiced opposition to new gun controls and most of them focused on the measure filed by Sen. Jack H. Backman, D-Brookline.

Backman, the first to testify, opened by asking the crowd, "Don't shoot," a remark that brought a wave of hissing.

"It is time once and for all that our country do something about its two major problems–drugs and violence, drugs and guns," he said. "We are addicted to the use of guns just as we are to the use of drugs."

He said his bill would "ban completely from Massachusetts the ownership and possession of handguns, except for police, security guards and licensed gun clubs."

He debated repeatedly with members of the committee, many of whom argued that guns were necessary for self defense.

"Don't you think if the judiciary handed out stiffer fines and penalties to criminals using guns you could accomplish the same kind of thing you attempt to do by abolishing handguns?" asked Sirianni.

Recreation or Self-Defense

Backman contended most guns are not used for self-defense but for recreation. "If they need a handgun for a recreational purpose, I say, 'Too bad, brother, take up another sport,' " he said. There were groans from the crowd.

Middlesex County Sheriff John J. Buckley took a stronger stand, saying he would favor elimination of the provision allowing ownership of handguns through gun clubs.

"There are too many guns in the hands of too many people resulting in too many violent crimes," he said. "Studies have shown that three out of every four homicide victims know their attacker; four out of five times the shooting is the result of an argument; and over half the time the participants have been drinking."

"If the gun is available," he continued, "the impulse is for a person to reach for it. Inaction on this issue, indirectly, makes us the ones who pull the trigger."

Assassination Attempt Cited

Buckley cited an assassination attempt in the Philippines against Pope Paul VI by a man wielding a knife, and said the attacker had been unable to obtain a gun.

"The difference between a gun and a knife is that the Pope is alive," he said. "If the Pope had been in America he'd be dead."

A. Elliot Goodman, an attorney representing the state Council of Sportsmen's Clubs, suggested that stiff gun control legislation was fostered by persons wishing to overthrow the U.S. government.

Laws "Oppressive"

"It isn't easy to acquire a gun unless you do it illegally," he said, adding that existing gun laws "are becoming more and more oppressive to us. It is an irony that these bills supposedly aimed at the criminal can only function effectively against law-abiding people."

Malcolm Donald, a retired Westfield police chief who is a gun club member and instructor, criticized Backman's plan to have privately owned guns kept in the clubs.

He said that his club "was broken into twice in one day," and that keeping guns in the clubs would invite attempts to steal them.

Bowles Hits Harvard Hiring

By FRAN SCHUMER

CAMBRIDGE—Harvard Associate Professor of Economics Samuel S. Bowles, who has been recommended for a tenured position in the economics department at UMass, last night linked hiring practices at Harvard to what he termed "the University's desire to maintain a system of power and privilege."

Bowles was denied tenure at Harvard along with another junior faculty member last December allegedly because of his radical interpretation of economics.

"Our differences with the economics department are clearly political," Bowles told a sympathetic crowd of 180. He claimed that he was "fired" because his political and economic goals threatened the department's existence.

"What's useful to us in overthrowing the system is clearly not useful to them in administering it," he said.

Bowles related the policies in Harvard's economics department to those of the federal government. He said that policy makers are inherently biased by their desire to create conceptual models that benefit those in control.

He said radicals are at odds with the system because they're more interested in serving those who "suffer under capitalism than those who serve it."

Bowles concluded on an optimistic note. He urged the audience not to concentrate their efforts on those who disagree with the radical economic perspective but to identify with those who are against the system.

"We are not here tonight for an intellectual debate," he said, "we are part of a social movement responding to the failure of liberalism."

The Harvard professor taught one seminar at the UMass Labor Center last semester and received favorable comments from most students who participated According to staff at the Center he "has a wonderful relationship with the students."

And Bowles' academic credentials have been rated highly by the acting head of the UMass economics department, Dean Alfange, Jr.

He is currently renting a house in Ashfield and is on a leave of absence from Harvard this semester to work on a book.

Alfange recommended to Vice Chancellor Gluckstern last week that Bowles be offered a tenured position in the fall of 1974. A decision from Gluckstern's office on the recommendation is expected before the end of February.

Boston Police Move To Control Corruption

BOSTON (AP) — Boston Police Commissioner Robert J. diGrazia has created a special watchdog agency to combat corruption in the police department.

"We are looking for corruptors so that we don't end up with the corrupted," diGrazia said Thursday. "We're not cracking down as such, but if something comes to our attention we will let them division and unit commanders know about it."

The Special Investigation Unit (SIU) will be headed by Capt. Joseph F. Doyle, who was named a deputy superintendent Thursday. Members of the unit will serve on a voluntary basis and be required to file a financial statement and take a lie detector test each year.

The SIU will concentrate on gambling, after-hours establishments, narcotics, prostitution and other areas associated with police corruption, diGrazia said.

"This unit's sole responsibility will be providing the commissioner with complete and accurate information on the maintenance of departmental integrity," he said. The police commissioner intends to hold each commanding officer in the department personally accountable for the discharge of this responsibility."

diGrazia said the department was also establishing a special post office box in the city where citizens and officers could report information on illegal activity. He said only he and Doyle would have keys to the box and the information would be kept confidential.

"What we now will have is 2,800 officers and 600,000 citizens looking to ferret out problems," he said.

request for a permanent dance floor in the Blue Wall was tabled. The move was appropriated to a specific committee.

On February 21, Grinnan said he would present a statement detailing how many student employees were receiving financial aid.

Also requested in the February 14 minutes, was the appropriation of storage space behind the Candy Counter. It was estimated by the Finance Committee to cost less than $300.

Presently being debated, is the possibility of expanded bar facilities in the Campus Center Complex (back of the "Hatch").

Times were discussed when members of the Committee would be available to meet with Food Services staff for discussion on the proposal.

Frank Cotter, a member of the Board said nothing had been done to investigate the possibility of a campus tow truck. Currently, students are paying nearly $20 in towing fees to Anderson Towing for the return of their vehicles.

In the Finance Committee minutes of February 14, Mr. Terry Grinnan, manager of the Campus Center, reported that the budget for fiscal year 1974 was being prepared on schedule.

Grinnan also reported that there was $500,000 in surpluses from the previous fiscal years. This money can be applied towards:

1. Reducing the student fee next year
2. Major capital expenditures, such as the renovation of the Student Union
3. Subsidizing the added cost which permanent financing would incur when it is begun.

Grinnan described how the amount of the student fee is determined. Until now, it has been the difference between operating costs and revenues. The committee instructed Grinnan to produce the amount of space used by the various activities in the buildings.

"Symmetry Festival" At Smith

A "Symmetry Festival" - an opportunity for the college community and area residents to discover and explore some of the manifestations of symmetry - is the theme of the Smith College Vanderbilt Symposium, which will be held February 16 - 20 at the college.

The Festival is made possible by the Sarah Sanderson Vanderbilt Memorial Fund, established in 1955 to enrich the cultural and intellectual life of the college, and is under the direction of Marjorie L. Senechal, assistant professor of mathematics, George M. Fleck, associate professor of chemistry, and Allan Ludman, assistant professor of geology.

Throughout the Festival there will be a variety of exhibits in the McConnell Hall Foyer and Burton Hall Lobby. The exhibits will emphasize the many facets of symmetry with material from the arts, mathematics, literature and the sciences. Arthur Loeb of Harvard University will speak on "Color Symmetry and its Significance for Science" today at 11 a.m. in Wright Hall Auditorium.

One of the highlights of the Festival will be the lecture-demonstration of the Cambridge Court Dancers Saturday at 8 p.m. in Scott Gymnasium. The group, directed by Ingrid Brainard, will perform authentic 15th and 16th century dances. The performance will be followed by lessons in Renaissance dancing.

Mr. Loeb will give a second lecture at 4 p.m. Monday in the Browsing Room of the Neilson Library. His topic will be "A Renaissance Man in a Competitive Culture". That evening at 8 p.m. in Sage Hall faculty and students of the department of music will present Bach's "The Musical Offering". And on Tuesday at 4 p.m. Alice B. Dickinson, professor of mathematics, will offer a demonstration of "Change-ringing: Theory and Practice."

Senate Recommends Dorm Janitors Area Controlled

By STEPHEN FINE

The Rents and Fees Committee of the Student Senate last night passed a motion recommending that control of the maintenance services in dormitories be transferred from Physical Plant to the Housing Authority's Residential Area Business Managers.

Mike Gregory, Chairperson of the committee, said the purpose of the motion was to give the people financially closest to the areas control over the people who work for them. "This is not getting more for your money, but rather getting things done faster around the dorm areas," he said.

The committee also examined a proposed guideline for the spending of dormitory rental income from the Housing Authority for support of academic programs within residence areas.

When asked by Mike Gregory what would happen if an area's programs exceeded the two dollar amount, Hampton said that, hypothetically, the program would have to be cut. Gregory responded by questioning whether an area's expenditure on educational equipment should be limited by the amount of people in the area.

One major restriction outlined in the proposed guidelines is that the Authority's monies would have to be used solely for residence hall educational purposes and that they could not be spent on the support of any academic department.

Charles Hampton, Financial Manager of Residence Halls for the Housing Administration, said that presently there was no policy for the expenditures of money on educational programs for the residential areas that these proposed guidelines were drawn up to meet an existing need.

He said that $18,000 had already been spent this year by dormitories on educational equipment. "The area governments buy educational equipment like blackboards under the category of entertainment," he said.

The major proposal drawn up by Hampton and Michael West, Assistant Dean of Students, is that the educational account for any area would be restricted in funding by the Housing and Building Authority to two dollars a bed. This would be put into an account called the Area Educational Budget.

"...There's A Great Deal Of Hurt In Your Heart..."

By KATHRYN JOHNSON

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP)—"How can you say it's a war without heroes," said Louise Mulligan of her husband and other returning prisoners of war, "when you look into their faces.

"They are the real heroes," said the attractive gray-eyed blonde in an interview in her home after her first visit in seven years with her husband, Navy Capt. James A. Mulligan Jr.

The prisoners, added the mother of six sons, "have a great message."

I hope it will help to bind some of the wounds the country has suffered from the Vietnam war.

"I hope the country will gain a greater strength through looking at them. They survived through their own stamina, their own strength and their own courage."

"There's no way," Mrs. Mulligan added, sitting in the den dotted with military emblems and pictures of jet aircraft, "that you can get back the lost years. But you can start anew.

"I won't say I feel bitterness. But the hurt . . . there's a great deal of hurt in your heart when someone you love so much is going through such trauma and pain."

Then she added:

"My husband feels he was privileged to serve his country. He's done his part. You don't look backward, you look forward."

POWs 'Lived On Loyalty' In Captivity

TRAVIS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — Operation Homecoming poured a steady stream of freed U.S. prisoners of war into their homeland Thursday.

One arrival said they "lived on loyalty" to their country during the dark days in Communist captivity.

Tears welled in the eyes of the first man back Thursday, Navy Capt. James B. Stockdale, as he thanked his countrymen for their loyalty to Americans held captive for years in Vietnam.

Limping off from the first of two planes arriving from Clark Air Base in the Philippines Thursday, he said, "The men who follow me down that ramp know what loyalty means because they have been living with loyalty, living on loyalty, the past several years.

He appeared gaunt and old beyond his 49 years–the last 7-1/2 of them a captive–as he added in a hesitating, emotion-filled voice: "Loyalty to each other, loyalty to the military ethic, loyalty to our commander in chief."

Stockdale, who later flew on to San Diego for a reunion with his wife and four sons, paused and continued: "As the poet said 4,000 years ago, 'There is nothing to sweet as to return from the sea and hear the sound of raindrops on the roof.'"

Then, after another pause, he said, "America, America, God shed His grace on thee."

Each craft flying back Thursday carried 20 repatriates, as did another which returned Wednesday–a total of 60. All came 8,010 miles across the Pacific from Clark, where 142 former prisoners tasted their first freedom after their release Monday.

Two other men returned early on special flights Tuesday because of illnesses in their families.

The first Starlifter to land Thursday carried Army Capt. Johnnie Ray, 25, Pauls Valley, Okla., the first Viet Cong captive to return. All the previous returnees had come from the so-called "Hanoi Hilton" prison in the north.

The second craft touched down 45 minutes after the 20 men on the first plane were flown on to military hospitals throughout the country.

At Clark, officials announced that three Starlifter jets would fly 60 more men toward home Friday. Clark also prepared to receive 20 additional prisoners Hanoi said would be released soon, leaving 399 men still in Communist hands.

One of the men aboard the second plane to arrive at Travis Thursday declined to get off when it landed, as has been customary with the other men.

A military spokesman quoted Army Pvt. Ferdinand Rodriguez of Brooklyn, N.Y., as saying, "I'm sorry, I don't want to get off. I don't feel well."

Military authorities declined to discuss his condition further.

Rodriguez, a 24-year-old Puerto Rico native captured in South Vietnam April 14, 1968, stayed aboard the giant jet, which later continued with 13 others toward military hospitals in the East.

11 States Exempt POWs From Tax

By KRISTIN LILJEHOLM
Associated Press Writer

Freed prisoners of war returning to homes in some states will find themselves liberated from a burden most of their fellow citizens face this year: payment of state income taxes.

In Maryland, Nebraska and Wisconsin, state income tax laws are based on the federal law which last April exempted military pay due POWs and the missing in action from taxes during their imprisonment. And in Oklahoma a law exempting POWs from state income taxes during their time in prison has been on the books since 1971.

Legislative action is underway in six more states--California, Georgia, Kansas, Minnesota, North Carolina and Pennsylvania--to pass similar tax forgiveness bills.

No one was sure how many men in Minnesota would be affected by such a law. "It's only a handful--but it's a significant handful," a governor's aide said.

California has 278 men listed as POWs or MIAs, more than any other state, according to Air Force Col. Chester Taylor. He testified this week in support of the California bill, which Gov. Ronald Reagan has said he will sign into law "just as quickly as I can get it onto my desk."

In Pennsylvania, where a state law already exempts income of servicemen in combat zones from the 2.3 per cent state tax, the legislature is making "doubly certain" POWs are covered with a new bill introduced in the House on Tuesday.

The situation is different in Indiana and most other states.

Indiana's Deputy Revenue Commissioner Virgil B. Berry noted high-ranking POWs coming home to the Hoosier State could find themselves owing as much as $800 in state adjusted gross income tax. That would be the case, for instance, of an officer held for six years who had about $70,000 coming in back pay.

The state's present exemptions--including $2,000 a year for servicemen--would amount to only $30,000 over the six years for the officer, Berry said.

But in Indiana, as in nine other states, the returnees will find other legislative gifts in the form of cash bonuses or tuition breaks at state universities.

Rodgers Asks Congress For Aid To North Viets

By LEWIS GULICK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Secretary of State William P. Rogers asked Thursday for congressional approval of postwar aid to North Vietnam and for healing of the wounds at home caused by the long Southeast Asian conflict.

Rogers predicted that reluctant legislators will in the end be persuaded to make an administration— sought "small investment" in postwar reconstruction help to all of Indochina. He portrayed this as needed for a lasting peace.

In an emotional defense of administration policies of refusing amnesty to draft-dodgers and deserters while advocating reconciliation with the former enemy, Rogers told a news conference:

"As far as the administration is concerned, we want very much to get on with the business of peace and reconstruction here."

"And I can't think of anything that gets us off to a better start than to watch these returning POWs. If that doesn't make America proud, then I don't know what will.

"I think it is time that all of us took a little pride in our country."

Rogers' 50-minute meeting with reporters preceded his departure late next week for the Vietnam peace guarantee conference that opens in Paris Feb. 26.

He remained optimistic about the carrying-through of the peace accord despite repeated allegations of cease-fire violations. He pictured current outbreaks of fighting in parts of South Vietnam as expected "local squabbles" and added: "We are confident the cease-fire will be carried out and will be effective in South Vietnam..."

He also said he expects and hopes that a cease-fire agreement will be reached in neighboring Laos by the end of next week.

In wide-ranging remarks Rogers made these other points:

—The U.S.-Cuba antihijacking agreement he signed Thursday morning means "there will be no safe haven for hijackers either in Cuba or the United States."

But the accord does not signal a change in over-all U.S. policy toward the Communist Castro regime. On the possibility of Washington-Havana reconciliation, he said the Cuban government is continuing its antagonistic posture toward the United States and "we don't note any change in the Cuban attitude."

In Brief

US Bombing in Laos Increases

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Pentagon disclosed Thursday that U.S. bombers have intensified strikes against Communist-led forces trying to drive Laotian government troops out of key positions before an expected cease-fire.

Maj. Gen. Daniel James told newsmen that American pilots have flown about 100 more daily strikes this week than they did last week "because of increased enemy activity and further requests for assistance by the Royal Lao government."

Nixon Proposes Ecology Measures

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon Thursday proposed new legislation to permit establishment of protected wilderness areas in the eastern states, set federal safety standards for drinking water, and regulate commercial fishing off U.S. coasts.

The new proposals were included in the President's 1973 message to Congress on environment and resources, which, for the most part, urged Congressional action on bills previously proposed.

Including agriculture within "resources," Nixon also proposed to eliminate within a few years direct federal subsidy payments for farm production.

But he proposed to retain the system of federal payments for farmland which is idled to prevent over- production.

US, Cuba Hijack Accord

By KENNETH J. FREED
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — the United States and Cuba signed an agreement Thursday to prosecute or extradite future hijackers.

But the five-year accord signed separately in Washington and Havana retained the traditional American policy of sheltering political refugees.

Because it was an executive agreement and not a treaty, the document did not require Senate ratification and went into effect immediately.

Secretary of State William P. Rogers, who signed the agreement for the United States, said it served notice to hijackers that they will have "no safe haven" in the United States or Cuba.

The agreement, signed simultaneously by Rogers in his office here and Cuban Foreign Minister Raul Roa in Havana, defines a hijacker as "any person who hereafter seizes, removes, appropriates or diverts from its normal route or activities an aircraft or vessel registered under the laws of one of the parties and brings it to the territory of the other party."

Such a person, the agreement provides, "shall either be returned to the party of registry...to be tried by the courts of that party in conformity with its laws or be brought before the courts of the party whose territory was reached for trial."

Rogers told reporters later, "I expect there will be more prosecutions than extraditions," indicating that hijackers can expect to serve their sentences in foreign prisons.

Both countries pledged to try hijackers under existing laws providing "the most severe penalty according to the circumstances and the seriousness of the acts."

One possible loophole was closed by a clause stating that extradition is mandatory if the hijacker has not broken the laws of the nation to which he fled.

Regarding political asylum, the agreement says a nation receiving a refugee "may take into consideration any extenuating or mitigating circumstances in those cases in which the persons responsible for the acts were being sought for strictly political reasons and were in real and imminent danger of death without a viable alternative for leaving the country."

This does not apply, however, if the refugee extorted money or threatened to harm "the members of the crew, passengers, or other persons in connection with the hijacking."

When asked if the tight restrictions on defining a political refugee had limited the right to grant political asylum, U.S. officials said they had not because the country receiving such a person would determine of its own if the conditions required the refugee to flee.

US Dollar Value Steadies; Selling Wave Crisis Over

LONDON (AP)—The U.S. dollar steadied on Europe's money markets Thursday for the first time since it was devalued Monday night, suggesting that the world monetary crisis of the past two weeks is coming to an end.

Bankers and other financial sources interviewed here warned that a number of uncertainties remain which could well keep money markets unsettled for the next few days or even weeks. But none predicted a further crisis selling wave of dollars in the immediate future such as the one last week which forced Washington to devalue.

Foreign exchange dealers said there were signs that money markets were adjusting to the dollar's new exchange rates after the 10 per cent devaluation. These rates include a permitted high or ceiling level, a central level of parity, and a permitted low or floor level.

Most of the world's leading foreign exchange markets were closed Monday and Tuesday. When they reopened Wednesday, the devalued dollar started generally at the new ceiling rates and moved mover or less steadily down. But in much of Europe on Thursday the dollar began moving back up toward the new ceiling rates.

The dollar improved in Frankfurt, London, Paris, Amsterdam and Milan. It fell in Brussels, Zurich and Tokyo. The generally steady pattern, however, was the dollar's best daily performance this month.

Gold, however, hit record highs in Europe for the second straight day.

"An ominous sign," a French banker said. "Confidence hasn't yet been restored."

Normally, a rapidly rising gold price is a sign of lagging confidence in European centers gold jumped more than a dollar an ounce Thursday to close at record highs of $73.37 in Zurich, $73.62 in London and $75.28 in Paris.

A rise in gold prices, however, had been generally expected as one result of the dollar devaluation. It remained to be seen whether the gold market activity by itself would touch off more monetary trouble.

Orange Moon Soil 3 Billion Years Old

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
AP Science Writer

STONY BROOK, N.Y. (AP)—The orange soil that evoked a burst of excitement from the Apollo 17 astronauts on the moon has turned out to be billions of years older than astronaut-geologist Harrison H. Schmitt thought it was.

"That's the big surprise," said Dr. Oliver Schaeffer, head of a lunar analysis team, at a news conference Thursday. "It really looked like you had something young."

The team of scientists at the State University of New York at Stony Brook placed the age of the orange soil at 3.71 billion years. Schmitt told a news conference last Jan. 5 it looked about 10 million years old.

The orange soil came from an area with a dark mantle near Shorty Crater in the Taurus-Littrow Valley that looked as though it were of volcanic origin.

If the orange soil were only 10 million years old, or even somewhat older, that would have been evidence of volcanic activity in the relatively recent past. The 3.71-billion-year age, however, suggests that volcanic activity stopped long ago.

"It can now be reasonably stated," Schaeffer said, "that volcanism on the moon was a phenomena which ended about three billion years ago."

Schaeffer said the orange dust likely reached the surface by being dug up by the impact of a meteor or meteorite.

The orange soil looks more a very dark red and black under normal earth lighting but under a microscope about half the grains do appear somewhat orange and the other half black. The color comes from the high titanium and iron content of the glass.

A basalt fragment found near the Shorty Crater was dated at 3.76 million years, indicating that both the orange soil and the surrounding lunar surface crystallized at about the same time, Schaeffer said.

The orange soil was among 249 pounds of rocks brought back from the Apollo 17 lunar exploration, that last planned Apollo flight to the moon, which ended with a flawless splashdown last Dec. 19.

The oldest lunar sample, returned from highlands by Apollo 16, was dated at 4.25 billion years.

In the dating process, a .1 gram sample was exposed to radiation at the nearby Brookhaven National Laboratory to convert potassium 39 to the rare gas argon 39. The sample was then analyzed at Stony Brook to measure the relative content of the argon 39 and argon 40 which is produced naturally over the ages.

The 3.71 billion-year figure was pronounced accurate to within plus or minus 60 million years.

US Troop Level In Nam Lowest

SAIGON (AP)—American troop strength in Vietnam has fallen to its lowest level in nearly a decade and the United States is fast approaching the halfway mark in getting all its military forces out by the March 28 deadline, the U.S. Command reported Thursday.

The command said another 1,465 American troops were withdrawn during the last four days, dropping the U.S. troop level to 15,744. That is the lowest since July 1963.

At peak strength in April 1969—almost four years ago—543,000 U.S. troops were in Vietnam. That had dropped to 23,000 by the time the cease-fire officially went into effect Jan. 28.

Returning POW Shows His Colors

CLARK AIR BASE, Philippines (AP)—Capt. Galand D. Kramer is taking home Friday a unique souvenir from his prison camp in North Vietnam for his 9-year-old son, Todd—a secretly made sign that says: "God Bless America and Nixon."

Kramer, 31, from Tulsa, Okla., a POW since he was shot down over North Vietnam July 12, 1966, shocked and delighted American officials at Hanoi and Clark Monday when he pulled a handkerchief with the blue lettering out of his pocket and waved it.

American officers in Hanoi were stunned when they saw Karmer, who was lined up with 115 other POWs ready to be released, enthusiastically wave it for about 30 seconds. The officers were worried that North Vietnamese officials might pull Kramer out of line and refuse to release him because of the act.

"It was an expression of my feelings and I wanted them, the North Vietnamese, to know about it," Kramer recalled in an interview Thursday.

A senior officer who was in Hanoi when Kramer pulled the sign out recalled: "We were worried. The kid had a lot of guts."

But nothing happened and three hours later Kramer stepped out onto the hot concrete tarmac at Clark and again flashed the sign, along with a big grin, as he walked from the plane to a waiting hospital bus.

Food Leads Price Rise

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Wholesale prices went up sharply in January for the second straight month, the government said Thursday, with the price of food leading the increases.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported that the wholesale price index rose 1.3 per cent on an unadjusted basis last month and 1.1 per cent on a seasonally adjusted basis. Although the rise was smaller than that of December, it was still a big jump in prices at the wholesale level.

The bureau said that prices of farm products and processed foods went up by 3.3 per cent. Adjusted for seasonal variations, the BLS figured this increase at 2.9 per cent.

The bureau noted significant price rises for meats, fresh vegetables, eggs and processed poultry.

Also, there were big rises in such farm products as livestock, live poultry plant and animal fibers, milk and wheat.

The report presaged price increases in these items at the retail level.

The BLS blamed the January increase in food prices on the impact of severe weather and strong export demand.

During the six months that ended in January, wholesale prices of farm products and processed foods and feeds went up at an annual rate of 26.2 per cent. In the last three months ending in January, they have gone up at an annual rate of 45.1 per cent, the report said.

During the period of wage and price controls, food prices at the wholesale level rose by 16.4 per cent, the BLS added.

The January rise is likely to mean sharp increases in the consumer price index in the next few months. The administration has forecast that prices will fall to an annual rate of increase of about 2.5 per cent by the end of the year.

Meantime, a panel of economists for the Business Council reported that it expected inflation to average about 3.5 per cent for 1972. This would be higher than the 3 per cent predicted by the Nixon administration. Prices rose by 3 per cent in 1972.

Boston Man Held in Coed Death

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)—A Boston man arraigned under tight security in the strangling death of Boston University coed Damaris Synge Gillispie pleaded innocent in Middlesex Superior Court Thursday.

Anthony Jackson, 33, charged with murder and kidnap, was ordered held without bail. No trial date was set.

Miss Gillispie, 22, disappeared when she left her Cambridge apartment Nov. 29 to hitch a ride to her part-time job as a waitress in a Boston jazz club. Her nude, decomposed body was found in woods north of Boston Feb. 3.

She is one of eight young women to die of strangulation or suffocation in the Boston area since last summer. All the cases remain unsolved.

POW To Boston

CHELSEA, Mass. (AP)—The Boston Naval Hospital here was expected to receive its first former prisoner of war early Friday with the arrival of Navy Lt. Cmdr. Leonard C. Eastman, Navy officials said Thursday. Lt. Cmdr. William J. North said Eastman, 39, who was shot down June 21, 1966 while flying a reconnaissance mission over North Vietnam, was due to land at the South Weymouth Naval Air Station about 12:30 a.m., and would be brought to the Naval Hospital by car.

Crib Deaths Investigation

BOSTON (AP)—More than 10,000 infants continue to die each year in this country from a disease known commonly as crib deaths, and researchers say they do not know what is the cause of the mysterious ailment that has claimed children's lives since Biblical times.

Two University of Washington researchers, speaking at a Boston seminar which is being conducted this week at the Children's Hospital Medical Center, say crib deaths appear to be continuing at the same incidence they have for years, claiming three infants out of every 1,000 live births.

The disease, in which babies die quietly in their sleep without showing any symptoms or giving their parents any warning, has been around since "Biblical times," a spokesman said.

Studds Heads 200-Year Committee

WASHINGTON (AP)—Rep. Gerry. E. Studds, D-Mass., has been appointed to the American Revolution Bicentennial Commission.

Studds replaced Rep. James A. Burke, D-Mass., on the commission. Burke asked to be replaced because of his work on the House Ways and Means Committee.

Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., also serves on the commission.

Boston State Takeover Ends

BOSTON (AP)—About a dozen women students Thursday afternoon left the central communications center in the Boston State College administration building after the administration agreed to give serious consideration to various demands.

One of the demands was establishment of a day care center for the children of faculty members, students and staff. The administration said a faculty committee would look into the feasibility of obtaining federal funding for the project. The administration also agreed on amnesty for the demonstrators and promised to set aside a room for a women's center.

The women also asked that 50 per cent of all athletic fees be allocated for women's athletics. President Kermit Morrissey said this would be taken under consideration.

On another point, the ending of salary differentials between men and women faculty members, Morrissey said this is already being investigated in a number of state colleges.

Meir at Brandeis

WALTHAM, Mass. (AP)—Brandeis University announced Thursday that Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir will be at Brandeis in early March to accept an honorary degree during a campus convocation marking the dual 25th anniversaries of the university and the state of Israel.

University president Marver H. Bernstein said, "In honoring Prime Minister Meir, Brandeis is not only paying tribute to an extraordinary woman, but also to the state of Israel and to Brandeis University itself, both of which were but dreams a mere quarter-century ago."

Testimony Reveals Ellsberg Authorized To Take Papers

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP)—When Daniel Ellsberg picked up copies of the Pentagon Papers in Washington, D.C. in 1969, security officers at the Rand Corp. ignored most government security manual rules for handling of top-secret documents, a defense attorney showed Thursday.

On cross-examination by attorney Leonard Boudin, a Rand security officer testified that a thorough search of Rand's files failed to produce the required top-secret records which were required if the Pentagon Papers were to be treated as top secret.

Rand security chief Richard Best said the only form on file regarding the transaction was a "courier designation" which declared Ellsberg was authorized to get the Pentagon's secret study of the Vietnam war. But he said no record was made by the top secret control officer, no special cover sheets were placed on the documents and no top-secret control number was given to the papers. Jurors were then shown pages from the manuals which required all these provisions for handling of top-secret documents.

Boudin was attempting to show the government's two latest pieces of evidence—the Defense Department's industrial security manual and the Rand Corp.'s security manual—did not apply to the Pentagon Papers. His contention is that Ellsberg didn't violate any rules in the books because they didn't apply.

The government won admission of the manuals on Wednesday over heated defense objections. A key defense contention at the trial is that the copies of the Pentagon Papers used by Ellsberg were not sent to Rand for any government work but rather for storage by three "private parties"—defense department officials who were leaving government. They say the three officials gave Ellsberg permission to see the Papers.

Ellsberg, 41, and Anthony Russo, 36, both former researchers at the Rand "think tank" in Santa Monica, Calif., are charged with espionage, conspiracy and theft for copying the Pentagon study which was later leaked to news media.

Prices, Skirts Surprise POW

By JEANNINE YEOMANS
Associated Press Writer

TRAVIS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP)—The wife of an ex-POW, emerging from a happy reunion, reported Thursday her husband was surprised by high prices and short skirts, and somewhat distressed by antiwar activities.

Helen Brunstrom of Tacoma, Wash., said the only sad part of her reunion Wednesday with her husband, Air Force Lt. Col. Alan Brunstrom, was finding a shabby pair of sandals he had worn in the prison camp and a tiny tin cup and spoon that was "all he ate with for seven years."

When she pulled them from his duffle bag, she said, her husband told her, "Put those things away and don't ever touch them again."

Mrs. Brunstrom described her reunion at a news conference with the wives of Air Force Lt. William Arcuri of Yuba City, Calif., and Air Force Capt. Terry Geloneck of Beale AFB, Calif.

Geloneck and Arcuri were copilots of a B52 bomber shot down last December over North Vietnam.

Mrs. Brunstrom said her husband thought the December bombings helped win his release and added that he had told her the POWs had been unhappy with antiwar activities in the United States.

"Over-all, the husbands didn't appreciate the antiwar activities of their relatives. The men weren't too proud of that," Mrs. Brunstrom said. She did not elaborate.

The wives said their husbands repeatedly told them that patriotism had buoyed their spirits in prison. All three plan to continue their military careers, they said.

Asked about her husband's reaction to changes in the United States since his capture 82 months ago on April 22, 1966, Mrs. Brunstrom, 39, replied: "He was amazed at how short all the skirts are. Yes, I did get a little jealous about that."

She said her husband was most surprised at the prices when they shopped for clothing at the base store Wednesday night.

Wood Says 'Hard Times' Are Coming

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP)—Robert C. Wood, president of the University of Massachusetts, Thursday said public higher education is in for "hard times" under the Nixon administration.

Wood said Nixon's budget proposal for the next fiscal year represents a policy in which "you give with one hand and take with the other."

Increases in federal funding for some programs such as revenue sharing, he said, are more than offset with cuts in other areas. The UMass president predicted that the university would lose $3 million in federal funds under the President's budget proposal.

Wood added that local elected officials are faced with a "difficult balancing act" because they will be expected to pick up the costs of programs such as model cities while holding down the tax rate.

'Mr. Peepers' Dies

HOLLYWOOD (AP)—Comedian Wally Cox, the meek, bespectacled Mr. Peepers on a popular television series in the early 1950s, was found dead of a heart attack in his home Thursday. He was 48.

Cox was found sprawled on his bed about 7:30 by his wife, Patricia. After an autopsy, county Coroner Dr. Thomas Noguchi said death was due to a coronary occlusion, a heart malfunction.

Cox was a regular on a current television quiz show, "Hollywood Squares," but he was best known for his portrayal of the shy science teacher, Robinson Peepers, on television 20 years ago.

"I wish people would forget Mr. Peepers," Cox said recently. "Peepers was just one character I played."

"Mr. Peepers" was popular in 1953, but lost favor in 1954 and was canceled in 1955.

Cox starred in another television series, "The Adventures of Hiram Holliday," in 1956, and later appeared in Las Vegas night clubs and made numerous television panel and quiz show appearances, but remained, to the public, the owlish Mr. Peepers.

When he wasn't performing, Cox would spend long hours hiking through the Hollywood Hills, collecting insects, including black widow spiders. He enjoyed electronics, sculpture, music, semantics and handcrafts.

Born in Detroit, Mich., he attended the City College of New York. After a stint in the Army in World War II, he sold men's jewelry, then in 1948 began performing in New York night clubs. He got a role in a Broadway play, "Dance Me a Song," and in 1952 was tapped for the role of Mr. Peepers.

Child Psychiatrists Cite POW Children's Problems

By DEE WEDEMEYER
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP)—Child psychiatrists say the initial joy for children whose prisoner-of-war fathers are returning can turn to resentment, anger, guilt and even depression as they try io adjust to having a father at home.

Though military psychiatrists have been instructed by the Department of Defense not to comment on psychological problems of the children, civilian psychiatrists said their problems would not be unrelated to those of any child missing a father for a long period of time.

Some will come face to face with a father they have idealized so much he could not possibly live up to their expectations, said the child psychiatrists.

Others may suffer all the pangs that the child of a celebrity might have or, on the other hand, miss the limelight of being a special POW child.

While some children may have suffered from not having had a masculine model, others may feel guilty for transferring their loyalty to another male figure.

"There's every reason to think there will be mixed feelings about this change," said Dr. Jerry Wiener, director of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry at Emory University Medical School, Atlanta.

"There's obviously joy and pleasure and happiness, but it is not unusual for there to be other feelings, and the children should not feel guilty about them. The more parents can be aware of this, the more they will be able to help the children with their guilt feelings."

Most specialists agree a lot depends on the child's age when his father left, and the length of time the father was gone.

"The longer his father is away the more the child imagines what his father might be like," explained Dr. Richard M. Silberstein, director of psychiatry at St. Vincent's Medical Center of Richmond, on New York's Staten Island.

Silberstein said a child who has missed the discipline of a father may discipline himself more stringently than his father ever would have. If a new relationship with his father is not established, the child could grow up to be a rigid, rule-bound person.

A child whose father has disappeared during the years when he feels competition for his mother's attention—generally ages 3 to 6—may secretly feel it is his fault his father left.

The potential for guilt is also great where a child resents having to share his mother's attention with the father.

POWs Return To Rest, Reunions

By LEE LINDER
Associated Press WRITER

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Three freed prisoners of war, one quoted as saying he'd kill his Viet Cong captors if he ever saw them again, headed for Philadelphia area hospitals Thursday night for rest and recuperation and a joyful reunion with their families.

Army Capt. George K. Wanat, Jr., 27, of Foxboro, Mass., and Pvt. Ferdinand Rodriquex, 24, of Brooklyn, N.Y., will undergo treatment and debriefing at the Valley Forge General Hospital in suburban Phoenixville, while Cmdr. Robert D. Doremus, 40, of Montclair, N.J., will be the first returned POW brought to the Philadelphia Naval Hospital.

All three left Clark Air Base in the Philippines Wednesday night, then switched planes in California Thursday afternoon for the cross-country flight. There will be stops at Washington, D.C., and McGuire Air Force Base in New Jersey–dropping off other POWs–before helicopters carry them to the hospitals from McGuire, probably around midnight.

"It is possible that one of the men may make some kind of public statement on arrival at Valley Forge," said Col. William S. Mullins, who is in charge of arrangements at that Army facility.

"Then Wanat and Rodriquez will be driven–in ambulances if necessary–to a ward in the main building to greet their families. This reunion will be private."

A Navy spokesman said Doremus will be shielded from the news media, following some photographs on arrival. He said that ever Doremus' older brother, Warren Jr., a Rochester, N.Y., newsman will be barred from the family reunion.

Greeting Wanat will be his wife, Gretchen, 26–the couple were married just eight months when he left for the war–his parents, Mr. and Mrs. George K. Wanat, Sr., Waterford, Conn., and six sisters and a brother.

Doremus's wife, Dinah, and three children–Karen, Robert and Barbara–and his parents will welcome him in his room in the top floor of the Naval Hospital in South Philadelphia.

Rodriquez, to be settled in a nearby room, will be met by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jesus Rodriquez, and his brother Juan.

An extensive medical evaluation, expected to take several days, begins Friday morning. None of the returnees are expected to discuss their experiences with newsmen unless they get medical and Defense Department clearance.

FBI Investigates 'Doubted' Bugging

WASHINGTON (AP) — The FBI is investigating whether whoever left behind a tiny transmitter was really trying to bug the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

The committee's people frankly doubted it. The FBI wasn't talking.

Chairman Thomas E. Doc Morgan, D-Pa., said Thursday the "sophisticated transmitter with self-contained microphone and batteries" the size of a pack of cigarettes was found lying openly on top of a table in the committee's main hearing room Monday morning.

A staff member said the gray metallic transmitter had no tape or other evidence of having once been hidden under a table or chair when an aide walked past the table Monday and saw it lying there.

But he said the entire investigation had been turned over to the FBI and he could not be sure a janitor, for example, had not jostled it from a hiding place and put it on the table.

A Good Code

The student Senate has approved a new Student Code of Conduct which is pending approval by the Board of Trustees. The Student Code of Conduct now in effect was written in 1966. Hence, the new code, in keeping with the times, displays a far more liberal and updated set of values.

The difference between the two codes is essentially this: the present code is founded on the principle that the University should act in loco parentis, and its function should be to control students; the new code is designed mainly to protect students, and to prevent students from infringing upon the rights of other students.

The Preamble to the new code reads, in part: "The ultimate values that should govern behaviour in any community are a loving convern for one's brothers and sisters, and kindness in our dealings with each other . . . This code is intended to set minimum standards of behaviour that are essential for the protection of each individual and to provide a recourse for those who feel that their rights have been violated."

We feel that this should be the primary purpose of any set of laws which govern human behavior. We therefore urge the Board of Trustees to approve the new Student Code of Conduct.

Check Cashing Hassles

With the increasing frequency, the check cashing service in the Student Union has been running out of money on the weekends. Usually the money lasts until Sunday night although it has dissipated as early as Saturday. This has caused considerable discomfort for students who rely on the service for money to eat on Sunday nights. There are few things more disturbing than walking down to the Hatch to eat and then finding out that you can't cash a check.

The people who operate the check cashing service, the same people who run the Campus Center, are doing something to remedy the situation. The amount of money that is available to cash checks comes from a fixed fund amount. Whitmore has alloted a maximum sum that can be used to cash checks on any day. Each day, so much money is set aside to cash checks except on the weekends when no additional funds are available. This is further complicated by the abundance of payroll checks that students cash on Fridays. An attempt to remedy this by going to the bank twice on Friday, in the morning and afternoon, to turn all the checks cashed into money has proven unsuccessful.

The CC people have decided to attempt to solve this by using the values of the checks cashed at the Student Union and the University Store. As of January 19th, about $8,000 in bogus checks were still with us. What may happen is that the value of the rubber checks will become an accounts receivable and cash will be added to the check cashing pool. This means that eight thousand dollars will be taken from a general fund and added to the cashing service, and as the money for the rubber checks is collected it will be returned to the general fund. About two hundred dollars in bad checks are still being cashed everyday.

Very little can be done that is both practical and legal to catch someone who passes a bad check, until his name appears on the bum check list. Whitmore has restricted the powers of the people who run the service until they are practically non-existent. After your name finds its way to the black list, you will be prevented from using the service and requested to make amends. Usually if a check bounces when the CC sends it to your bank they will send it back a few times to make sure that it wasn't just an accident. If you pass three bad checks at UMass you will be prevented from using the check cashing service the rest of your University career. If you do not cash another check after your name appears on the bogus list the CC will send you, and your parents, letters and assorted literature over the summer. They can not do more because of the limits Whitmore has placed on their authority. There are some people who owe the service a considerable sum of money like a couple hundred dollars.

The Student Judicial will be asked to start some action to recover the lost funds. The Judiciary may decide to hold grades, refuse transcripts or prevent registration to someone on the bogus check list. Merchants downtown have people who pass bad checks arrested; the Judiciary could decide to do the same.

Writing bad checks is not ripping off some rich banker back home; the Campus Center gets stuck with the loss. This loss doesn't help us any when the Campus Center Fees are computed for the next year. Precautions are taken to prevent the passing of forged checks; the cameras do have film in them and have been used to help apprehend forgers.

While it is a good idea to collect the money lost because of bad checks; the solution to the lack of funds on the weekends should not lie there. It is at best a temporary solution. The Campus Center should work out a new agreement with Whitmore that would make more money available to the check cashing service over the weekends. The Campus Center must be given more power to recover bad checks. Grades, schedules, transcripts and financial aid should be denied to anyone who is on the bad check list. Warrants for arrest might even be served to those who have written many rubber checks.

George Scheurer

Reply To Eric Walgren

Eric Walgren has cast himself as a leader of social change through radical action and that George Scheurer was a liberal follower who would rather support righteous change after the risk was over. He also stated that, "Now having no radical to follow he (Scheurer) has nothing to accomplish."

Let's compare that vindictive statement with reality, something that Eric should try to see a little more of.

The first student to run for Selectperson was John "Hawkeye" MacGillveray. I initiated and managed his campaign. It was around one year ago that the issue of election scheduling and intercession came up. I was the first person to challenge the Town of Amherst on this issue.

Eric claimed that I "backed off (my) protest when the going got rough and unpopular with middle-aged voters." That must refer to my unwillingness to join his suit against the Town of Amherst. According to a telephone conversation I had with a lawyer who aided Eric in his suit, it is being filed at no court cost to the "pauper" plaintiff. If I were to join the suit I would be required to pay these charges. I simply cannot afford it. Eric knows all of this information and we have talked about this in the Collegian office, but it suited his purpose to ignore it.

I won't take the space to document all I have done on this issue, but let me add another example. After speaking to the Amherst Democratic Town Committee, I sent every member a photostatic copy of an article in last year's Daily Hampshire Gazette. The article help to prove the contended point that the students were not around to participate in the caucus, and the present Board of Selectmen should have thought of that for this year's election. Does that sound like something avoiding the "middle-aged voters?"

If the Peace Movement is an example of change through radical action, then I am not a "liberal follower", but a "righteous radical". Yet, I do not have a desire to inflate my self-righteousness. But I do feel compelled to say that Eric doesn't know what or who he is talking about.

In El Paso, Texas, I helped organize G.I.'s for Peace while I was an active duty serviceman. I worked on the Legal Committee and on the staff of the Gigline. After four out of four previous chairmen of this grop were transferred (one to Germany as a Clerk while he had a broken wrist and three under armed guard to Vietnam) I decided to accept the Chairmanship of this group. As Chairman I initiated a Congressional investigation of the Fort Bliss Stockade. This was covered in Nations magazine and had the help of the local AFSC and Senator George McGovern's office. I was then transferred to Fairbanks, Alaska...on a mountain...at -35 F. I then became the next chairman of United Servicemen of Alaska and continued my activity. I won't detail the remainder of "dutiful following" in the Peace Movement, but let me summarize some of it. Chairman of Veterans for Peace, Member of VVAW and participant in Operation Duey Canyon 3, one of and one of the organizers of the first Westover Air Force Base demonstrations.

Eric, you do waste my time, but you are entitled to your opinion and its expression. At the same time, you do have an ' obligation to the people who read what you write to have some facts to back up your analysis. I would suggest that in their absence and by your actions, you appear to me to be a political manipulator in the spirit of Richard Nixon who would use any means to discredit the opposition.

There is much to accomplish for Amherst in the areas of Rent Control, Growth and pollution, Child Care, Mass transit, Taxes and more, but I need your help. Vote on Tuesday, February 20, for George B. Scheurer for Selectman.

George Scheurer is a candidate for Selectman for the Town of Amherst.

U.S. Is Dying

The United States is dying, slowly but surely. It is dying simply because of the actions of its own government.

In creating our constitution, our founding fathers gave us a limited government which was designed to protect the individual liberties and rights of the common man. Under this limited government, the common man has had more freedom than under any monarchy, or any other type of government.

But since the days of President Woodrow Wilson, America has been moving towards a system of total government which has been eating away at our free enterprise system, which is the only economic system that can work under a limited government, and has all but destroyed the rights and liberties guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution.

To make a long story short, this is what has happened over the years:

1) In 1913, the Federal Reserve was created as a guarantee against inflation or depression but instead has been the primary source of inflation and, even though it is a private system, it has been controlling the U.S. economy since its inception.

2) In 1945, the United Nations was created with the full purpose of spreading Communism at the expense of the United States. In 1971, the U.N. revealed its true color by admitting the brutal Communist government of Red China and expelling the civilized government of Nationalist China. It should be remembered that the author of the U.N. Charter, Alger Hiss, was revealed as a member of the Communist Party and was convicted in 1950 for perjury in relation to his activities in the U.S. State Depatment.

3) The Supreme Court, under the leadership of Earl Warren, has, since 1954 (Brown vs. Board of Education) usurped powers given to the states and the people as well as giving "rights" to criminals at the expense of those who have been victimized by these same criminals.

Basically, these events set the stage for the Nixon Administration to communize the United States. What Nixon wants is to set up a system of total government, with himself as the head of it. This is what Nixon is doing to bring about such a situation:

1) His administration has passed the Occupational Health and Safety Act (OSHA) which is designed to take what is left of our free enterprise system and have it ruled, regulated and ruined by government bureaucrats. This is one of Mr. Nixon's biggest steps in establishing himsslf as the dictator of the United States.

2) He is trying to bring about a national police force to replace our local police. I shouldn't have to tell you that this is one of the things any dictator needs to stay in power.

3) He will do everything he can to aid Communist governments at the expense of anti-Communist governments. This will be done so that Nixon can assume leadership of a one-world totalitarian state.

There is a lot more to what I have mentioned and there certainly are more factors involved than what is stated above. But yes, Richard Nixon is killing the United States. And each and every American owes it to himself to find out how and why Richard Nixon is doing what he is. It is also the duty of every loayal American to find out all he can about the ruthless conspiracy to destroy America known as Communism. He should also acquaint himself with the theories by which our free enterprise system should be working.

The United States is dying. But it need not die. And it will not die if enough concerned, patriotic Americans act to stop Richard Nixon so that the United States may be saved by letting it return to the system of limited government which was set up by our founding fathers. But all concerned parties should do their part to save the United States. And this is something where Mr. Average Citizen can pass the buck, for any reason, and hope that the politicians take care of it. For in this case, Mr. Average Citizen, the buck stops with you.

The Minuteman Tavern?

By Ken Sulin

March 1, 1973, marks the beginning of a controversial issue that's been bouncing off and on walls since November, that is, lowering of the drinking age in Massachusetts. Also, rumors have been flying with respect to changes the Campus Center will make to accommodate the 13,000 Amherst drinkers.

As many of you have probably heard by now, there is to be a bar of some type at the back, carpeted section of the Hatch. To elaborate on this point, Warren T. Grinnan, manager of the Campus Center, states "if expanded facilities are deemed feasible, the back of the Hatch is the most logical and economical place to consider." The way it looks now the Hatch will be occupied by a bar as of March first and will establish itself with a beerhall approach.

Many people have been wondering why items concerning the issue have been kept quiet. Grinnan informs us that the state originally foresaw the drinking age being changed on April first; however, a referendum in November of 1972 pushed the date up to March. As a result the Board of Governors and Food Services found themselves a month short on planning. The delay of getting any solid definitions was also caused, as Grinnan puts it, "because we want this done correctly so it will work correctly--we're taking time to make sure it does.

Now that the eighteen-year-olds will legally be able to drink the problem arises of the fifteen and sixteen-year-olds trying to pass for eighteen. As always, the Campus Center will require some type of identification possibly working on much the same principle as the Top of the Campus membership cards. The bar will be open only to students and their guests.

The question now arises, will this venture conflict with the Bluewall? Evidently not, since another aspect is speculatively in order for the proposal. Not only will liquor be served, but eventually long-range plans show a grill with charcoal broiled foods may find its way to the "back of the Hatch". The idea will hopefully be a median between the Bluewall and the Top of the Campus, giving the student body a third type of evening entertainment.

No Telling Taste

By Carl Greenburg

Who's responsible for the lack of good new literature these days? Or should we say the profusion of bad books? it's certain that a lot of people liked, for instance, Jonathan Livingston Seagull. But how many really thought it was a fine piece of writing? It's being made into a movie and it is fairly certain that it rated filming only because of its popularity. Only if the producers do a superbly bad job of it will it stand a chance of losing money. Everyone's reading the book, everyone will go see the movie.

It was said that Seagull made it on its own, that its popularity was not, at least at first, generated by paid publicity. Is that because it appeals to those caught up in the new wave of exotic religions and because it is vague enough to be accepted by everyone? Does anyone really believe it has profundity?

Recently, an essay by the late Harvey Swados was published postumously in the New York Times Book Review section. He said that he had lately been finding in his creative writing classes that students were not reading the good literary magazines anymore. They were hardly reading at all anymore. It used to be said that the short story was developed as a form in the United States because of the accellerating pace of life in the country. People didn't have time to read long things. Has the pace of living speeded up so much in the country that we don't have time to read anything anymore?

There's a whole new market for comic books, trash fiction, posters. A critical look at the best seller lists will reveal that there is very little of value being bought by the book-buying public. (I say "bought" and not "read", because it may very well be that people buy books for their coffee tables.) There are always books about sex or popular psychology or gimmicky horror novels. It's all slick and fast and a lot of it appeals to very simplistic view of life. People don't for example, study theology - they "freak out" on Jesus. There is even a book out on Updike talking about his religious themes. Updike?

There are of course, a host of reasons for this state of affairs. It is doubtful that we can blame authors. They have as little control over what gets published as anyone else. It is certain that there are good writers around and it is probable that many are being rejected by the publishing houses. Book clubs, of course, are only in it for the money. They're not really concerned with giving their members good books - only those books that they know their members have heard about. Movies and television probably also have a lot to do with it. If authors don't conciously write books with the hope that they'll make good movie material, publishers undoubtedly look for that type of book. We very often comment about whether we liked the book or the movie better. It can be an important question. Who did a better job on the material, the author or the director? Kubrick was certainly a more perceptive interpreter of what Clockwork Orange was all about than even Burgess.

We seem to find ourselves in a paradox. The publishers, the producers, the ad men say that they give the public what it wants. What we must watch on television is determined by how effective the programs are in gathering mass audiences. It is not necessarily what we really like. Do we boycott? It seems an impossible situation. We could write to our Congressmen, but they probably don't read.

Up The System

What changes can we expect in the future structure of upper level education in this state? This question was pondered this past weekend at a three day education conference held by the UMass student government this past weekend in the Campus Center. William Densmore attended that conference, interviewed many of its participants, and writes of the views and conclusions expressed concerning the proposed educational reorganizational plan. Some have reported that nothing much happened there, the article on page thirteen addresses itself to that question.

Re-evaluating History

The Rosenburgs were tried and found guilty of helping the Russians develop their atomic bomb with smuggled plans of ours. Their execution has been a bitter legal and political point in the twenty years since and appears to be receiving much attention recently in the media. A courtroom drama played New York last year and Otto Preminger is currently filming a reconstruction of the trial using a script taken from famous trial lawyer Louis Nizer's recent re-evaluation. Nizer's book is evaluated on page fifteen by Carl Greenberg and may raise your social consciousness a bit.

Deliver Us From Tension

This was the weekend they didn't play golf is the premise of the film Deliverance, adapted for the screen by poet James Dickey from his own best seller. It's a driving, engrossing adventure film; superbly photographed and edited with good performances from the four male principals. The film explores the motivations and endurance of these suburban husbands who rent canoes and travel up the wilds of Georgia and is reviewed on page twenty-one by Brian Dailey.

With A Nod To The Rest

The town elections are next week. If you are register go out and let your vote be worth something. Poor Richard's has their favorites on the slate but we aren't going to mention any names except to tell you to read Howie Blum and Steve Ferber on the opposite page. Also down front in this issue is Galen Tinder's look at President Nixon's first month in office, what it means and what it may hold. Joseph Arsenault examines a more fictional ghoul -- Frankenstein -- more precisely speaks with the play's director Dallas Murphy about this extravagant and interesting production. Buddy Rich is one of the finest drummers in the business and we feel priviliged to have an interview with him, the first part of which can be found in this issue. Album Reviews? The Mahavishnu Orchestra, with a bonus concert review of that group, a new group called Spring and the latest by Steve Miller.

A vital dance program combining the talents of two talented ensembles comes our way next week and details are inside. Weekend may help you pick a film, play, or concert to spend your time (and money) at this weekend and that makes up the tail end of this issue.

Controversy Surrounds Student Vote

By Howard Bloom and Steve Ferber

Despite the fact that on September 1, 1971, Robert Quinn, Attorney General of Massachusetts ruled that students should be eligible to vote in the town or city in which he or she attends college, the controversy over students and their right to vote rages on. Here in Amherst, where an election for town meeting members school committee members and selectmen is to be held next Tuesday, February 20th, the townspeople have openly expressed their displeasure with the pro-student ruling.

"There has been pressure put on us by the townspeople," remarked Town Clerk. "The hardest thing for the townspeople to understand is that if the students call Amherst their home, then why do they go elsewhere over vacation periods?"

The question of student voting eligibility will pertain particularly to next Tuesday's election; an election in which students not only will be voting, but will be running for town meeting members.

11,428 voters are registered for the February 20th elections, 3000 of whom (approximately 27%) are students. These 11,000-plus voters will be choosing one selectman 83 town meeting members and school committee members. The positions for town meeting members are those in which students stand the most realistic chance to get involved in town government. With 83 seats open, and 139 residents looking to fill those openings, the 14 students running are hoping to bring the total number of students in the town meeting up to ten or more. The problems of the student vote have existed from as far back as 1819, when Maine faced a registration crisis. The dilemma exists because a great deal hangs on what an individual declares his residence to be.

The anti-student sentiment says that the enormous body of students shouldn't be allowed to tinker with the town's laws during the few years that the students are residents. Many argue that to allow 'non-residents' to vote would be to open the governance of the town, of its "stable citizenry", to wild and frivolous voters who have nothing to lose by outrageous decisions at the polls.

Nation magazine came back with a striking point, that students are one of the least transient groups in our society. And they had the facts to back it up. Even if it's true that most students leave a college town when they graduate, they will nevertheless be in that town for four years, at a minimum.

Ameria is a mobile society, and in fact 31% of all married men between the ages of 25 and 34 living with their wives move annually. Of all persons between the ages of 18 and 19 25.2% move that frequently. The highest figure comes from the group of men between 25 and 34, who are single or divorced. 44% of those men move each year.

Stated one editorialist in National Review magazine, "The idea of democracy is that those who do the voting should endure the consequences of their own laws. . . . . In the history of college towns, individual bodies are transitory experiences. They should not be given the power of hit and run drivers."

Nation magazine had yet another answer for those who oppose student registration in college towns. They argue that the barriers to student voting cannot be justified by suggesting that they have no intent to remain, for it is clear that many groups of persons are now registered to vote even though they know definitely (in contrast to the student's uncertainty) that they will not remain in the town.

A classic case is that of construction workers, who by the very nature of their jobs move in and out of towns with great rapidity. Town Clerk stated, "I feel the reason why the students are being picked on is that they form the largest and most visible of the transitory bodies. They just stick out the most."

Besides duration of residence, gripes, the question of monetary support to the town is important. Many feel that a voter should be helping in an appropriate way to defray the social cost of running a town. The notion is that students don't pay taxes to the town and therefore should not vote.

However in most cases, students would not pay taxes even in their "home" towns because of the Federal law exempting those who earn less than $2000 a year. So what then would be the solution? Not allowing students to vote at all?

In addition, the students do contribute a great deal to this town. Most of the shops in Amherst cater to the students because a substantial amount of money going into these shops comes directly from the university community. Also, beginning with the 1970 Federal census, students are put at their place of school instead of their place of origin. More than $15 per student is annually allotted in federal aid to university towns. In Amherst that figures out to more than a healthy sum.

Though the laws of the state has granted students the right to vote in Amherst, conflicting statutes remain on the books. There is the case of fishing licenses. It is still impossible to obtain a fishing license if you list a campus address as your place of residence.

The terms "residence" and "domicile" permeate the ambiguities in these laws. A domicile means that place where one in- Alternate definitions stress that domicile as where one is to make his permanent home. Residence demands a considerable duration of time. Yet if the strict definitions were enforced millions would be knocked off of the voting roles. Applied scruplously, laws on residency would make only 40-55 year olds, those with comfortable homes, eligible to vote.

As pointed out by Town Clerk, "Residency requirements are a big problem, as evidenced in Connecticut where one can be eligible to vote in the state without being eligible to pay the in-state tuition for the University of Connecticut."

The most dramatic criticisms of not allowing students to vote in college towns is the contention that denying the student this right may deny him the right to vote altogether, as in North Carolina, where absentee ballots for primary elections are issued only to people who will be out of state on election day.

Yet amidst the discontent of many and the uncertainties of thousands, the students will have a chance to elect to the town meeting this Tuesday their classmates.

In precinct 2 (one of seven precinct in Amherst) there are 15 town meeting positions open. Nineteen people are challenging for those positions, seven of whom are students. Precinct 7 has 17 seats open with 29 residents looking to fill them. Five students are seeking to represent Precinct 7. In precinct 3, 17 seats are being contested for by 23 townspeople, of whom 2 are students.

The town meeting meets officially once every year at the beginning of March. Special sessions may be called when 200 registered voters sign a petition requesting such a session. Last year three special sessions were held.

While students may be gathering momentum and power in Amherst town elections, one would scarely notice their effect by looking down the town meeting roster. Only 1 of the present 240 members is a student, a gross misrepresentation. (Students make up nearly 27% of the registered voters in Amherst). Next Tuesday the students hope to rectify that situation.

Scene at last year's town meeting. This Tuesday 83 candidates will be chosen to sit as town meeting members.

The Minuteman Tavern (con't)

Up to this point, I've referred to any prospects as those "at the back of the Hatch" nevertheless a theme may be constructed within the doors offering the name Minuteman Tavern. The idea of a charcoal grill will not get underway immediately due to the early deadline; however, during the final 5-7 weeks of the semester the Minuteman Tavern could very well be in full swing.

If you're at all familiar with area in question, you'll realize why walls will have to be built enforcing a single entry and exit. The small railing now separating the Hatch would prove inefficient and only tempt would-be fence hoppers. The lighting is also to be altered for a variance in atmosphere. In fact, the total cost of the plan nears the figure of $30,000 and could exceed this if the total concept approach is used.

The venture also provides jobs for eight part-time students and one supervisor, though students will not be used as waitresses since a cafeteria style mode will take precedence. Beer will be served at first and once a permanent settling has grown, hard liquors will also be sold–moderate price ranges. The menu is to be along the steak–hamburger line and it too will be high in quality, low in price.

The topic of entertainment has been tossed around a bit and as a result the individuals running the Minuteman Tavern will make final decisions. Most likely a small stage will be erected featuring soft, acoustic talent rather than rock, but you never can tell.

Since there will be a chance to purchase beer some feel the Hatch sales in Coke and coffee will meet on a sharp decline, yet the Hatch, as always, will continue to at its regular pace. Beer or drinks of any sort will not be permitted beyond the Tavern's walls so inevitably will arise an intercompetition between the two halves.

Where is the money coming from you ask? Student funds will budget a large percentage but if all goes as planned, reimbursement no doubt will follow. The only losses that are feared would be in frequent stealing of beer mugs, so prepare yourself for paper cups.

The plan, as stated before, is still tentative, nothing definite for sure, but chances are we'll see the Minuteman Tavern. Although it seems expensive the results are to prove beneficial for students old and new.

A follow-up on future plans will be found in a future issue of Poor Richard's explaining the final results on the Minuteman Tavern.

Is it time to return to Prohibition?

Proposition Moves From Cambridge To Springfield

The Proposition, Boston's improvisational theatre group, will be in residence at Stage/West from March 19 to March 23 to present eleven performances for both adults and children. The Propostion, a satirical revue with music, is Boston's longest running show for adults, performing regularly since February 1968 in its own theatre in Cambridge, Mass. The Proposition has also played to capacity houses Off-Broadway, at the Smithsonian Institute, on television's Mike Douglas and David Frost shows, and at colleges and universities from Maine to Texas.

The magic of The Proposition is that no two performances are alike. Every show is improvised from beginning to end, based entirely on situation, words, and topics suggested by the audience.

Phrases, objects, playwrights, pet peeves, political issues or public personalities become the subjects for talk show, rock songs or foreign film festivals, giving rise to such hilarity as a musical comedy between Attila the Hun and Julia Child or a grand opera about organic farming.

The improvised nature of the show and its emphasis on satire make The Proposition both an artistically demanding and a socially relevant form of entertainment.

The success of The Proposition for adults encouraged creator and director Allan Albert to initiate a similar type of show for children. Since its origin in 1969, "The Proposition Circus" for children has performed throughout Greater Boston on a showmobile for Summerthing, on educational TV, and at reform schools, hospitals and schools throughout New England in addition to its weekly Sunday matinee at the Inman Theatre.

The Proposition Circus, is the country's only completely improvised show for children. Like its adult counterpart, the players feed the imagination of the youngsters and they in turn suggest ideas, phrases, objects and places. During the hour performance the actors mime sports, present fairy-tale operas, improvise rock songs and act out story theatre by becoming characters, props and scenery.

The show is designed for children between the ages of two and twelve and adults who accompany them are asked to sit in the rear of the theatre, in order that the youngsters may fully respond and participate in this delightful experience.

Stephen Hays, managing director of Stage/West, is concerned with the lack of cultural programs for elementary school children, and has engaged The Proposition to fill this gap with creative professional children's theatre.

The Proposition will present one adult performance on Monday, March 19 at 8 p.m. All tickets will be $4.00 with a reduced rate of $2.50 for students.

The remaining ten performances will be "The Proposition Circus" for children. There will be two matinees daily, Monday thru Friday, at 10 a.m. and 1 p.m. These have been geared toward elementary schools, who have expressed a desire to bring their classes during the school day. All tickets for participating students will be $1.25.

One performance has been scheduled on Thursday afternoon, March 22 at 4:00, to allow preschoolers and children who do not attend participating schools to see "The Proposition Circus" Tickets for both children and parents will be $1.50.

Reconstructing Our Higher Education

By William Densmore, Jr.

In days of prepackaged television speeches and plastic press conferences it's a little surprising to see a public administrator hitting the road, family and all, to present what he claims is his idea of the way things should be.

But that seems to be just what Secretary of Education Jeseph M. Cronin was doing last weekend when he came to UMass to present a proposed educational reorganization plan. Of course, he is quick to add, he paid for his family's two-day stay in Amherst out of his own pocket — doom befall the man on a state payroll who doesn't.

Cronin came to participate in a three day education conference held by the UMass-Amherst student government. Conference organizers originally planned "to form a statewide student government organization", but the meeting became a forum for a myriad of issues in higher education — including Cronin's "Plan for Educational Reorganization."

The proposal is a complicated, across-the-board restructuring of state secondary and collegiate public education designed, according to Cronin, along the general themes of "decentralization" and "regional boards" to "set priorities, assess needs, develop budgets, and provide assistance to school districts and colleges in their domains."

Five regional boards would be accountable jointly to two independent lay boards meeting monthly in Boston — a Board of Post-Secondary Education to set policy for all undergraduate college programs, and a Board of Elementary and Secondary Education to do the same with kindergarten through twelfth grade.

The proposal uses interlocking appointments to the regional, state and advisory boards including representation from local school committees, acknowledged regional educational leaders, student representatives, and the Governor's appointees.

Residing on most all boards, with a single vote, would be the Secretary of Educational Affairs, with "cultural" added to his title because he would have budgetary responsibility for libraries and audio-visual aids programs. The Secretary also would take over responsibility for recommending appointments to lay boards from the present Advisory Council on Education.

The proposal was unveiled at a press conference in Boston during January and has met almost solid objection since. But few have been able to attack its programs specifically, because the concepts it outlines are alternately tried and true, or untested in this state. But what's basic to the proposal — the division of Massachusetts into five educational fiefdoms — seems to be a major complaint to date.

The first and most vehement opponent of the proposal has been the University of Massachusetts and its trustees, who said in a statement last month that "we question the division of the state into five new parts. To interpose another political subdivision and another layer of bureaucracy for whatever purpose seems to us to make genuine participation more and not less difficult."

The UMass group said they "were not persuaded of the wisdom of combining education from kindergarten to graduate school", as the regional boards would have the authority to do.

Finally, the trustees expressed "great concern over the way the report proposes to dismember the University of Massachusetts," because history, tradition and shared strength would be jeopardized.

UMass president Wood, echoing his trustees, said on a broadcast interview (Louis Lyon's News and Comment, 3/7/73) last week that he was "puzzled" by the report. When asked about proposed "economies" Wood said, "I just don't see it."

Prior to the release of the present proposal, the Massachusetts Advisory Council on Education (MACE) stated that it was opposed to its own abolition, which the reorganization provides for. MACE is expected to make a statement condemning the proposal, or legislation written from it, at their March 1st meeting in Boston.

Last week, the Board of Regional and Community Colleges unanimously rejected the report, saying it would "fragment" the entire system of higher education. That board would be eliminated by the proposal.

The only board slated to remain substantially intact under reorganization — the present Board of Education — has not responded in any way to the Cronin report. But a meeting of that body is scheduled for the end of this month. (Feb. 27th)

So aside from those who stand to lose their positions, little comment has surfaced about the proposal, particularly from the Legislature. Both the senate and House education committee chairmen were uncommunicative while in Amherst over the weekend.

"A lot of things in there kinda make sense to me," smirked State Representative Michael Daly (D-Boston) but he warned that he saw no hope of any education legislation being passed before July 1st of this year.

State Senator Walter J. Boverini (D—Lynn) said that he thought the proposal could cause "a struggle of five regional boards" for money and resources and that since he represented Lynn he would side with the Northeastern region.

Boverini said that "some form of reorganization will surface during this legislative session" but added that he couldn't "comment further on the reorganization until we see the actual legislation — how it's worded."

Asked to comment on published reports that Senate President Kevin Harrington would vote against any educational reorganization, the pair said they couldn't estimate the chances of any education bills in the Legislature.

Harrington was a principle author of the Willis-Harrington Commission report during the sixties which recommended the present educational administrative structure. The assumption is that he would be opposed to altering the plan he helped formulate, but one source says that when Harrington was consulted in December, he said he would give any new plan a careful look.

UMass president Wood, participating on a panel discussion during the UMass conference, said that "competition could develop among regions of a devastating nature," but added that a "blanket indictment" of the plan was not applicable. He also claimed he had never been consulted about the specifics of the present proposal.

All this sets the stage for a review of Secretary Cronin's proposal with the Secretary himself — and an examination of reactions from "consumers" of any reorganization — students in public higher education.

Most the representatives from 20 of the 29 state public college campuses who came to Amherst last weekend weren't even sure why they came — whether it was to discuss reorganization or rights, politics or proposals. But after they had read the Cronin report nearly all of them had some opinion on reorganization — before Secretary Cronin spoke in its defense.

"People haven't looked at it long enough when they call it a power play," says Secretary Cronin, "we're determined to power in the hands of lay boards."

Cronin hopes people will understand the plan before they criticize it. "All the cabinet secretaries are going to have additional responsibilities" under Governor Sargent's phase II reorganization plans, according to Cronin, but in education those "additional responsibilities" will be taken mostly from the Office of Administration and Finance, rather than from Sargent or from lay boards.

"When someone wants to blame someone, I'm accountable," says Cronin, reflecting what he claims to be a major theme of the proposal. At the same time, he says, "a lot of people want safeguards" to prohibit too much power for one office or a single person.

The Governor "now appoints 98%" of those sitting on lay education boards, Cronin says, but under the proposal "fewer" would be appointed, and they would come more from "each region." "We want outstanding people from the regions" who are "first-rate" educational leaders to sit on regional and state boards, says Cronin.

He says the state needs a central educational board to decide "minimum standards" and "long range plans" as well as "overall state guidelines that guarantee fair play and fair treatment" for all regions.

Asked why he had proposed the concept of regionalized educational planning Cronin said that "It's not as if we invented it" citing the use of such school boards in both New York state and Rhode Island. But he admits that the presidents of the various college systems never were given the opportunity to comment on "regional boards" before the concept was unveiled in the Massachusetts proposal.

The UMass trustees have been critical of the Cronin report partly because they weren't consulted on the final form before it became public. "We were not a party to the deliberations that produced the plan," they said in a statement.

But Secretary Cronin states that "all the trustees of the boards and the presidents of the systems had a chance to comment on the alternatives in the last three to six months."

And he says that the members of most lay educational boards heard a "progress report" on education reorganization last October at a dinner meeting.

Sources indicate that the Secretary presented four possible alternative reorganization plans at the October meeting, which was closed to the press. They say that none of the four alternatives proposed at that meeting were similar to the present one, and that furthermore none of the alternatives included anything about "regional boards." One board member who was at the October meeting said that from December first through the middle of January there had been a "blackout" on all information from Cronin about reorganization, even to members of lay boards.

It is possible that the concept of "regionalization" was included at a very late date, perhaps just prior to the release of the present reorganization proposal. And since Secretary Cronin did not discuss the concept at the October closed meeting, it may be assumed that regionalization was a last-minute inclusion, perhaps forced on the Secretary as for political reasons.

Students consulted about the reorganization proposal last weekend at UMass seemed awed, and most of them reacted negatively to it.

Nicholas Apostola, 21, of Southbridge, a UMass-Amherst senior, said that "there are no educational advantages to the new program," and that "I don't think the Governor's plan's gonna go through (the Legislature)."

Two students at Southeastern Mass. University (SMU) say that when Cronin met with administrators and faculty there he made only a halfhearted effort to defend the plan against criticism. According to Arthur E. Tebbetts, Editor-in-Chief of SMU's paper, "Cronin's not putting his heart into it," as if he (Cronin) were saying "someone else is presenting it, I'm forced here." Tebbetts is 22, and a senior at SMU from Marion.

Secretary Cronin said Sunday that such an inference was "kind of crazy".

Kenneth G. Richards, the vice president of the student senate at SMU said that his policy has been to "keep it cool for now— not say anything" until the details of the plan have been more fully developed. He said that he feels an obligation to criticize the plan but not to propose an alternative. "Hercules was supposed to clean out the stables, not fill them again," he said. Richards is 20, and a junior at SMU from New Bedford.

A sophomore student advisor to the Community College Board from Westfield said that "below grade twelve the program makes a helluva lot of sense," but that provisions for higher education need to be reworked. John Lee, 27, is a student at Holyoke Community College. When told that the Community College Board had just rejected the reorganization he said, "I agree with them."

Mary Anne Stefanski, 25, a junior at UMass-Boston said "a lot of people feel its pretty vague — its threatening." She said the group would "have to organize as much political clout as possible" to combat the proposal and that the meeting at UMass was helpful to that end.

Arthur H. Smith, 26, a Middlesex Community College sophomore from North Reading said that "from the taxpayers' standpoint the plan makes a helluva lot of sense" but that "from the education standpoint — no — it will probably make an archaic system more archaic." Smith is chairman of the student senate at Middlesex.

Corinne A. Labo, 20, from Bridgewater State College said that she "doesn't like" the reorganization plan, saying that "Bridgewater's not going to benefit by this at all." Miss Labo is a junior student senator from Marshfield.

A Fitchburg state junior class representative to the conference said that he's "seen how we're getting the shaft all around". Bruce C. McCarthy, 20, from Somerville, said that "if we don't start working as a group we're not going to get anywhere." McCarthy said that he didn't like the Cronin report "as it was stated" but asserted that it could be made to work with "specific changes."

Sander Jeanne M. Nerbonne, 20, a junior at Framingham State College said that her impression was that the conference was "basically about reorganization," but she had "no more understanding" of the report than she did when she arrived. She said that from what she knew about the report, "I don't like it." Miss Nerbonne is from Weymouth, and is a member of many organizations at Framingham including a faculty evaluation committee.

Sander J. Devolve, 18, a freshman class president at Lowell Tech, said that he's "in favor of the reorganization because there are 41 boards right now," and under reorganization there would be fewer. He called the plan "economically feasible" but added that if the proposal goes through as is "you're going to lose a certain autonomy" which now exists exists. Devolve is from Johnston, R.I.

Two of four representatives from Quinsigamond Community College in Worcester said that they were opposed to the proposed reorganization. Asked if she like the proposal, LuAnn E. Papagni, 19, a freshman said, "I don't." Miss Papagni is secretary of her school's student council and lives in Auburn.

Gary S. Loomis, 20, also from Quinsig, said that the plan "gives too too much power to too few people — at least the Governor" but he added that "doing away with the boards seems like a good idea." Loomis, a sophomore on the student council from Webster, said that the proposal would be "consolidating" and that if it was "feasible" it would save money.

Nixon's Second Term

by Galen Tinder

While only a month and a half has passed since the second inauguration of Richard Nixon there is ample evidence to suggest that his second term in office will be just as dismal as his first. This evidence, which includes, but is not limited to, his inaugeration speech, his new budget proposal, his new cabinet, and his recent remarks concerning amnesty suggest that the sweet taste of victory, far from soothing his wounds and making him a more magnanimous individual, has had the effect of making all those qualities which has made him such a failure as a public official more pronounced than ever before. Instead of attempting to heal the divisions which have ripped this country apart for so many years Nixon is acting in such a way that can only make these divisions deeper and more serious than they already are.

Nixon's inaugeration speech was a vacuous and at times offensive tribute to what has been heralded as the "new individualism". Its thrust was that people should place less reliance on the government. Instead of asking what the government can do for them people should ask themselves what they can do for themself. These words in themself seem reasonable enough. Surely the principle of self-reliance is one to which most people would readily ascribe. But coming from Nixon's mouth they take on an odious coloring. Stripped of its rhetorical polish Nixon's message is that the poor and socially disadvantaged should quit feeling sorry for themselves, stand up on their own two feet, and make the best of what they have without government coddling. Stripped of its euphemistic garb, the new individualism is really just an old conservatism. With his customary skill of implying something without really saying it, Nixon suggested that there must be something wrong with those who cannot fend for themselves. They must either be defective in character or overwhelmed by laziness and lassitude. While he did not dare to go so far as to suggest that welfare programs be discontinued Nixon was nonetheless aiming straight at the hearts of the white middle class which resents the way in which welfare "chiselers" get paid for doing nothing. While it is true that there are a few welfare cheats the vast majority of welfare recipients are not able bodied men but women and children. Furthermore it is difficult to get very indignant over a few welfare cheaters when the government tolerates huge conglomerates which specifically design their products so as to wear out within a certain period in time. It is these companies which threaten America and not a few people who may lean to heavily on the federal government for support. Aside from the ominous notion of a new individualism, Nixon's inaugeration speech was a masterpiece of emptiness. Nixon has a genius for sounding as though he is saying a great deal when he is, in fact, saying nothing whatsoever.

President Nixon's budget proposal is consonant with the tone he set in his inaugeration address. Nixon has asked for an increase of 4.2 billion dollars for defense spending while curtailing, and in some cases, eliminating many of the worthwhile domestic programs which began under Johnson in the name of economic frugality. He has even gone so far as to refuse to spend money which Congress has already appropriated for various programs. The constitutional basis, or lack thereof, of such an action will undoubtably be a matter of much discussion in coming weeks.

Concerning Nixon's new cabinet there is little to say. Like the old one it is an uninspiring collection of mediocre minds who will, like Elliot Richardson, agree with anything the President does no matter how barbaric.

Perhaps the best insight into Nixon's state of mind can be gained from his position on the issue of amnesty. In a recent news conference he declared, "Amnesty means forgiveness. We cannot provide forgiveness for the draft evaders. Those who served their country paid their price. Those who deserted must pay their price, and the price is not a junket in the Peace Corps. . .The price is a criminal penalty for disobeying the laws of the United States." From this uncomprimising statement it is clear that his double victory, at the polls and in Paris has not led the President toward the path of reconciliation.

The question of whether amensty should be granted to those who refused to fight in Vietnam is a complex one over which legitimate debate can exist. That draft deserters broke the law and that other men died in their place cannot be denied. Nonetheless the arguments in favor of a conditional amnesty are very strong ones.

First, it was not, as Nixon stated, the men who avoided the draft who made the mistake but rather the country which tried to draft them. It is the United States which committed itself to a policy of political stupidity and moral depravity and the men who refused to lend their bodies to such an ignoble cause stand on firm ground. The heroes of the Vietnam war are not the soldiers who bombed and slaughtered the civilians of Southeast Asia but those who made the agonizing decision to leave their family, their loved ones, and their homeland rather than be accomplices to the immorality they abhorred. These heroes realized that the ultimate judge of their actions was not the law of their country but the rest of humanity. It is nearly impossible to act with absolute moral purity in the realm of human affairs. When committing oneself to a course of action one rarely has the luxury of choosing an absolute right over an absolute wrong. Moral guilt is inexcapable. Those who refused to fight in Vietnam had to choose between two rights, obedience to the laws of their country and obedience to the universal law of morality. Their decision was, on the balance, the correct one.

But the issue of amnesty goes beyond the question of who was right and who was wrong. Even if the Vietnam war had been a moral and justified war, to the extent that such a specimen of human conduct can attain these qualities, a national leader should have the decency and compassion to forgive those who opposed him. All human beings make mistakes and to deny forgiveness for these mistakes is to deny them their humanity.

Paralleling these two arguments in favor of amnesty are the two reasons why Nixon is so adamently against it.

First, he simply does not recognize the immorality of the war. At the most Nixon may consider it inappropriate, ill-managed, and politically unfeasible but he still regards it as an essentially moral undertaking.

Secondly, and equally as important, Nixon is simply not the kind of man in whom the qualities of forgiveness, understanding, and compassion for the unfortunate reside. From the very beginning of his career he has shown himself to be a shallow, nasty man, who is at his happiest when kicking a fallen foe. In his book, The Six Crises, Nixon gives an illuminating though blood chilling account of how, when he was traveling in an underdeveloped country and was spit upon by a native, he had his companions hold the offender while he fleefully kicked him in the shins. The fact that Nixon would not only stoop to such behavior but recall it with satisfaction is horrifying but not surprising. Nixon is not only devoid of admirable human qualities but enjoys wallowing in self-righteous indignation and vindictiveness. Nixon has always felt wounded and mistreated by his critics and now, armed with his blood drenched peace settlement he plans to back them into a corner where he can harass and humiliate them. For these reasons there will be no declaration of amnesty coming from Richard Nixon unless, perhaps, it becomes politically expedient.

Politics has been falsely characterized as the science of the technique of means. On this account politics is merely the manipulation of power. But politics can be more fully characterized as the subsumption of social organization under moral principles for while it is true that politics must concern itself with technique, that is with the means by which to arrive at desired ends, the ends are always prior to the means (for all means must aim toward some particular end) and the ends must always rest upon some moral supposition. The question of moral ends rests upon philosophy for the question of what ends the organization of society ought to aim at rests upon the question of what man's obligations are toward his fellow man and this in turn rests upon the question of what man is, which is a topic of philosophy.

The President is both the moral and the philosophical leader of the country for it is he who through his policies and general bearing, who determines its mood, its moral sensitivity, and its view of itself. The most satisfying personal relationships are those in which the other person is able to not only draw out the best of one's qualities but to accent these qualities and to reflect them in such a way that they become part of one's image of oneself. This, in a somewhat looser sense, is what a President should do in respect to his country. But the only kind of President who can do this is one who has an awareness of the correct ends which should be achieved and a knowledge of the means by which to arrive at those ends. The worst kind of President is one who is a brilliant tactition of means but lacks the moral vision requisite for achieving the proper ends. Such a President will only debase the country he leads.

Richard Nixon falls into the latter of these two classes. To have a man of Nixon's character as its leader can do a country tremendous harm for he will draw out its worst qualities. Not only have Nixon's actions robbed this country of any of the moral purpose which it had during the Kennedy and early Johnson years, but his banality, deviousness, and lack of integrity have polluted the national atmosphere. The inconguity between his high flown rhetoric and his actual policies and character has created a vacuum in which a mockery is made of honesty and in which the possibility of true communication between the leader and the lead shrivels up as does a plant deprived of moisture. Reality itself has become partly hidden behind a shroud of half-truths and lies.

This country is at a point in history when it desperately needs a leader who will draw it toward the path of redemption and who will appeal to what is best in the American spirit. In Richard Nixon, this country lacks such a leader.

The Rosenberg Case Re-evaluated

By Carl Greenberg

The Emplosion Conspiracy
by Louis Nizer
Doubleday
495 pages, illustrated $10.00

It is theoretically impossible for a trial to be political in the United States. It is, actually, not legal to try a man for his political beliefs in this country. Yet, undeniably, such prosecutions occur. They have happened from before Sacco and Vanzetti to Angela Davis and the Chicago Seven and will happen again.

In The Implosion Conspiracy, Louis Nizer explores one of the most amazing of such trials - the prosecution, conviction and execution of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg for stealing the secret of the atomic bomb and giving it to the Russians. Nizer has already proven his high competency in writing on the legal profession in two previous books on his own activities as a lawyer, My Life in Court and The Jury Returns. In The Implosion Conspiracy, he has taken a superbly critical and objective look at the Rosenberg trial after extensive research and as a result has produced what is probably the best book written on it.

He warns us at the beginning that he is not going to venture an opinion on their guilt or innocence. He says that the question of whether they were guilty or not is "a wrong question". As in his other books, he takes time out to explain a host of legal processes and procedures and very expertly interprets what is really going on at a trial. Over and over, he reminds us that the bare printed record of a trial is not nearly sufficient to give an insight into what the atmosphere was like, and with how much notice any particular bit of testimony was received. The jury is supreme - it is what they see and hear that determines how they will interpret what is happening and what their verdict will be. Nizer superbly describes the importance of the announced end of a trial. At the end of three weeks (it seems longer than that) both prosecution and defense announced that they rested their cases. Nizer says: "These announcements were like steel bands placed around the testimony. The jury, the judge and the Appellate Courts were bound by the contents within."

What was the testimony? What was the trial? Ethel and Julius Rosenberg had been accused of, among other things, organizing the spy ring which stole the secret of the triggering device of the atomic bomb. Nearly all of the evidence was oral testimony, not objective, physical evidence, and by far the most damning of the testimony was that of David and Ruth Greenglass. David was Ethel's own brother.

Nizer gives clear, useful biographical sketches of all the principals of the trial. The Rosenbergs were somewhat less than well-off middle-class New York Jews who had been active Communists. Judge Irving Kaufman, prosecuting attorney Irving Saypol and defense attorneys Alexander and Emanuel Bloch (father and son) were all Jews. This becomes important, as Nizer points out, because it may be that the judge, who was responsible for sentencing, was inclined not to be soft on fellow Jews. It is probable that there were all sorts of patterns on everyone's part of shame, feelings of solidarity and split loyalties.

The trial took place in 1951, around the time of the height of the McCarthy hearings. Countless times the judge reminded the jury that the Rosenbergs' Communism wasn't on trial, but who can say what was really the influence on the jury? How did they really feel about David Greenglass testifying against his own sister?

As we read of how David, who has already confessed his part in the scheme, reported on his work as a machinist at Los Alamos, it seems that what he was able to tell and sketch of the trigger device is not really such a big deal. It turns out that the principle of the device is the implosion of high explosive by means of metal lenses directed toward a central point where lies the atomic material. Was that really such a great secret even then. There doesn't seem to be a great deal of testimony on this point.

The farther in we read, the less real evidence there seems to be. Nizer, who has already warned us that we cannot declare with certainty on the guilt of the Rosenbergs, says that there appears to have been enough evidence presented for the jury to have made a decision. It is not up to us to make a decision on review. They received the fairest of trials, there was a record number of appeals, there was a record number of appearances before the Supreme Court, there were appeals for clemency to two Presidents (Truman passed the buck to Eisenhower).

If we cannot fault the legal system, if we cannot pick out obvious mistakes, obvious prejudices, obvious wrong of any sort, we can at least learn something from the temper of the times. Nizer says that he believes that there wasn't enough evil proved to warrant the sentence of death. There was, indeed, a good deal of good to be done by not carrying out the death penalty. Two children were made orphans at the Rosenbergs' execution, and even worldwide public opinion was flaunted.

On the day of her death, Ethel wrote the following lines in a letter to her children:

"Be comforted. . .that we were serene and understood with the deepest kind of understanding that civilization had not as yet progressed to the point where life did not have to be lost for the sake of life; and that we were comforted in the sure knowledge that others would carry on after us."

The picture of a husband and wife on death row is one of the grimmest in history. They were separated by only thirty feet and yet could not see or hear each other because of the walls. For over two years, all they had to look forward to was Wednesdays when they could see and talk through a screen.

All of the great fairness of our judicial system ended in condemning them to this. There is, indeed, a great deal of high principle and motive portrayed in The Implosion Conspiracy, but the book begins to radiate an atmosphere of confusion, crossed-purpose, unclear vision as it depicts the tragic consequences of the steel-bound testimony.

Ironically, there seems to be no place where the defense could blame itself. Should Julius and Ethel not have depended on the Fifth Amendment so much? Did the Blochs underestimate the seriousness of the adverse testimony? Perhaps, but if the charges were absurd, no one had any way of knowing that and the defense was in the unenviable position of having to defend against them anyway. They had to defend and not just claim absurdity. No charge of espionage was absurd during the Red scare.

More so than in perhaps any other case, the appeal route was taken to its limit. Even during the final horror of having the time of execution being moved up a few hours, it becomes obvious that the Blochs had, that very afternoon, come up against the final roadblock. Eisenhower's next to final rejection, perhaps reminiscent of Nixon's claims of Charles Manson's guilt, is only hours before the execution:

"The execution of two human beings is a grave matter. But even graver is the thought of the millions of dead whose death may be directly attributable to what these spies have done."

That is the one thing that is never really finally determined. Just what had the Rosenbergs done. Just how serious was their crime and just how much of the crime were they responsible? Perhaps the Rosenbergs had nothing to do with it and Klaus Fuchs, who had been convicted of spying while at Los Alamos, and Harry Gold, the courier, were far more responsible.

Was the trial and the jury too caught up in the theatrics of spying, as manifested by the continual discussion of the Jello box gimmic of identification, to pay attention to the fact that there was no physical evidence?

The Rosenbergs end parallels the tragedy of coutless religious persecutions in history. Even as Joan of Arc and Salem witches were offered life in return for profession of guilt, so were Ethel and Julius Rosenberg promised life for similar soul-baring. All of this because the law is the law and it does not bend.

The United States does have a highly just judicial code. The abberitions in its use, therefore, are just so much more terrible. After the Rosenbergs were convicted, it seemed that there was absolutely no one who was willing to take a necessary merciful step. Each Appeal Court ruled correctly on the law - it was a shame that they could do nothing more.

Even in the last hours, after the last sitting of the Supreme Court on the case, Justice Jackson mentioned one of the paragraphs in the majority's opinion: "Vacating this stay is not to be construed as endorsing the wisdom or appropriateness to this case of the death penalty."

Then he said, "Don't you think the President may wish to weigh that statement in his consideration of executive clemency?"

Even the President felt himself caught in the times. He did not exercise his right to be merciful. And while Eisenhower could barely bring himself even to sound regretful, Ethel was writing her last letter to her children. In that letter she said:

"Only this morning it looked like we might be together again after all. Now that this cannot be, I want so much for you to know all that I have come to know. Unfortunately I may write only a few simple words; the rest your own lives must teach you."

Theater

It's A Ghost, It's A Gas, It's Frankenstein

By Joseph Arsenault

Dan Murphy has a very handsome but deliberate poise about him

Before talking with him, I waited upstairs in Machmer, listening to the nervous bustle of amateur theater buffs getting into the jargon so typical of actors and I just wondered what this interview would amount to. Halles Frankenstein is being produced this weekend. Very strong vibrations have been generating, it's one of the most exciting propositions that University Theater has had in quite a long time. So I decided to follow up on it.

JA–So talk, what are you trying to do?

DM–Basically, I created a theatrical spectacle. It's very stylized. I guess what I want people to know is that this is not a spoof, horror production. This is not a freak show in the ghouly monster tradition. I am sincerely rendering Frankenstein as a gothic parable, illustrating the forces of good over those of evil. Of course, evil will be vanquished as it always must be, only there are some very interesting complications that this play confronts.

JA–One of things that I'm curious to know is whether you follow the Shelley text at all, and how do you?

DM–Actually, we follow the 1932 Karloff movie, of course, there's not much plot there, and this is a play. Much of the basic story line comes from Shelley, only we emphasized, maybe even exaggerated the theatrical affects inherent in the script. We're also following the film very sketchily at best. I'm not trying to put that film on the stage. This is a theatrical rendition of Shelley's novel with the artifice and advantages of the stage brought to Frankenstein.

JA–So you're hinting that this must have a very complicated technical background.

DM–Right. I don't think that I'm going to tell you very many details about it either, except perhaps that it has to be one of the most difficult and complicated sets that Paul Wonsek has ever created or that Bartlett has ever been involved with. It's a very spectacular set; I am trying to enhance the melodramatic quality of the story by larger-than-life effects. (Steve Driscoll who was listening to this added that they had had four days of technical rehearsals which I found incredible. There's an intense desire to really perfect these many details because it is so important to the play and unless perfectly coordinated, would be disastrous.)

JA–Who wrote the script?

DM–I did, I'm using it for my master's thesis; that is why the production is my own personal project. It might be interesting to know that this is the first time Frankenstein has ever been set to the stage. Personally, that's where much of my own excitement comes in, this is a original work and gives me profound feeling of originality.

JA–Wasn't there a Frankenstein production in New York, some kind of laboratory theater or something guerilla-like?

DM–Did you see it?

JA–No, but I did read about it in some theater pamphlet about a year ago.

DM–It was a modernized, political, anti-establishment laboratory exercise. There were many political references, and finally they constructed a human sculpture on stage to represent the government as some modern Frankenstein. It was mostly improvised, but what I'm doing has nothing to do with that. It's completely different.

JA–I know that you don't want to but could you tell me some of them anyway?

DM–Well...I'd rather not tell very much only because I want to keep some of the mystery about it, it would destroy the atmosphere to know all the tricks before they happen. This far in advance, it would remove the shock and surprise effect that I want. One of essential things is that this is as far away from "camp" as possible. It is stylized in order to be really more effective. It isn't that I don't want people to laugh but this show is not meant to be hysterically funny. I have conceived it as an experience in the theater, as it once was.

Steven Driscoll and his victim rehearse this scene from Frankenstein.

JA–Briefly then, what's the atmosphere you're trying to create?

DM–Stormy nights, hunchbacked assistant plodding in the graveyard, two lonely men scurrily digging, rain, gruesome fog....

JA–I think I understand. You are really trying to create the gothic horror tale a la Poe, the essential horror tale.

DM–Yes.

JA–Who is acting in this?

DM–You know Steve Driscoll, he's the professor, Ned Bailey is the Doctor-assistant, Eileen Bailey as the young damsel, the people who are coming should not expect to see a Karloff imitation but they will probably be stunned by the heavy makeup masks etc.

JA–The story line?

DM–Gloomy castle, where obsessed scientist and his demented assistant seek to recreate life. The heroine remains naive, yet some how senses the danger, the friend-doctor is beset by the morality of the creation, his fear of this Evil that will be let loose on the world, that Evil being unnatural. Good must triumph.

JA–And the costumes?

DM–Miss Reed has made them late period 19th century in style in order to approximate the original time of the novel itself. We are trying to recapture the old.

JA–Are you really going to act realistically?

DM–We're acting in a traditional Sarah Bernhardt fashion with much feeling, with that kind of silent movie intensity. This is a play. Those who come must let the joy of manipulation allow them to surrender their egos to this highly manipulatory form. That's what it's all about, theater that captures the soul. It's an extravanganza, a huge production with dramatically conceived special effects, mostly compiled by John Holland. I stress the theater aspect because I want to combat some very strong prejudices.

JA–Any effects at all, this mystery interests me.

DM–Think daguerrotype. By the way, this is an almost exclusively student made production. It should boggle the mind.

JA–Well I'm going to go over to the set, just to look.

DM–Fine, go ahead.

Like I said, Dan Murphy has a soothing effect on the soul. I walked over to Bartlett, opened the door, and heard the hammering, saws ripping through wood, drills, all quite in keeping with the nature of this interview. A skeleton was coming to life before me.

An Evening With Ruddy Bich

In Concert: Buddy Rich And His 17 Piece Orchestra at the Julia Sanderson Theater, Springfield, January 24, 1973

"There are some people here from the University of Massachusetts newspaper. May I send them up to talk to you?" said our congenial host, Mr. Schneckter.

"No shit! Okay, let's not waste time. Send them up." said the loveable, outrageous, irascible, witty, funky, zany Buddy Rich of a thousand Carson - Cavett - Griffin - Douglas-Allen Shows and a few I Love Lucy episodes. Sure! That was he: rough-and-tumble, easygoing, give-and-take. It would be fun talking to this veteran. I decided to open with a joke, something to break the ice.

As we were shown into Buddy's miniscule 'dressing room' Jeff, my travelling companion, looked around the tiny room, the cigarette butts on the floor, and at the few pages of The Springfield Union flapping about on the floor and said, "So this is the dressing room of a star..."

"Yeah kid, this is the big time", said Buddy, cold as ice. Although we didn't know it, it was time to leave. I decided to try my icebreaker.

"What we've all come here for, actually, is to find out how many drum solos you've played in your life." , I said jovially, relishing the ridiculousness of the question and the overalll ridiculousness of beginning an interview with that. I couldn't imagine what far-out, wacky, reply this wiseacre would give.

"What kind of question is that? I'm not here to play games. We're not a bunch of children here, and If you want to ask childish questions, I'm not interested. I don't have time for such childish humor. I can't imagine anyone being interested in the inestimable amount of drum solos I've played. If you came here to talk about music, fine, but let's not have any more of this seventeen-year old humor."

He paused. I got up from the canvas and staggered around. Buddy opened up again:

"How many times have you driven around the block? Do you know?"

Okay Buddy, have it your way. As I dropped back, searching for Proper-Type Standard Usual Everyday Buddy Rich Interview Questions, Pete the photographer skipped into the rapidly-forming ring and asked Buddy why the Berklee Music School in Boston had blossomed into such a rich vein of talent for Buddy's band. Buddy said he didn't know, but it was a good school.

I remembered a Safe Interview Question and gingerly stepped back in by asking Buddy what he listened to when he went home at night.

Buddy was secure now, feeling he was in another dumb interview, and his face revealed the boredom and smug satisfaction of having to answer that flattering old chestnut. "I have some strange tastes. I like some string things, good vocals, some jazz."

Buddy got peeved when I asked him whom he meant by 'good vocals'.

"You know who they are: Sinatra, Tony Bennett, Areatha, Jack Jones, Mel Torme...people like that."

"I notice you're playing a lot of smaller towns, a lot of high schools now. You've played some incredibly out-of-way places; I think it was last month you even played my home town Greenfield. Nobody plays Greenfield. What's the reason for this?" I had given up and decided to forget about talking to Buddy Rich, and instead just Ask him Questions.

"Yes, that's right. We are playing a lot of smaller towns, a lot of high schools, things like that. I feel it's vital to go to the people who buy records. Entertaining in person is very important."

Let's see, he's a drummer, ask him Drummer Questions, stupid! "Uh, what's your opinion of rock drummers?"

Buddy nodded, acknowledging the fact that I was just a kid and was prone to ask questions like that. "My opinion is that the good ones are copied by the bad."

"Do you think they steal a lot of licks from jazz?"

"Sure. What else is there to steal from? Rock drummers don't create...The two bass drum gimmick is the only thing they do different, and that's only for commercial purposes. The high hat is gone, and you just don't have a full set of drums, no full sound. Louis Bellson (famous jazz drummer) is the best using the double bass."

Perhaps the only time that Buddy ever felt at east with us was when I fed him some easy fodder for his nasty-quote mouth. I asked him the old stand-by about how Ginger Baker said he wasn't a real drummer because he didn't use his feet (Buddy's bass drum work is negligable). Ah, this was perhaps the only question he didn't mind answering, as he gave us one of his world infamous irreverant quotes: "First of all, I don't consider Ginger Baker a human. That piece of nondescript ectoplasm is not a drummer, and I find that comment more of a compliment, considering where it came from."

As he said "non-descript ectoplasm" he looked up and made sure I was writing down this acid pearl. I was.

That was the high point of any relaxed relationship between us and Mr. Rich. Throughout our entire talk I was unable to address him by name. I certainly wasn't presumptous enough to call him "Buddy", and damned if I was going to bow to "Mr. Rich". Normally I have no trouble calling anyone "Mr." or "Ms.", but Buddy's ornaryness and Mr. Tough Guy approach made it impossible.

He told us that Bobby Colomby (Blood, Sweat & Tears) and Danny Seraphine (Chicago) were two good rock drummers, and they were about it. I asked if he knew my man, Keith Moon of The Who.

"Yes, I know Keith. We worked with them in Chicago once. He's far, far less of a drummer than the others I mentioned."

I then digressed into a futile attempt to save Keith from Buddy's disdain, citing his dynamic stage presence in addition to his excellent and inventive stick work. Not so, said Buddy. "His antics on stage are only to dramatize the fact that he can't keep time." Oh well...

"Anyway," said Buddy, "aren't The Who the group who break their instruments? I find that trick childish, and unjustifyable. Imagine all the people who can't afford instruments. I saw them in Chicago and they were chaotic and unprofessional."

We agreed that it was indeed a commercial gimmick, at least in part, and dared not reveal that it was a dynamite one given The Who's violent act. Jeff was foolish enough to quarrel, saying that it wasn't totally without justification, but Buddy was off and running, somehow telling us about Alice Cooper.

Trying to break this mean streak of conversation, I asked him how he expected to compete in the high schools against Alice Cooper, taking into account that there might be slight differences between them, seeing both Buddy and Alice charge about $4.00 a ticket and just maybe every kid didn't have $8.00 for both.

Buddy said he wasn't in competition with anyone, that it was all music, and then he was back to telling us how he didn't enjoy chaos on stage. "When I go to the theater, I want to be amused and entertained. Music means pleasant things. That's why people watch TV, read, listen to radio."

Jeff, always the fanatic, said that Alice Cooper hanging a snake (!) just might be theater. Buddy asked how old he was.

"Nineteen."

"Have you ever seen blood?"

"Yes."

"Have you ever seen a man's head blown off?"

"No."

"I have. Many times. I've been all around. I've been in a war." Seizing on his opponents weakness (nineteen, for Chrissakes!) he then rattled down the I've Seen-I've Been In list, through Street Fights and Auto Accidents. Buddy said that audiences don't go to shows to see blood running a different way than it did on the street (maybe he should check Alice's box office grosses). "I don't want life thrown back at me. Music isn't life. I get plenty of that everyday. I don't enjoy chaos. Destroying is not entertaining unless it makes sense."

We tried telling him that all entertainment doesn't have to have "life" in it, but some should have, even if in vain.

Buddy capped his dissertation by carrying things to idotic extremes by telling us that putting a Bowery bum on stage and blowing his head off would be a logical extension of what Alice and The Who do. (Psst, future interviewers, Buddy's got a snootful on this Show Biz As Entertainment jibe, so be careful. If you don't bring it up, he probably will). Before we dropped the barrage Buddy told us what he admired: "If someone could pull off a $300,000 bank heist without hurting anyone, then that would be something."

Pete, realizing that things were getting a might frosty, tried to make another Safe Bridge, and asked Buddy how he felt about Lenny's, a fine jazz club outside of Boston and perhaps the last one in the country to present jazz on a weekly basis, closing down. Buddy said he was sad, and it looked for a minute as if things might ease up a bit if Pete could remain in his new role of Safe Smart Guy. However, he blew it when he revealed himself to be just another Young Guy who didn't know that Paul's Mall in Boston had been open for years. Back to the ring.

Another Safe Question came to me and I asked why he had left World Pacific for RCA. Buddy replied that he was dissappointed with World Pacific and was even now leaving RCA because he was not satisfied with the way he was being represented, recorded or merchandised.

I grew desperate. I don't like bad scenes, and Buddy was giving off the worst vibes I've ever been hit by. I tried complimenting him. I told him it was nice to see someone like him willing to tour as much as he did.

"I've got a lot of money, I'm set for life. I could've retired ten years ago, but I enjoy touring. Why, I..."

Steve Miller

Anthology, The Best of the Steve Miller Band (Capitol SVBB-11114)

By Steve Feld

Steve Miller and his forever-changing Band have released seven albums in their carreer. Anthology, their eighth, is that retrospective, cunningly commercial phenomenon, the greatest hits album. But more than that, it signifies the emergence of a neo-Miller, an overtly self-conscious Miller, making amends for his past, extricating himself from his previous travesties in an attempt to redefine his musical attributes. It is an album conceived and assembled by and for Steve Miller in what appears to be a total personality re-evaluation. Instead of being the shot-in-the-arm that a greatest hits album usually is, Anthology carries with it a foreboding note of desparation, while setting up could very well be the greatest challenge of Miller's career.

Miller from the liner notes: "This is the first time I ever had the confidence to reveal myself in public. Always before, you know, people more or less needed to be fans to like the albums. Oh, I mean there'd be some good cuts and a couple of not-so-good cuts, and then some cuts that I don't even like to remember. But Anthology is what I always wanted to make – two good LPs that'll hold up. This is the first consistently good album I've ever made."

Miller's painful honesty, like a Trojan horse, delivers not what you'd expect, a dynamic new album representing a fruitfull reawakening (a la Lennon's primal album, New Morning, Who Came First and Tupelo Honey). For all its pretentions, Anthology is deceptively shallow, with the music playing a definite second fiddle to the context in which it is presented. It offers for sale Steve Miller's raison d'etre in what amounts to an act of prostitution, not restitution, the intended philosophism. His self-amdmitted mediocracy becomes reduced to the equipponderancy of a ridiculous sales pitch which, accompanying something as retrogressive as this, makes him a procrastinate, at very best.

Miller's contention that he "made" this album is, of course, a false one. There is nothing new here besides, supposedly, Miller himself. His songs aren't at all personal or autobiographical and many, like "I Love You" and "Little Girl" are vacuous and puerile. Nothing on this album lends us an idea to what the old Miller was like, which adds to the duplicity. This musician, in the final analysis, is resorting to words to express what should be reflected through the music, if it is to mean anything.

Taken on a gut level, the music on Anthology is uneven, sparse, and occasionally indiscriminate. There are bound to be conspicuous omissions for anyone acquainted with Miller's work and for this critic they are "Dear Mary", "Song for Our Ancestors", "Baby's Calling Me Home" and "Gangster of Love". Many of the selections, on the other hand, are not at all surprising: "Your Saving Grace", "Space Cowboy", "Living in the U.S.A." and "Journey from Eden."

Two of the album's finest cuts borrow from Miller's illustrious sidemen. "Baby's House" features the magnificient piano-playing of Nicky Hopkins and "My Dark Hour" is a wild, primitive rocker with Paul McCartney on bass guitar, drums, and back-up vocals. It's a bash, sounding not totally unlike a Beatle song. McCartney fans will especially find "My Dark Hour" an unexpected treat.

Anthology is an album that troubles me because of its implicit importance and misplaced sentiments. The final judgement of the new Steve Miller cannot be made until a new album is recorded. But this just serves as a testimonial to Miller's continual mediocracy.

Mahavishnu Orchestra

By Mike Kostek

Mahavishnu Orchestra
Birds of Fire
Columbia KC 31996 time: 40:04

"Woodshed", verb, popularized by Rolling Stone, Rock, and other seditious publications. The act of retreating from the creative forefront and replaying notes of bygone days. As in 'The Rolling Stones are the best woodshedders (noun) in the history of rock.'

Woodshedding is not necessarily bad by definition, as the Rolling Stones have proved. You can redo and rewrite notes gone by and be terrific in the process. No one can accuse the Stones of being any sort of innovators, just good music makers.

John McLaughlin and his fellow birds of fire have been accused of doing new things, being the best "jazz-rock" combo ever assembled, etc. And they were right. The Mahavishnu Orchestra was just about everything they said about them. Their future looked bright in the interim after their first album, The Inner Mounting Flame; their concerts were spectacular, blazing celebrations of electric flash and roaring beauty. While they did play mostly numbers from the Inner Mounting Flame, they would occasionally play a new tune. I recall three or four different new ones, one of which was called "Truth" I believe, and was especially frenetic.

Strange it is indeed that none of those new pieces appear on Birds Of Fire. If they do, they are in quite different form than their live versions.

With Birds Of Fire, the Mahavishnu Orchestra have abdicated their pole position in the race for New Music. For a band as earth-moving and innovative as they were on Inner Mounting Flame this comes as a shock and a sad turn of events.

What this band had come to mean was five individuals who could play like hell together and take their solos with eerie grace and stupifying brilliance. Billy Cobham, the drummer, is just tremendous, super-human; Jerry Goodman plays a seductive and compelling electric violin; Jan Hammer can flip in dazzling moog and keyboard work that can stand up with anything; Rick Laird is what a bass player should be, solid and dependable, with the right touch of inspired variation mixed in with his time-keeping. And the main man, Mahavishnu John McLaughlin; He is the best rock guitarist living, and more than able to hold his own in jazz circles also. He writes the tunes, he formed this group, and gives them its general direction. His songs feature intricate melodies running against rock hard repeated riffs, with bizarre and enchanting time changes throughout. John's session work with Miles Davis, Tony Willians, the Jazz Composer's Orchestra, Jack Bruce, etc. has given him a unique background to enter the rock world from. Thus he is an original in this area. Including the name of flaccid saps like Blood, Sweat & Tears or moronic Poppies like Chicago on the same 'jazz-rock' list with the Orchestra is both cruel and unusual. There just aren't any other bands like this one. We need them.

So it's serious business when their second album turns out to be a treadmilling water-treader that goes nowhere. Are these replays of yesterday permanent or just a resting spot on the long journey toward what we haven't got? Has touring made them crazy?

Things start off fine with "Birds Of Fire". The band zooms along fine in this rocker. There are a few deja etaits in here, like the skittering violin going up the scale to form the bridges, but that seems a minor point.

"Miles Beyond" is a definite look back, being a Miles Davis composition from several years back, but the band plays through with a deft and delicate touch. Jerry Goodman plays a nice little solo plucking his violin strings, and John introduces the theme with a beautiful humming guitar sound.

Things begin to break down, and you start wondering where you've heard it all before with "Celestial Terrestial Commuters" which sounds like a mix of about three Flame songs. Still, it is a clever mix, and the solos are nice, even if you can't get over how familiar those time changes seem.

"Sapphire Bullets Of Pure Love" is a terrific 21 seconds of the band going "SWOOSH". This bears no resemblance to anything whatsoever but one of the Mothers' sound rampages.

The "Lotus On Irish Streams" type cut on here is "Thousand Island Park", another quiet piece with John on accoustic guitar, Laird on accoustic bass and Hammer on accoustic piano. They spin a beautiful mood in those four minutes, and this musical trip in the country is more effective than the flabby six minute "Lotus".

Frustration and impatience flower in abundance when you realize that "Hope", the last cut on the first side, used the same chord progressions as "Celestial Terrestial Commuters". Both are well done, but John can do more.

Side two brings in the ten minute "One Word" and more consternation as the band opens up this solo showpiece by skimming through the theme from "Dragon Song" which appeared on McLaughlin's solo album Devotion back in 1969. Thankfully they don't emphasize this too much, and Billy Cobham sails through a beautifully paced but over-long drum solo. The others all fill in their spots skillfully, but the cut never emerges as anything but a solo showcase.

"Sanctuary" is another controlled emotion piece. John's playing is again reminiscent of Devotion, but this is a fine low-key number.

It turns out that the only cut on the album that sounds really different is the quiet parts of "Open Country Joy". With, light, airy country licks, the band seems ready at last to take us places we've not been. They do, but only until the bridge breaks in, sporting us back to a speeded-up variation of the same note tumble last heard in "Awakening" on Flame. If I'd never heard "Awakening" before, I'd think that "Open Country Joy" was a great tune. But as a rehash, and a not very clever rehash, it sounds like it was patched together.

And yes, the last cut, "Resolution", sounds like another cut from Devotion, "Siren". This "Resolution" is an ever-heightening build-up as John goes up the scale over a dramatic chord progression before cutting us off sharply.

Sadly, there it stands. What makes this all the more puzzling is the fact that McLaughlin has never had any trouble producing new music before. Is he in a permanent rut, or was he pressured into this album by contract deadlines?

Too much of the record is nothing but a showcase for solos (about 20 minutes out of 40), and although these boys can play, they don't really make the record stand out. The Inner Mounting Flame is a much tighter, unadorned picture of this band. Apparantly the solos the band missed there were saved for Birds.

Spring

Spring (United Artists Records UAS-5571)

By Steve Feld

I first got turned on to Spring early last September when I was given a stack of promo singles – sixty or so – destined for oblivion. As the tedious listenings ended, a basic tenet of the recording industry held true: invest in ten artists in hope that one will recoup its initial investment. As it turned out, 90% of the records, the rejects, met with a hideous fate.

But I'm disgressing. It's the ones I kept I want to talk about. The first one that comes to mind was a groovy re-issue of Little Eva's "Locomotion", truly an immortal. Then there was "It's Too Late To Turn Back Now" by Cornelius and Sister Rose. There were songs from two rising stars, Jim Pulte and Lori Leiberman. And then there was Spring.

The Spring single was "Good Time" b/w "Sweet Mountain" and it stood me on my ear. "Good Time", a sparkling, bouyant number, was filled with exhuberance and spirit that fulfulled what the title promised. It was the essence of happiness preserved on vinyl. "Sweet Mountain", longer and more complex, was a shimmering opus of restrained joy. Lovely and lively, impecably performed and produced.

Being convinced the single was extraordinary, wheels were set in motion:

—I played it extensively for whomever was around. Without fail in every case it met with incredibly positive reactions;

—I tried frantically to get the album from which "Good Time" and "Sweet Mountain" were culled. It proved easier said than done: no one had ever heard of Spring or their album. It took four months of searching and waiting before it was mine

---Sounds unheard, I unremittingly placed the album on my "Ten Best" list, with nary a doubt that my reputation as a critic would be blemished. I wasn't wrong.

Many successful female vocal groups, past and present, have a special camaraderie with their producer, who plays auteur while directing the course of their careers and records. If recognition is achieved (as with Phil Spector and the Ronnettes, Holland-Dozier-Holland with the Supremes), the acclaim is most often given to the producer, the group being an extension of his talent. It's clearly a symbiotic relationship when these two elements click together; one that includes the listener, for the results can be truly amazing.

Spring, as it turned out, is Marilyn and Diane Rovell. First known as The Honeys, they've released several singles, none meeting with any outstanding success or recognition. All were produced (and several written) by Brian Wilson of the Beach Boys. They've sung on nearly every Beach Boys album in return. The connections don't stop there, however, for Marilyn happens to be Brian's wife.

Although he contends that he's just a hard-working guy, it is the expressed opinion of many that Brian is much, much more. Foregoing the pretnetiousness that the world "genius" lends itself to, let's just say that he's been around for a long while and excels remarkably in song-writing and record production. Listen to "Good Vibrations", "Heroes and Villains" or "Surf's Up", and it will give you a clue to the instrumental and vocal intricacies this guy can dream up. His presence is indelibly etched into every groove of Spring. On the album cover credits his name appears several times. His arrangements are flawless, as are his songs and his production. Spring is happy, feel-good music, summed up so conveniently by "Good Time".

This leave the songs, which are so very appropriate. There are lots of oldies, songs from the past that they and we love to sing. From the Beach Boys' repetoire there is "This Whole World", "Forever", "Thinkin' About You Baby", and "Good Time", the symphonic soap-opera. There are two Carole King songs, "Now That Everything's Been Said" and "Down Home", a sentimental childhood memory that was, ironically enough, recorded first by the aforementioned Little Eva, on the flip side of "Let's Turkey Trot" in 1963. Two old standards are included, "Tennessee Waltz" and "Mama Said".

Slightly damping the enthusiasm is a Tommy Roe song, "Everybody", which I've never liked. "Superstar", the Leon Russell-Bonnie Bramlett collaboarion has already reached its peak when the Carpenters did it. "Superstar", as well as most of the songs, were picked, no doubt, by the girls themselves. They fit perfectly into the girl-group genre, a genre who's premiere priority is the material itself. Spring enjoyed every minute making this record; this feeling, if no other, permeates through every note.

It's only a dire shame that this record hasn't been in any stores, and has been heretofore unnoticed. Besides having a penchant for all-girl groups, there's, in the final analysis, countless reasons for liking it so much--the light, airy feeling that is the season they name themselves after; the almost unanimous choice of select songs; the sublime virtuosity of Brian Wilson; the harmonious cacophony of "Sweet Mountain". I could go on all day.

Be on the lookout for Spring.

What To Expect For $4.50

By Gary Gomes

McLaughlin: "First of all, in order to appreciate what we are about to offer you, to appreciate sound, one must first appreciate silence. We ask for a moments silence. Thank you."

The audience responds with catcalls, and a rather polite gentleman behind me asks: "What does he want for $4.50?" That, sir, is a most interesting question. Jesus Christ, would it have killed you just to sit still for a few moments without yelling some derogatory comment at the musician.

In most respects, Trinity College in Hartford is pretty much the same as any college. So far, however, only Zappa--perhaps Captain Beefheart, as well--have had any degree of success in handling such audience reactions. McLaughlin, however, won't play such games with the audience, for, in truth, he is above that type of thing -- but it still seems as though it saddens him to be greeted with such a negative response. Does the gentleman ask himself, not what McLaughlin wants for $4.50, but what he himself wants for $4.50? Perhaps he really wants somebody to tell him what an ass he is. I don't know.

Flashback through Time and Space:

The first bit of notice that McLaughlin got as a musician was in the Graham Bond Organization, a British jazz outfit later to turn R&B, which featured such noticeables as Ginger Baker and Jack Bruce, circa 1963. He was mellow and fairly conventional then. Still later he joined up with keyboard wizard Brian Auger's Trinity, during which time, according to Jack Bruce, the critics completely ignored him (McLaughlin's on the Julie Driscoll, Brian Auger and the Trinity album "Open"). Into fairly blues-based guitar at the time, but Auger was doing some pretty heady stuff at the time. Change of scene, and McLaughlin heading into post-Coltrane jazz. As Jack Bruce said, nobody was paying any attention at the time, so in 1968, while Bruce was still in Cream, he called upon the services of McLaughlin for the "Things We Like" LP. Another album, this time with British jazz saxophonist John Surman – one of the best – that helped McLaughlin get still more recognition. After "Extrapolation" (a pretty acoustic LP), Tony Williams (Miles Davis' drummer), who had heard McLaughlin on tape, called England and asked McLaughlin to join the new group he was forming. Further contacts and now he was playing free electonic music with Khallid Yasid (Larry Young), and Williams. More albums. Miles Davis has him play on "Bitches' Brew". An album with Wayne Shorter, and many more. The "Devotion" LP was an outgrowth of McLaughlin's work with Williams' group. End of first stage in McLaughlin's development.

McLaughlin goes through a lot of acid and a lot of 'free' music, and he is quickly losing sight of himself. A breakaway from Williams, and he hitches up with Larry Coryell for a little while. They are both trying to understand what the hell they've been doing. McLaughlin and Coryell get heavily involved with religion. It's too much for Coryell, so he splits after the Coryell - McLaughlin collaboration "Spaces", and forms his own group, modeled pretty much after Gary Burton's form of jazz-rock.

The union is not fruitless, since McLaughlin then joins up with the drummer on the "Spaces" album, Billy Cobham. Cobham came up through pretty much of a grind procedure, playing with probably one of the most advanced jazz-rock groups at the time, Dreams. In came Jerry Goodman, violinist with the Flock, a mean, punchy group out of Chicago. He jammed with Keith Emerson and the Nice once on a television show that was supposed to show how Rock and Classical music were coming together (Remember Zuben Mehta? Zuben and the Jets?). Jan Hammer, the pianist and synthesizerist, had played with Jeremy Steig and a myriad of others after his departure from his native Holland. Rick Laird was brought in from a blues-rock group in Florida.

Now, remember, by this time, McLaughlin was tired of playing free music. Besides, he had just received enlightenment through Sri Chinmoy, and he wanted to make a music dedicated to the creator. The purpose of this new group, which took McLaughlin's spiritual title, Mahavishnu, as its title, was to find freedom through discipline, much in the tradition of the classical music of India.

Also, although McLaughlin didn't seem to realize it at the time, he was filling a void in a lot of people, after the untimely death of Hendrix and the stagnation of Eric Clapton. The second underground wave from England – with Page, Beck, Peter Green, etc. – wasn't filling the void left from the creative experience of Hendrix. So, a third generation of guitarists was born. Zappa might have filled the void, but not quite, since "Hot Rats" was too little too late – I mean, he's still trying to be accepted a little too seriously, but hype manufactured around him made breakthrough a bit tough. Duane Allman looked as though he was headed in that direction, but he made the mistake of dying. So now it's up to Coryell and McLaughlin to fill the void of a solo instrument that's as vital to rock as the saxophone is to jazz.

So, here I am at Trinity College waiting for a chance to hear one of the finest groups about, and what should greet my ears other than the dulcive tones of Aerosmith, a really horrible group, who we were informed (about 5 times at least) had a new album out on Columbia records. I won't here try to justify my dislike of them, but I just have to say that someday, somebody's going to make a living guitar, and that guitar will throw off the tyranny of having three chords played on it every single nite. One of the gentlemen I was with at the concert informed me that they probably had to go through a lot of hassles to get a recording contract and everything else. Maybe so, but there are a lot of other people around with a lot of talent who don't even have a contract. And my God, a teenage band could play this stuff. They did "Stroll On" by the Yardbirds, but that's been done by innumerable teen bands to the death. Come on, people, grow up!

Finally, after the last excruciating note was pumped out, the band retired, and people lit matches in anticipation of the Mahavishni Orchestra. Now McLaughlin stands at center stage, modest and unassuming, to make the request that I told you about at the beginning of this article. After that was over, Cobham picks up the biggest mallet I've ever seen and strikes the gong full force, sending the vibrations through the basketball court. McLaughlin begins strumming the twelve string of his double neck guitar lovingly, Goodman adds a few downward strokes on the violin (blue in colour), and they're off and flying into "Birds of Fire". Beautiful melody, then they're off and flying. A break off, then they're into "Open Country Joy", another track from the new album. This one's soft, acoustic and very, very mellow, and every one contributes well. Especially strange to catch were the keyboard manipulations of Jan Hammer, who had his Mini-Moog set to a frequency somewhere between the guitar and the violin, and he was wailing, totally into the music.

Next up was "Song of Maya" from the "Inner Mounting Flame" album. Now this one starts with a long expository passage, and then breaks into a blues pattern, but the blues is fixed rhythmically, so it doesn't sound like a blues that much. Beautiful stuff. Again this fades out and they work their way into a number with Jan Hammer and Jerry Goodman playing a little country rock thing, with Goodman playing the violin like a guitar. McLaughlin, and Cogham later come in, and get into the full spirit of the thing. Running, building up, falling apart, the individual members of the group working together as one mind. As a friend of mine remarked to me "When they said they were an orchestra, they meant it.

"One Word" was the piece that really brought it all down, however. (By the way, John McLaughlin didn't announce any of the pieces. I just happened to recognize the songs from the albums.) First a Billy Cobham drum break – a perfect roll, much like one that Tony Williams would produce, followed by one little bit from the "Dragon Song" on McLaughlin's "Devotion" LP, which serves as a springboard for several more drumbreaks. Cobham is an incredible drummer, and the real pity of it is that he's never been captured accurately on record. The composition then led up to a really fine bass solo by Rick Laird, which built and then released in smooth fashion. The song continued, with a drum solo by Cobham which was both technically excellent and inventive. Then the real fireworks began, as McLaughlin, Goodman and Hammer worked together like some sort of Holy Trinity, working the same line over and over again. In person, the effect is incredible. Then, end of concert. Encore.

McLaughlin in person is much better than McLaughlin on record. Elsewhere in this magazine, Mike Kostek mentions the fact that he thinks McLaughlin is repeating himself. That really more or less depends on your point of view. What he's currently doing has its spiritual roots both in what John Coltrane and master Indian musicians did, except that the instrumental media is electronic, which might sound like a contradiction in terms. However, McLaughlin really isn't interested in progress in the Western sense of the word. And his group really can't be compared to Coryell's since Coryell is very rationally oriented and McLaughlin is oriented toward the spirit, that which can't be expressed in word or thought – only feeling and experience. And I have the feeling that I experienced something remarkable.

What does he expect for $4.50? Just your co-operation.

"Fellini's Roma": Ziegfeld Revisited

By Bob Nesti

Fellini Roma
Written for the screen and directed by Frederico Fellini.

Roma is the furthest extension of Frederico Fellini's experiments with form. Fellini's innovations are amongst the most influential of post-war films; La Dolce Vita and 8-1/2 were touchstone works for filmmakers of this past decade, but few have approached the two divergent structures the director created in Satyricon and The Clowns. The fomer was a quasisurreal impression of antiquity, the latter a more conventional and genial study of the dying clown life of European circuses; both were extraordinary interpretations of the documentary mode. Fellini has personalized his films to a point where he has become their Master of Ceremonies, introducing us to his beautiful, bizarre, quixotic, and exciting imagery. The two continual themes that have emerged in Fellini's work are the circus as a metaphor for life and the setting of Rome as the tent in which it plays. The Clowns explores the first theme, Roma extends that with emphasis on the second.

Roma is Fellini's evocative fresco of Rome over the past forty years. His structure is episodic and he links each section with the romantic notion that we are on the verge of the Apocalypse which he, the director, presumes himself to host. It is a beautifully drawn, fantastic vision of a master showman. Fellini approaches his tour of Rome the say way Ziegfeld staged production numbers--much gloss, much style, much bravura theatrics. There is little doubt that Fellini is one of the greatest living filmmakers, but the director mass--markets his prestige with this film. Fellini doesn't sell out by exploiting his past successes, rather he miscalculates and takes us on a tour of Rome that's like an Italianized Disneyland. It's difficult to separate Fellini the cool satiric genius from Fellini the bombastic showman and the film is schizoid by consequence. He begins with an ox voice-over-titles introduction, like Deems Taylor in Fantasia, explaining the uniqueness of its form. Perhaps he should have apologized for the banality of his material. His talents drown in its own dream world. In the first section, a childhood memory of impressions of Rome and a visit there as a young man, is reminscent of the introduction of The Clowns. Fellini falls back on the most whimsical and sentimental ploys a director could use to win the affection of his audience, but I've seen circus elephants do it with more grace. The boy, Fellini as a child, fantasizes on the wife of a town official he sees at the local cinema and the fantasy looks like a vulgar and humorless Cyd Charisse production number from a garishly technicolored, late Forties musical. Fellini catalogues similar old comedy routines as if his touch would transform even the most tiring of them into enchantment.

Fellini, the young man, moves to Rome in the late Thirties and his arrival and settlement there is both amusing and alienating. He stays in a room at a public apartment owned by his family's bizarre Roman friends. Must everyone in a Fellini movie appear as if they're in the last stages of emotional asphyxiation? His first evening in Rome the Fellini character visits a sidewalk restaurant. The restaurant scene is played at such a pitch as to appear like the bacchanale from Satyricon in Thirties dress. The sense of balance is off, Fellini continually wants to shock us, but does so with a savage simple-mindedness. This scene has a numbing quality in its emphasis on the hysterical dining manner of the Roman worker, as if to suggest that all the diners needs are copies of Emily Post. Fellini ends this sequence with an extraordinary pan of the city street in the summer heat, quiet except for the sporadic electrical flashes of a streetcar mechanicism. There are a number of such moments in Roma--beautifully evocative, dreamlike and vibrant, but you must cut through mires of conventionality to experience them. Next comes his much-discussed recreation of Roman traffic congestion. Fellini tells us he wants to begin our tour proper with a peripheral look of the city from the many highways that encircle it. He then proceeds to give us a quick tour of Fellinism on the road and off. You feel this could be Budapest and Fellini would stock it with the same grostesque images.

Fellini uses short vignettes to fill between sequences that are the same cliches about Italian life we saw in Three Coins in the Fountain and Summertime. Isn't there a Roman male yet who hasn't pretentions of being a gigolo and must American woman abroad always look like sex-starved, overdressed matrons? A variety night at a vaudeville house during the war follows. This is the worst portion of Roma for not only isn't it particularly funny, it's lacklustre and boring. The theatrical realm has always been Fellini's forte; it's depressing to see him slip into caricature of it at the point when his film needs invention most. Each major sequence is built upon dream logic; halway through the tone and subject matter quickly and mysteriously change. This one is caused by an Air Force drill which forces evacuation of the vaudeville house that leads to another of the film's finest images: a hysterical woman running and screaming for help beneath what appears an endless bridge.

Fellini's prostitutes in Roma.

A visit to the construction site of a proposed Roman underground is another inspired moment. The digging unveils a hidden ancient Roman house with fresco that evaporates from the harsh awakening to the present. The mood is resigned, pensive, and the sequence is beautifully photographed. Fellini introduces another flashback, this of the houses of prostitution which flourished in Rome during the Forties. He contrasts the severe cackling of the lower class whores with the demure stance of the upper class ones as if comparing margarines and finally opting out for the higher price spread. The whores are an essential Fellini image but where they're sideshow showpieces lacking an ounce of the humanity he brought the street girls in Nights of Cabiria. He becomes like Disney in Fantasia, ineptly fumbling great artistic themes, but here he fumbles his own. Its self-flagellation for commerical sake. Time Magazine has called this film the Fellini film for those who have never seen a Fellini film; it's an apt but backhanded compliment. For those familiar with the director's work see a shimmering surface lacking the compassion and comic depth found in his earlier films. The White Sheik, an early Fellini social comedy, also concerned itself with rural couple's first visit to Rome and most of its fun came with watching the characters interact in this foreign, sophisticated culture. Roma never concerns itself with anything but the surface of characters as it spends most of its time exploiting its grandiose theme. Fellini envisioned decayed antiquity in Satyricon, here he sees himself as host of the Apocalypes, but it's as serious as a television variety show. The final image of a gang of motorcyclists speeding through the Roman streets late at night is beautifully banals but you realize you would laugh at the implications of such an image in a Roger Corman film.

Fellini does achieve one superb sequence, that of an ecclesiastical fashion show which emerges from the reverie of a dead aristocratic gathering like a phoenix. The moment shimmers--here Fellini is in complete control of his cap abilities and the organized Church, one of Fellini's greatest targets, receives an all but fatal blow. Few sequences of any recent film can equal it for verve and imagination, and it makes Fellini Roma worth seeing, in spite of its serious flaws.

Deliver Us From Tension

By Brian Dailey

Deliverance
Written for screen by James Dickey from his own novel; directed by John Boorman; photographed by Vilmos Zsigmond; edited by Tom Priestley; with John Voight, Burt Reynolds, Ronny Cox, Ned Beatty, and James Dickey.

From the moment the lights in the theater were dimmed and that image appeared on the silver screen I felt the tension begin to mount within myself. I immediately recognized myself in all four of the Atlanta businessmen as they set out through the backwoods of Georgia to take a canoe trip down the largest river in the state; the Chattooga River. I felt the uneasiness they obviously experienced upon being immersed in the alien world of the hillbillies. I found myself hoping they would take the advise of one of their party and go back home and just play golf that weekend.

The overpowering feeling of forboding evil and disaster were almost too much to bear until director John Boorman transformed a relatively unimpressive passage from Dickey's novel, where genetically damaged boy echoes on his banjo the notes. Drew (Ronny Cox) previously picked on his guitar, into one of the most moving scenes of human interaction ever captured on film. The volley of guitar and banjo music increases in speed and intensity as the two characters become more involved, until finally the small boy reaches a point at which Drew is left unable to continue. Boorman subtely makes the point of a natural skill being superior to a learned one without force feeding it as Dickey so often does in his novel. After the boy finishes, Drew congratulates him and tries to shake his hand, but the boy immediately returns to his previous catatonic state and refuses any contact from the stranger. This particular scene made me feel for a short time the connection between the two types of people but I was soon back feeling my earlier tensions when the scene ended by stressing the very apparent differences between these two worlds and the obvious intrusion these four men (along with the viewer) were causing.

For three of the men the trip is just "another night out with the boys" but for Lewis (Burt Reynolds) there is a mighty force within him which compels impossible. He explains this him to strive to overcome the trial that he and the others are subjecting themselves to by saying, "Machines are gonna fail. The systems gonna fail. And then--survival!" The others just seem to humor Lewis as they proceed to have a peaceful but exciting day riding the rapids in their two canoes. When they finally reach a calm spot in the river where they decide to camp for the night Ed (Jon Voight) says with a sense of triumph and relief that they have beaten the river but Lewis is more realistic and just says, "You don't beat this river." It is here that we first realize that the river and the surrounding forest are characters in themselves and we see their beauty and danger side-by-side.

Burt Reynolds. "Reynolds also had the worst lines to say and I must admit that his reading of those particular lines didn't improve them any."

The next day the river separates the four men and two of them, Ed and Bobby (Ned Beatty), are sexually assaulted and tortured by two mountain men as they step ashore to wait for the others. They ae saved from further injury when Lewis arrives and shoots one of the men with his bow while the other escapes through the woods. Severed from the civilized world they are used to, the four men have to decide what to do with the dead body in this hostile and alien world in which they now found themselves. Drew, the most sensitive and intelligent, tries to persuade the others to turn the body over to the sheriff down river explaining that it was a justifiable homocide. But Lewis convinces the other two that all these backwoods mountain folk are related by marriage and that no matter what a stranger said they wouldn't believe him. The final decision is left up to Ed whose obvious internal turmoil gives way to agreement with Lewis and Bobby who think the body should be buried because the river will soon be damned up and the body would then be covered by a vast empty lake. It is here that three of the major themes of the movie are made clear; man against nature, man against man, and man against himself.

After they bury the body they proceed down river in order to get to safety before the other mountaineer returns with help. While travelling alone, Drew, upset by burying the body, suddenly tumbles out of the canoe without his life-jacket. The action and narrative become more involved as one of the canoes is destroyed in the rapids, Lewis is unable to move because of the pain caused by a broken leg suffered in the canoe wreck and Drew is found dead. What started out as a lark for at least three of the men has turned into a deadly nightmare for all.

The remainder of the film depicts the change in Ed which accompanies the increasing number of responsibilities which Ed is given and must accept. The main theme of the film, brought to focus through Ed's character, is that when directly confronted by a life-or-death situation man discovers the basics within himself and either survives or perishes. In the case of Ed, who earlier was unable to kill a deer for food, did when the moment came to kill a man; one might say "he survived." It is never made completely clear that Ed is justified in his actions or that he makes the correct decisions, Boorman leaves it up to the viewer. We are led to believe Drew was shot our of the canoe but Ed can't find a bullet hole just as when he does kill the mountain man he's not positive it is the one who attacked him earlier.

John Boorman, who previously directed Hell In The Pacific, Point Blank and Leo The Last, combines his use of the natural environment in Hell In The Pacific and his use of violence in Point Blank to form this completely engrossing and suspenseful film. The screenplay by James Dickey, although weak and at times oversimplified to the point of bluntness, carries the film along at an unbearably fast pace. But it is the photography of Vilmos Zsigmond and editing of Tom Priestly which remain the most impressive aspects of the movie. Zsigmond, who did such an exquisite job with the cinematography in McCabe and Mrs. Miller, again creates the mood of the entire film by his use of nearly monochromatic color. Priestley likewise helps sustain the high pitch of suspense and tension by his use of short, violently abrupt cutting.

The four main actors all give fine performances, with an exceptionally realisitc cameo performance given by screenwriter James Dickey in the role of the small town sheriff. I personally found myself disliking Burt Reynolds in the part of Lewis because I couldn't divorce myself from his previous "exposure" in Cosmopolitan and his happy-go-lucky appearances on T.V. late night talk shows. Reynolds also had the worst lines to say and I must admit that his readings of those particular lines didn't improve them any. But I suppose it would be hard for any actor, no matter how great, to answer a question as to why he wanted to canoe down the river with such a cliched line as "Because it's there!" and expect it to sound believable.

Jon Voight is given the most difficult part and yet he gives a performance which equals his previous one in Midnight Cowboy. He is called on to show inner turmoil and surface weakness which later must reverse to interior calm and great strength under duress and he does is superbly. But the most moving and controlled performance is undoubtedly given by Ronny Cox, a relatively unknown who brings sensitivity and rationality to the part of Drew.

These performances along with the great technical skills displayed in this film justify its Best Picture Academy Award nomination of this past week. I can't guarantee that you'll like Deliverance or agree with it's philosophy but I can and will warn you that the film will hit you with the force of the mighty rapids of the Chattooga River and you'll be helplessly swept along.

FRANKENSTEIN

The scene: A gloomy laboratory. A stormy night. An obsessed scientist. A huge covered form on an operating table. The storm rages. The machinery crakcles. At last the covering is pulled away. A hideous creature made up from pieces of the dead. The master switch is thrown. The noise is deafening. The light is blinding. The monster is alive; This is the familiar opening of Frankenstein; the archetypal gothic horror tale. Now, for the first time, Frankenstein has been adapted to the stage and will be performed by the University of Massachusetts Theatre. The adaptation has been made from the Mary Shelley novel by Dallas Murphy who is also directing.

Murphy has managed to maintain the flavor of the original while making it work within the conventions of stage melodrame. The experienced cast of students has been working since early January to realize an appropriate and convincing style of performance. The setting by Paul Wonsek is one of the most elaborate ever designed for Bartlett Theatre. It includes three revolving units which allow quick changes from the elaborate and cluttered laboratory of the mad Doctor to other rooms and tombs and back again. The scene shifts are wonders in themselves. Katy Reed has designed the appropriately horrorific costumes. The play will be performed Feb. 14-17 and 21-24 at 8:30 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium. Also, spend midnight with the monster! In keeping with the nature of the production, there will be special late night performances of Frankenstein. Feb. 17 and 24 at 11 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday nights will be Dollar Night, (reserved seating).

IMPORTANCE OF BEING EARNEST

Oscar Wilde's The Importance of Being Earnest, which is generally regarded as the wittiest comedy in the English language, will open tonight, February 16, at 8:30 p.m. This brilliant charade about a foundling who invented a brother and discovered him to be a real one, will run through March 10.

The scrambled plot of Wilde's perennially popular play is mainly concerned with an elegant wastrel named John Worthing, who has invented a dissolute younger brother named Earnest whom he impersonates when he goes on a fling.

His friend, Algernon Moncrieff, is a thoughtful young man who has invented a sick friend named Bunbury on whom to blame his own peccadilloes. The pitfalls accompanying chronic deception are hilariously exemplified, when these polite philanders both pretend to be Earnest to please the ladies in whom they are interested.

For sixty years critics and audiences have agreed that while Wilde was unraveling the comic complications of this absurd situati, he missed no opportunity for caustic comment on the artificial manners, morals and customs of high society, and that every scene of this now classic comedy is liberally spiced with the wit and epigrams for which Wilde has been celebrated.

THE MADMAN AND THE NUN

The New Cell Theater Ensemble, an experimental theater group consisting of students and residents from the Five College area, will be presenting a production of S. I. Witkiewicz's The Madman and the Nun, Thursday through Tuesday at Amherst College's Stone Basement Theater.

The play, translated from the Polish and adapted by the New Cell Ensemble, concerns the events at The Asylum of the Jugged Hare and the workings of the twisted minds of its inmates.

The set which the ensemble has constructed puts the audience directly in the asylum with the inmates.

The New Cell Theater Ensemble has been working together since September. Its name derives from the Living Theater concep. "new cells" working as a constructive and artistic force within the greater community.

Their rehearsals have placed primary emphasis upon yoga and vocal and body training. Through these exercises, the ensemble has developed a group sense for performing as a cohesive unit.

The New Cell Theater Ensemble also plans to present further dramatic pieces, and to sponsor concerts and art exhibits in the area. It welcomes anyone with energy to contribute in any of the fields of art.

For information concerning the New Cell Theater Ensemble, its productions and plans, call Christopher Torch at 542-3084.

Tickets to the productions of The Madman and the Nun can be obtained from Amherst College's Kirby Theater Box Office between 1 p.m. and 5 p.m. or by calling 542-2277.

Stone Basement Theater is at the southeast end of the Amherst College campus, off College Street. All seats are reserved, but seating is limited.

Films

APARAJITO (1956)

The second film of Satyajit Ray's trilogy entitled Panther Panchali (or The Apu Trilogy). It follows the story of the ten year old Apu who goes from the Indaxian country to live in Benares with his parents. The film follows his adolescent until his parents' death and his traveling to Calcutta to attend the university there. Ray founded the Calcutta Film Society in 1947 and had always expressed interest in working on films. He worked with Renoir on The River and was very much taken with the filmic possibilities of the popular Bengali novel Pather Panchali and its characterizations. Ray said he chose the novel "for those qualities that make it great: its humanity, its lyricism, its sense of truth. I knew it would be wrong to force its story into a rigid mold. I wanted to retain the somewhat rambling qualities of the novel because it is this very sense that gives it its feeling of authenticity." Ray incorporates various leitmotivs into the films, the most notable of which is his use of trains to punctuate stages in Apu's destiny. The pervasive warmth, simplicity, and artistry of this trilogy place it among the world's best films of the Fifties and it was hailed as such in the USA, Britain, and many other countries. All three parts owe much to Subatra Mitra's lyrical photography and to Ravi Shankar's memorable music. Aparajito received the Golden Lion at the Venice Film Festival. Merrill Science Center, Lecture Room Three, Amherst College, Monday 12/19, 7:30.

BEDAZZLED (1967)

Stanley Donen's hilarious and highly underrated comedy which "Beyond the Fringe" stars Peter Cook and Dudley Moore concocted from the Faustian legend. The pace is freewheeling and breathless; not all the comedy works, but even the less inspired moments are pleasant and some of the bits are the funniest in years. The end is a gem; a routine on a trampoline. With Messgrs. Cook and Moore, and Eleanor Bron and Racquel Welch (whose appearance in this film has a delicious charm, all but non-existant in her other screen roles). This is Donen's best film of recent years: a footloose and inspired satire which combines the director's exuberant style with the short wit of the "Beyond the Fringe" group. Student Union Ballroom, Saturday, 2/17, 7:30 & 9:30.

BLOW—UP (1966)

A purposively ambiguous, downright baffling study of the real and imagined that remains one of the superlative cinematic enigmas of the Sixties. David Hemmings plays a mod, bored, London photographer who takes some pictures of an idyllic scene in a park only to later realize he was witnessing a murder. As his interest increases, his evidence becomes more and mor inconclusive. The film is a beautifully photographed, often striking look at the aimless high life of contemporary London as well as being an interesting philosophical mystery. The film was the first English language film of Michaelangelo Antonioni and is remarkably subtle and thoughtful, with a beautifully expressive performance by Vanessa Redgrave as the so-called murders. With Travels With My Aunt, Calvin Theater, Northampton.

BORN YESTERDAY (1950)

Judy Holliday won an Oscar (beating out Bette Davis for All About Eve) in her recreation of her dizzy and infectuous Broadway performance. Garson Kenin's story is taken from the Pygmalion legend gone awry: A tycoon who has made his fortune by crooked dealings with his mistress, Billie Dawn, a former chorus girl of asfonishing ignorance. He hires a writer to educate her, only to learn -- when Billie calls him a Fascist and threatens to expose him -- that Paul has taught her not only manners but the principles of democracy. A typical sophisticated comedy, but also a satire about a woman rebelling against her "sugar daddy" and his crooked dealings. One of Cukor's best comedies, with a remarkable performance by Judy Holliday. George Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College, Saturday, 2/17, 8.

BUTTERFLIES ARE FREE

Eileen Heckart recently received an Oscar nomination for best supporting actress for her role of the domineering mother who can't break the grip she has on her blind son who attempts to live along in a San Francisco walk-up apartment. She's the principal reason for seeing this programmed sentimental romance adapted from the long-running Broadway hit. Edward Albert is plausible as the son, but Goldie Hawn is intolerable as the freakish girl next door. The direction shows its roots on the stage. Academy of Music, Northampton.

CABARET

One of the most acclaimed films of the year is this film version of the 1967 Broadway musical which mixes spectacular cabaret entertainment with the rise of Nazism. The musical was hailed on the stage as one of the more innovative and exciting of the past decade and has been transformed, through the skilful hands of Bob Fosse, into a truly unique and stunning film. The story concerns the romantic encounters of a young British writer in the Berlin of the early Thirties, immediately prior to Hitler's takeover. The songs here are dispersed through the action, not the plot, and comment rather than further the story. The effect is the first truly unique film musical in quite some time. The score, by John Kander and Fred Ebb, beautifully echoes the era as does the performances, chiefly those of Liza Minnelli as Sally Bowles and Joel Grey the Cabaret's Master of Ceremonies. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

THE CABINET OF DR. CALIGARI (1919)

The classic German silent fantasy which launched the ten years of great German filmmaking during the Twenties. It combines elements of gothic mysticism and psychological interpretation. The film concerns a story told by an excited young man as to the evil doings of a mysterious Dr. Caligari, the director of a local insane asylum who, in trun, is a madman. This story acts as a frame for the story's surprise ending which coheses into the narrative the strange, often bizarre use of expressionistic sets and odd camera angles. The film seems more than a simple horror fantasy, especially in its conclusion which raises far more questions than it conceivably could answer; but the film is without doubt one of the most original and successful instances of subjective narrative ever attempted on film. , playing with The Last Laugh, Thompson 104, Tuesday, 2/20, 7 and 9.

CHLOE IN THE AFTERNOON

The final of Eric Rohmer's six moral tales has been generally considered the best. Rohmer's films are beautifully photographed, if long-winded examinations of an individual placed in a romantic dilemna in which he must make a moral choice. This film ask the question will the married, upstanding hero sleep with the bohemian and seductive Chloe? The film is even more precise and mannered than the earlier "Claire's Knee" and does adhere to standards usually ascribed to the best works of art. What's wrong is Rohmer's polished, witty arguments about civilized, bourgeoise behavior are too wise for their own good and the film suffers from a rhetorical onslaught which also made Claire's Knee a pretty, but emotionally vapid film. Two nice performances from Bernard Berley as the happily married husband and a bewitching new personality named Zouzou. Cinema X, Springfield.

THE CLOWNS (1971)

Frederico Felini made this ninety minute documentary for Italian television following his Satyricon. His films abound in circus imaginery, here he looks explicitly at the subject, its origins in life and the profession's current day decline. A delightful film. In Italian subtleties. Main Lecture Hall, Hampshire College, Friday,2/16.

DEATH IN VENICE (1971)

Luchino Visconti directs every element of this beautiful adaptation of Thomas Mann's novella with equal weight; each prop, costume, and artifact from the era immediately prior to the First World War is given as much attention as the characters and story. The film, by consequence, is emotionless and only implies the sadness in the death of a great man upon his discovery of perfect beauty in the form of a young boy. Thomas Mann's novella was an argument as to the nature of art couched in a florid account of an end of an epoch.

The film remains more an argument than a narrative and is at times insufferable with platitudes about music, art, beauty, etc. The story itself has a whimsical charm: a middle-aged composer, patterned after Gustav Mahler, comes to Venice on a holiday and is infactuated with a beautiful youth. Dirk Bogarde is splendid as the spinsterish composer Achenbach and the film's best moments are his small ones. The music is Mahler, symphonies number three and five. The reconstruction of 1911 Venice masterfully suggests the grandeur and opulence of a lost age. Campus Center Auditorium, Friday, 2/16, 7 and 9:30.

DELIVERANCE

A superior adaptation of James Dickey's novel about four men on a canoeing trip who find themselves caught up in a whirlpool of catastrophe, murder and rape. The film was directed by John Boorman, who made the crackerjack gangster flick of the late sixties, Point Blank, and it is filled with the same ferociously tense quality of man struggling against an alien environment that enriched the earlier film. Whatsmore, while the movie stands up as a tremendously engrossing adventure story, it also has an intruigingly ambiguous viewpoint regarding its violence and the morality involved. John Voight gives a highly controlled, intelligent and precise performance in the lead role. Showcase Cinema, West Springfield; Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

THE GETAWAY

Another cops and robbers thriller, this time from Sam Peckinpah who follows the critical success and financial failure of the mellow and reflective Junior Bonner with this glossy and violent gangster fantasy. Steve McQueen and Ali McGraw play a latter day Bonnie and Clyde who rob and murder the most viscious group of villains to appear on the current screen. The stars are mismatched, (her head is bigger than his) and both give mannered, boring performances. McQueen always manages a withdrawn sensuality that's always captivating on the screen, but Ms. McGraw better hide behind her footprints in Grauman's Chinese Theater as being her acting credentials. Sally Struthers is fine as one of the bizarre accomplices. Peckinpah again revels in violence, for those who remember Straw Dogs with extreme distaste evade this one. It's more of the same simplistic and nasty dribble. Showcase Cinemas, West Sprinfield, Campus Cinemas, Hadley; Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST. MATTHEW (1965)

Made by an avowed Marxist, Pier Pasolini, this version of the life of Christ from the Annunciation to the Resurrection sticks strictly to the spirit of the Gospel and avoids the usual Hollywood sentimentalities. Its sense of dynamic immediacy (largely obtained through the use of hand-held cameras in the cinema-verite manner to get in into the center of the action), its use of visual devices and music overlaying an apparently stark and simple style, and its forceful performances create a dramatic account of a man spiritually determined to fulfill his destiny and a persuasive revelation of why that man dominated the history of the world for two thousand years. Wright Hall, Smith College; Thursday, 2/22, 7:30.

JERIMIAH JOHNSON

Robert Redford as a nineteenth century mountaineer which makes him a legend through narrative design rather than heroic action. Sidney Pollack directs this in a grand, ponderous manner. It's a beautiful film to watch but a bit difficult to swallow. With Will Geer. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE LAST LAUGH (1924)

Because he has become too old, the doorman of a Berlin luxury hotel has his uniform taken away from him and is given the job of looking after the lavatories. Humiliated, he thinks of committing suicide in the cheap tenement where he lives with his daughter and her fiance. Carl Mayer's original idea undoubtedly came from Gogol's The Cloak, his script became a powerful study of the importance Germans attach to uniforms. The final shooting script was developed in collaboration with star Emil Jannings, director F.W. Murnau, and the cameraman, Karl Freund, who later described his own involvement: "He had considered using the moving camera from the start. He asked me if I could film an actress in long shot and then, by traveling forward, show a close up of only her eyes, this being the moment when the doorman's aunt discovers that he has been put in charge of the lavatories. He said he wanted my camera on a dolly at all times." When Mayer saw the possibilities of exploiting this technique he rewrote his script in terms of camera movements. Paul Rotha in his book "Film Till Now" wrote: "It was a remarkable example of filmic unity, of centralization of purpose and of perfect continuity... (It) was cine-fiction in its purest form; exemplary of the rhythmic composition proper to the film." The Boston Evening Transcript wrote of the film in 1924: "No film has ever approached it as a veritable human document, reduced to the ultimate simplicity. It is consistently true to a medium which is essentially motion, rhythm, and vision." Playing with The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari. Thompson 104, Tuesday, 2/26, 7 and 9.

A LETTER TO THREE WIVES (1949)

20th Century Fox. 103 mins. Three wives receive a letter addressed to all of them from a beautiful woman (Celeste Holm speaks the role) telling them that she has run away with one of their husbands. In three flashbacks the relationship of each woman with her husband and the husband's with the woman is shown. Each discovers cause for anxiety but the couples are finally reconciled. A well-made psychological comedy of morals with witty dialogue. Joseph L. Manklewicz best film next to All About Eve. He won Oscars for Best Direction and script in 1949. A stellar cast, with Jeanne Crain, Linda Darnell, and Anne Southern as the wives; and Kirk Douglas and Paul Douglas as two of the husbands. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College, Tuesday, 2/20, 7:30.

MAN OF LA MANCHA

The play enchanted many, despite a book, score, and lyrics that merged comic book Cervantes with the worst of Tin Pan Alley. The film appears to be doing well in lieu of the fatal reivews it has received. This popular bowderization of classic themes has a popular resilliancy, but isn't either a good musical or workable adaptation of Cervantes. The production seemed cursed from the start: once principals Peter O'Toole and Sophia Loren were signed to work with director Peter Glenville, United Artists took the project away from the director. He conceived the film more along Cervantes original intentions, which didn't appeal to the UA bosses who spent millions for the rights. The logic was they could have "Don Quixote" for next too nothing, but Man of La Mancha cost plenty and had road-show box-office appeal. Director Arthur Hiller (Love Story, The Hospital) was called in and everyone worked on the production with professional, but half-hearted spirit. None of the principals could sing, which didn't help matters at all. The film has a hackneyed persuasion, like being sucked in by a whirlpool of sentiment. Peter O'Toole plays Cervante/Quixote in much the same mad way he played the crazy Earl in The Ruling Class, and he's adequate. Sophia Loren as Aldonza, the spitfire Quixote converts, has a beauty few actresses can equal on the screen fiery and a temperament which makes the film worth watching. Although misconceived as a play and mismanaged as a film, it has its own peculiar charm. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

MY FAIR LADY (1964)

Although this is an overly sumptious production by Jack L. Warner of the Broadway hit (originally called Lady Liza) George Cukor's typical style and approach often come through. Cecil Beaton's costumes are delightful and the music entertaining. Dainty Audrey Hepburn (whose songs were sung by Marni Nixon) cannot match Wendy Hiller in the 1938 Pygmalion and Rex Harrison is heavy handed as Professor Henry Higgins. A generally disappointing transcription, although the winner of both the New York Film Critics Award and the Academy Award as Best Picture of 1964 and a huge popular success. The score is by Lerner and Loewe. Student Union Ballroom, Tuesday, 2/20, 7 and 10.

THE POSEIDON ADVENTURE

A harmless pop epic that aims to please but tends to disappoint. The film tauts an incredible roster of second-rate stars playing passengers on board a luxury liner which, on its final boyage, becomes capsized in the Mediterranean. The suspense is built on who will escape and how they'll do it. It's the latest in the series of assinine entertainments made popular in recent years, like Airport and Skyjacked. At the start the situations and relationships are contrived; the film picks up once the boat capsizes, but not much. The special effects and the capsize itself would look great on television. On the screen it has the anemic look of a production burdened with a tight budget. The insides of the Poseidon are recreated from the Queen Mary and its great if you possess a fetish for the deep insides of luxury liners. The script plays off the worst sentimental responses and pretentions about life. As a hip preacher who attempts to save the day Gene Hackman appears to be a waterlogged Auntie Mame. The whole thing sounds like a wretched musical comedy -- you keep expecting Hackman to break into a rousing revival number called "Let There Be Light." Shelley Winters sparks the film with a sympathetic caricature of a Jewish grandmother travelling to Israel with her husband, Jack Albertson; but thesir scenes together are filled with song cues out of Fiddler on the Roof. The remaining ensemble is strikingly mediocre; Ernest Borgnine and Stella Stevens are vulgar prototypes of Wallace Beery and Jean Harlow in Dinner at Eight. The film's best moments are the obese Shelley's underwater rescue attempt. Richard Neame directed, all too methodically. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Robert Redford in Jeremiah Johnson.

ROOM SERVICE (1938)

The Marx Brothers, in the Broadway farce about bankrupt theatrical producers holed up in a hotel room with their stranded players, fighting off famine and creditors. Unfortunately, the play fits them like a straitjacket. With Lucille Ball, Ann Miller, Frank Albertson, and Donald MacBride, grinning his great bulldog grin. Directed (lamely) by William Seiter. (See ad for time and place).

SINGIN' IN THE RAIN (1952)

This is undoubtedly one of the best musicals of the Fifties, matching An American in Paris in its pace, rhythmic structure, and memorable songs, and On the Town in its smoothly constructed and witty script by Adolph Green and Betty Comden (who also wrote On the Town). Its background of the Roaring Twenties and its satire on Hollywood during the introduction of sound add much to the film's appeal, as do the numerous excellent visual and sond gags. The imaginative choreography includes several (ironic) tributes to Busby Berkeley (such as "All I Do Is Dream of You" and "Beautiful Girl") and a striking semiabstract ballet by Gene Kelly and Cyd Charisse in "Broadway Rhythm." In supporting roles, Jean Hagen is memorable as the dumb star and Donald O'Connor brings a touch of American vaudeville, especially in his number "Make 'Em Laugh" (originally used in The Pirate). Gene Kelly is the true creative genius behind this film, which many consider his masterpiece. Co-directed by Stanley Boren and Kelly. Main Lecture Hall, Hampshire College, Sunday, 2/18.

THE SORROW AND THE PITY

Few superlatives could ably describe this extraordinary documentary exploration of a French village during the German occupation from 1939 to 1945. Marcel Ophuls has created what has claims as being the best documentary of the post-war film. He explores his subject matter and subjects with a piercing eloquence that moves beyond recorded history into a psychological exploration of the implications of memory. The film recently won a special citation of the New York Film Critics. Four-and-one-half hours short, it may well stand as one of the greatest films of all time. Amherst Cinema, Amherst.

SPELLBOUND (1945)

A head psychiatrist in a sanatorium, believes himself a murderous amnesiac who killed the previous director, but the developing love and mutual trust between himself and a female staff psychiatrist, returns him to sanity and they finally uncover the real murderer. This psychological thriller in the typical somber Hollywood thriller style of the Forties is persuasively directed by Hitchcock, who nevertheless amused himself with some bits of gratuitous technical virtuosity - the rather mediocre Salvador Dali dream sequence and the audience identification in the "first-person" suicide of the murderer at the end. With Gregory Peck and Ingrid Bergman. Hampden Dining Commons, Sunday, 2/18, 7:30.

TOKYO STORY (1952)

An elderly man and his wife decide to visit their two married children in Tokyo. But the son and daughter are busy with their own lives and send them off to a resort. Only the widow of a son killed in the war is kind to them. This moving account of the sad but necessary differences between generations is one of the few Ozu films to have been shown abroad and the one on which, for most occidentals, his critical reputation rests. It is also one of Ozu's own favorites. Donald Richie's description of Ozu's films applies well to this: "you have seen the goodness and beauty of everyday things and everyday people; you have had experiences indescribable because of cinema and no words can describe them; you have seen a few small, memorable, unforgettable actions, beautiful because sincere." Although superficially slow, Tokyo Story has an inner strength and drive that draws one inexorably into the Japanese world and its universal human problems. Sage Hall, Smith College, Saturday, 2/17, 7 and 9:30.

TRAVELS WITH MY AUNT

Maggie Smith recently received an Oscar nomination for her blowsy performance of Graham Greene's popular heroine and it couldn't have happened to a worst performance. She is so mannered and forced as to leave the viewer wanting her gone well before she's beyond middle-age. The film is an Auntie Mame-ish comedy about the adventures of a freewheeling aunt and her nephew during this past century. George Cukor directs without much spirit or style which distinguished his great work in the Thirties and Forties. Two nice supporting performances from Alec McCowen and Calvin Lockhart. Playing with Blow-up. Calvin Theater, Northampton.

2001: A SPACE ODYSSEY (1968)

Stanley Kubrick's philosophical fantasy has the breadth and intelligence of the Scopes' trial defense. Apes cavort with abandon in the opening "Dawn of Man" sequence, until a large, black monolith comes their way and cognitive processes are revealed together. The film dissolves from a spiralling bone thrown by an ape to a twenty-first century spaceship effortlessly floating to the "Blue Danube Waltz." The film moves through time epochs with a casual logic that many found woefully obscure. Kubrick is a master satirist, cool and brash with a misanthropic tinge. His heroes are machines; sleek and efficient and he stages their interstellar choreography like a cosmic Nijinsky. The machines are more interesting than their vague and hollow masters. The film's sprawling scope has a shimmering surface and is contained within its unspecified mystery. Many films have implied meanings, this has an implied plot. It begins with monkeys and ends with a space baby, between are machines and men and machine vrs. men. The sort of legendary, unique, whoppingly good film which uses the cinematic syntax to speak a language all its own. The music is by Strauss, Richard and Johann, and Ligett. Student Union Ballroom, Friday, 2/16, 7 and 10.

In Response To Howes

To The Editor:

I feel obligated to respond to some perplexing statements made by Merle Howes, candidate for town selectman, as printed in an interview to the "Daily Collegian" (Thursday, Feb. 8):

"Howes said that he knows of no untreated sewage being dumped into the Connecticut River, and that the capacity of the present sewage treatment plant is adequate."

I ask that Mr. Howes contact the State Division of Water Pollution Control (phone: 549-1755), an agency which would be happy to inform Mr. Howes of the criminal inadequacies of the existing sewage plant. They will explain how 900,000 to a million gallons a day of human sewage regularly pass through the overburdened plant...only partially treated or effectively untreated. And if Mr. Howes doubts these sources, I ask that he take a visit to that tiny sewage treatment plant which so "adequately" services this entire community (UMass included), and examine one of the aromatic streams which flows from the plant towards the Connecticut River.

I find it tragic and disappointing that Mr. Howes who so recently voiced his adamant support for the 1,300 unit Paparazzo Development, apparently did so without total knowledge of this communities sewage capabilities.

Later in the interview, Mr. Howes was quoted as saying that he was "...not aware of any change in the plans of the Federal government to pay 80% to 90% of the funds for the sewage treatment plant addition."

I am disturbed at the absence of awareness which I fear that such statements reflect. Mr. Howes need go only as far as Town Manager Alan Torrey to discover that the bulk of federal funding initially prescribed by Congress for such projects has been impounded by the Nixon Administration and is now virtually impossible to secure.

Thus, I am brought to respectfully request that Mr. Howes explain the gaping discrepancy between his aforementioned public statements–and what I have assumed to be the established facts.

I would also like to include that I am becoming increasingly annoyed/disappointed at the political solicitations which I keep overhearing around town: "Vote for candidate 'X'–because if you vote for candidate 'Y' then the students are gonna take over the town."

There is little argument that you, the more established residents of this town have the capability of effectively barring students from the local governing process if this is your desire. However, this would be truly unfortunate, and especially so, if done under the faulty assumption that the majority of students model themselves after such reknowned public exhibitionists as Eric Walgren. I believe that this community realizes that students must be respected as individuals and I have confidence that this town will not fall prey to prefabricated panic in its local elections.

Amherst boasts an impressive pool of resources and among these are its students. As you have seen in the past and I hope you will continue to see in the future, there are a great number of young people in this town who are mature, responsible, and willing to help tackle the many problems to which we all inevitably contribute.

Whether you vote for Scheurer or Howes as your next Selectman...whether you vote for a student or retiree as your next town meeting member–please keep in mind that good leadership recognizes no vintage.

Steve Howard

Night Bus Service

To The Editor:

The new free bus service in the area is very convenient and we are sure it will reduce hitchhiking and parking problems in Amherst. However, there is a great need for buses running from campus in the late evening. It is at this time that women are afraid to hitch or walk home (rightfully so, given the recent rapes in the area of Puffton Village).

Numerous students and faculty stay on campus past 6:00 p.m. when the buses stop running. It would be to everyone's advantage if the service could be extended by several hours, even if there were only buses running at 7:00, 9:00, and 11:00 p.m. This would make the system much more useful to regular commuters. Possibly, if enough feedback is received from students, this could be instituted.

Prisoner Paradox

To The Editor:

I am disgusted with the amount of newsprint, money, and intensive rehabilitiation programs being used to rehabilitate the returning prisoners of war while thousands upon thousands of men and women remain incarcerated in penal institutions throughout this country with little or no money being spent on their rehabilitation.

During the past several weeks whenever you picked up a newspaper you would invariably find at least one front-page story concerning the release of the prisoners of war. This is fine, it is what the people are interested in reading about, but why is it that the only time you read about a prisoner or prisoners in a penal institution, it is usually as a result of an incident such as Attica? Why is it that we read only of the riots, unrest, and illegal activities that go on behind those walls? Why don't the people of this country ever get a chance to read about the inmate who spends his free time recording for the blind or the inmate who is taking correspondence courses to better himself?

There is a great deal of money being spent on organizing, and carrying out the best rehabilitation program available to help these returning prisoners to become active, productive members of society. Some of these men have been in prison for as long as eight years. There are men and women in this country who have been living in the same environment for ten, twenty or thirty years or more and have not had the benefit of this massive rehabilitation program instituted especially for returning prisoners of war. The men and women in our penal institutions have been living the same life as those men not being allowed to make any decisions, regardless how small or insignificant. Those men and women as well as the prisoners of war are not allowed to decide what they will eat for breakfast or what time they will wake up. It is essentially the same life with the same emotional side effects whether you are incarcerated in Hanoi or Attica.

If our government's logic for spending this money and putting forth this effort is to enable these men to become productive members of our society, then why don't they re-examine their priorities and establish an equal program of rehabilitiation for those men and women incarcerated throughout the country to enable them to become poductive members of our society and prevent them from becoming caught up in the syndrome of being released from prison over and over again just to violate the law again and end up back in prison?

It is time for us to establish a productive rehabilitation program for these men and women and stop hiding our mistakes behind those prison walls.

Editorial Points

The solution to the doggy doo problem on campus which we promised to reveal today has been censored. There has been a crackdown on the printing of dirty words in the Collegian. So it looks as though there's still going to be a heck of a lot of doggy doo around.

We've also been getting a lot of flak for sexist editorial points, which never get published anyway. Some girls see male chauvinists under every bed. Except, of course, their own.

Vote The Eight

To The Editor:

There is something new and different happening in Amherst politics this year. Organizations are developing on the precinct level to facilitate greater citizen participation. One might speculate that even if such an organization were to exist, it could only represent one segment of the community. But this hypothesis is not necessarily valid as exhibited by the organization in Precinct 7, of which I am one of eight candidates seeking town meeting seats. Included in our group are a working mother, a labor union official, a public school teacher, a University employee, and students. We have all been active on the local political scene involved in the Olver, Collins, and McGovern campaigns and voter registration drives.

We have decided that our collective efforts will be the most effective means for dealing with issues such as rent control, limiting towngrowth, improvement in local educational facilities, and adequate child care centers. It was this group which sponsored motions before the Board of Selectman to formulate town warrants which propose the creation of investigatory commissions to deal with rent control and child care and we are presently formulating plans for the establishment of an "anti-rape" squad for Precinct 7.

Alex Bricker, Stewart M. Casper, Grant Dahlgreen, Gerald Gillespie, Mark L. Mawrence, Ed Scully, Jan Robinson, and Roy Rosenblatt are presenting an alternative to the stagnation in local government.

VOTE THE EIGHT—FOR TOWN MEETING IN PRECINCT 7

People Of Precinct No.2

To the People of Precinct #2:

We are seven people running for the office of Town Meeting member in Amherst. We all live in Southwest and are concerned about the future of the University and Amherst. We feel that the 3,000 students who make up 25% of the Amherst electorate are not being properly represented by the only two students seated in a Town Meeting of 240 members. We also believe that there are certain problems facing Amherst that would be more easily solved with the assistance of student energy, knowledge, and consciousness.

Town Growth—Amherst is at a crucial point in its growth. At this time we are pouring almost two million gallons of untreated sewage into the Connecticut and Mill Rivers every day. Yet the Amherst government has allowed a new apartment complex to begin construction on Route 9 that will add, at the least, 400,000 gallons a day.

Traffic—This apartment complex, called Amherst Fields, is designed as "a new home in the country" for the commuters of Springfield. This would bring the already immobile traffic on Route 9 to a dead halt.

AS MEMBERS OF THE TOWN MEETING, WE WOULD BE A FORCE AGAINST IRRATIONAL, UNPLANNED GROWTH.

Hitchhiking—We would also work for a system of safe-ride windshield decals. To get the decal, the driver would have to register with the police, making hitchhiking a safer means of transportation.

Child care—Through careful planning, along with state and federal funding, adequate child care facilities for Amherst are a distinct possibility. This is one of our priorities.

Rent—You all know how high rents are in Amherst. We want to find out why, and set up a rent control board, if necessary.

We would also like to add that we believe that the candidate for selectman who can help us most towards achieving these goals is George B. Scheurer, and we firmly urge you to vote for him.

The date for voting is Tuesday, February 20th, from noon to 8:00 P.M. The voting place is in the back of the fire station, which is located to the left of Louis' Supermarket in Amherst Center.

Support of the students is urgently needed. Please make every effort to get to the polls next Tuesday.

Thank you,

Taking A Stand On Standing Up For The National Anthem

To The Editor:
This is a letter in response to the letter written by David B. Mercier entitled "Injustice". I'd like to say thank you, for I as a white person have been torn for some time whether or not to stand for a national anthem that symbolizes equality, independence and respect yet does not practice the very things it symbolizes. Thank you, Mr. Mercier, for you have helped me make my mind up. How can I stand if I know that the equality and privileges you speak of are labeled "For Whites Only"?

Yes, Mr. Mercier, I don't think the Third World Community should deserve your respect, they should demand it of you. It's about time that we, as white people, sat down and looked at "WHY" the Third World Community does not stand. I mean, why should they stand for something that has nothing to offer them. Do they have equality, independence or respect? The answer, as I see it, is "NO". So Mr. David B. Mercier, if we as whites want to do something about those black men and women who remain in their seats, we first have to do something about ourselves. We have to practice what we preach, take down the "For Whites Only" signs, and try to make this country a place where everyone has a right to power.

So, as you can see, the problem isn't with the Third World Community, it's with us, the "White Community", and it's our responsibility to clean up our own yards before we begin to make "cracks" about our neighbors' yards.

Stephen E. Ryan

To The Editor:
I am writing this letter in response to David Mercier's letter on Feb. 12th, and various reactions to that letter. Most reactions I have read thus far deal partially if not wholly with the racial overtones of his statement. Let's disregard this aspect for a moment because, 1.) It may be argued that Mr. Mercier used the incident as an example of dissent, and 2.) Even if it is racist, he does have a right to his opinions. When we disregard these aspects, the thing that stands clear is Mr. Mercier's attitude on dissent. Maybe we should all remember that dissent is a right. How can exercising a right be disrespectful or unpatriotic? In fact by exercising our rights we serve to preserve their future. If we all subscribed to Mr. Mercier's views concerning "The injustice showed their country, their flag, and the patriotic people who attended the game", and if we all stopped exercising our right to dissent, then it stands to reason that the next step would be losing the right to dissent.

Tom Faulkner

To The Editor:
In reply to "Injustice" which appeared in the Monday Collegian: I am one of the Third World students who did not stand during the National Anthem. Why? Because I have very little respect for this country, and my feelings will remain the same as long as my brothers and sister are kept in our oppressed state. As long as the plight of minorities in the U.S. remains unchanged, I will not stand. Mr. Mercier feels that this action is disrespectful. My intention is to convey exactly this.

As the struggle continues, we will persist in showing our dissatisfaction in this manner. Brothers and Sisters, just keep on keeping on and Liberation will be ours. Do not let criticism disuade us!

Alexandria DeLoatch

To The Editor:
I can't take it too much longer. Monday a being called Mercier wrote an article entitled "Injustice". He ran down how he had to stand by the area in which the Third World sits in the Cage, how "we" daily hear about what the Third World wants, that this is the only country that could guarantee these wants (rights), and how we fail to show any respect to the anthem and flag.

My reply to this is "wise up mother". As long as we are still protesting passively, sitdowns and so forth, you should be cool. I and many other members of our World are daily getting sick of the shit and fuckovers that y'all are dealing to us. Today while using the bathroom facilities in one of the dining commons I saw all kind of racist trash on the walls. Example: "the only good nigger is a dead nigger". Is this an indication of the way we are perceived in this so-called liberal institution? The person (?) who wrote it is seriously infested with self destructive racism. Does it (sex unknown) deserve respect?

Wednesday's replies were passive also, but I congratulate those who spoke up. This article is in no way written with passivity. I am not one to take the offensive in words only and there are many more like me. We are ready to deal in return. To you Mercier I say check out your ragged, raunchy ideologies, beliefs, and rhetoric 'cause the time is coming to you and yours. Constantly and consistently you are reminded and asked; we're going to start taking! Do you know Mark Essex? To the "World" I ask for some support. Don't let this slide!

Harold Taylor

To The Editor:
I am writing this letter in response to that verbal atrocity by Toney Barnes that appeared in the Feb. 14 edition of the Collegian. He asks that misunderstanding people stop using the media to demonstrate their stupidity. It's a shame that he doesn't follow his own advice.

Mr. Barnes states that the U.S. stand for repression of Blacks by its investments in countries like South Africa. The U.S. invests in many foreign countries and such action does not necessarily mean that the U.S. condones or supports the actions and policies of that country. There isn't a country in the world with a governmental policy that is in complete agreement with that of the U.S., and to hold back from investing in some country just because we don't agree with them on this point or that would be foolish.

As for Black genocide, I am not aware that there is mandatory sterilization for welfare mothers and doubt that such a policy exists. As to where you got the idea that the promotion of birth control pills is genocide, I won't even try to guess. But if you think that this is an act by the U.S. government to wipe out the Black population, you had better take another look at the countless birth control organizations and centers around the country that are run by private concerned citizens interested in curbing the population explosion. If I am not mistaken, such a student run program exists here on campus.

You also spoke of the unpunished killings of Blacks by police, National Guard, etc. Remember what an outrage the killings of two Black students by white police in Louisiana brought to this campus and the country-the Third World demanding space in the Collegian, Black leaders demanding for a full investigation, etc. But what kind of reaction did we witness from the Black population of the country when a Black, who later turned out to be an extreme racist, decided to go on a shooting spree on top of a Howard Johnson's Hotel in New Orleans. Where were the cries of outrage from the Third World, or do they consider it alright when a white is receiving a bullet from a Black racist.

Yes Mr. Barnes, this world is filled with injustice and discrimination, but let's be more realistic in our evaluation of the situation.

Richard Austin

To The Editor:
In response to Ellen M. Newell's letter of Feb. 13, I can only reply that yes, this country is in trouble. A country with people who have too much food, shelter, clothing, entertainment, education, freedom of religion, press, speech and the right to meet in groups. Also too much aid and help for the less fortunate. A country with all this and such spoiled and ungrateful citizens as Ms. Newell is certainly at its knees.

Jack Barron

To The Editor:
Poor Mr. Mercier! The other day, he "had to stand by the side of what turned out to be the Third World section". This letter is in reference to the letter written by David B. Mercier on Feb. 12, 1973. One has to admit that this must have been quite an ordeal to Mr. Mercier, but the worst part is that "many of the Third World people smoked, talked and sat throughout" the National Anthem. Mr. Mercier feels that if the Third World wants "equality, independence and respect" then they should "show respect in return".

He feels that these people showed tremendous injustice "to their country, their flag, and the patriotic people who attended the game". Finally, Mr. Mercier asks the rhetorical question, "Do these people deserve our respect?" and answers the question by saying, "I sincerely doubt it."

Mr. Mercier, if this is "the only country in the world that could guarantee their rights", as you suggest in your letter, then why haven't these guarantees been fulfilled? How can you equate the injustices of racism to that of not standing for The Star Spangled Banner? How can you make the analogy that those people "who remained in their seats" have any bearing on the entire Third World community? How can you be so arrogant and racist to think that these people even want our respect?

Mr. Mercier, do you deserve the respect of those people? We sincerely doubt it.

Proud To Be American

To The Editor:
In my letter of February 12, I spoke of what I felt was a lack of patriotism displayed by members of the Third World community. Letters to the editor have been written since that time asking why people should show respect for a country that does not treat them as equals. Since I was responsible for bringing up the subject, I feel it is also my responsibility to reply to those questions by giving my idea on the issue.

All that is needed is a look back through history to see that countries that were internally divided, fell. We need look no further than this Collegian to see that people are divided in this country today. Putting these two ideas together, the answer comes out that in order to overcome our problems, we have to work together to solve them, not break into little factions and wait for the worst.

When I speak of problems, I do not refer only to the problems faced by Third World people. Everyone has a problem that bothers him whether it is social, economic, national or international. How can these problems be overcome if we only reject the government as not treating us equally? Help will not come to us if we don't work to bring it within reach.

I willingly admit that I am very patriotic. I am an American and very proud of the fact. When looking at the state of other nations in the world today, I can tell myself that I'm lucky to be right where I am. If being thankful for what I have is "Blind Allegiance" or "Misguided Patriotism", then I like it just the way it is. Everyone has heard the saying "united we stand, divided we fall." My way to keep us united is to show respect for the country that has given us all everything we have. It has given us a chance to go to this university, and the chance to express our views in writing for all to see. I do not feel that my standing up during the national anthem is too much for me to repay.

Debate Team Continues Wins

By ED PEPYNE

The UMass debate team continues to extend their winning streak into the second semester. Recently the debaters have brought home gold from tournaments at Seton Hall and Bowdoin and have made an excellent showing at the Harvard tournament.

During intersession Roger Legendre and Terry Hofmann made it to the semifinal round of the Seton Hall University debate tournament. In the preliminary rounds Roger and Terry went 4-4 with wins over Rutgers, Michigan, George Mason, and Columbia while losing to Wake Forrest, Seton Hall, Scranton, and Boston University.

In the elimination rounds they defeated Wake Forrest in the octofinal round. Advancing to the quarterfinals they met MIT and won on a 3-0 decision. In the semifinal round they were beaten by Georgetown and thus were awarded a semifinalist trophy.

This past weekend Roger and Terry carried the UMass colors to Harvard. In one of the most prestigious tournaments in the country they made a fine showing in attaining a 5-3 record. They succeeded in downing BU, George Washington (twice), Emory and Brown. Their losses were to Macalester, Georgetown, and Redlands.

The Bowdoin tournament held February 3rd and 4th gave Bill Nosel and Howard Steinberg the opportunity to win a quarterfinalist trophy. Bill and Howard who are rapidly becoming known on the debate circuit for their talents, came up with an outstanding 6-2 record in the preliminary rounds.

In the elimination rounds of the Bowdoin tournament Bill and Howard were beaten by a Bowdoin team. The success of Bill and Howard has made the UMass debate team even more optimistic about victories for the rest of the season.

OUTREACH Surveys Internships

By CYNTHIA NADREAU

In order to determine how many students would be interested in paid and non-paid internships, the following questions were asked, verbally, by the Center for OUTREACH to 1,020 UMass undergraduates chosen randomly from the Hatch.

"If the University offered a program whereby you could work full-time off campus for one semester in an internship, field study or practicum, which was related to your major, and received fifteen University credits (not applicable to your major) with no financial stipend, would you be interested in participating?"

584 or 57.3% of the students answered yes, while 436 or 42.7% answered no.

"If, in such a program, you received fifteen credits, six applicable to your major and no financial aid stipend would you participate?"

828 or 81.1% answered yes, while 192 or 18.9% answered no.

"If the University offered fifteen credits, six applicable to your major, and a small financial stipend, would you participate?"

In reference to question three, 956 or 93.7% of the students answered yes, while 64 or 6.3% answered no.

This semester the Center for OUTREACH has placed 200 part-time and 45 full-time volunteers in community programs and agencies, as well as 12 full-time and 120 part-time interns.

OUTREACH placed six students in Washington D.C. for the fall semester. These students worked as interns in Congressman Michael Harrington's office doing work that a regular staff member would perform. Because of the success of these internships OUTREACH plans to expand the number of students going to Washington to approximately fifteen for the coming semester. This is just internship program.

The OUTREACH office is located at 318 Armold House. The telephone number is 545-2021.

Amherst College Features An Evening Of Music

The Five College Composers Group will present a program of music in Buckley Recital Hall at Amherst College at 8:15 tomorrow night.

The program will include Allen Bonde's Kaleidoscope II for dancer and instrumentalists, Lewis Spratlan's song cycle Images for soprano and piano, Donald Wheelock's Quartet for Brass Instruments, Alvin Etler's Sonatina for piano, and Ronald Perera's Apollo Circling for soprano and piano.

The performers will include Melinda Kessler and Gretchen d'Armand, sopranos; Constance LaSalle, Kenneth Fearn and Suzanne Sobel, pianists; Walter Chesnut and Ronald Bell, trumpet; John Jenkins, horn; Joseph Duchi, trombone; Margaret Bungay, oboe; and M. Susan Brown, percussion.

Mr. Bonde's work will be danced by Jane Rubinsky.

Classics Recital At Smith

This Sunday, February 18, the Smith College Department of Music will sponsor a recital by Adrienne Auerswald, soprano, and Robert M. Miller, pianist, in Sage Hall at Smith College. The recital, which will begin at 8:00 p.m. will be open to the public at no charge.

The program for the evening will be open with Three Songs From Twelve English Canzonets (1792) by Joseph Haydn. These three songs are from the two sets of six "canzonets" which were original settings of English words composed while Haydn was in London. The Haydn works will be followed by Liederkreis, Opus 39, by Robert Schumann, one of several song cycles composed in 1840, the year of Schumann's long desired marriage to Clara Wieck. The poems, by Eichendorff, are related to one another not by a narrative but by the romantic themes of mystery, enchantment, and the joys and disappointments of love. The piano part is of equal importance with the voice; vocal and instrumental themes interweave, and the rich colors and contrasts in the twelve songs are distinctively those with which Schumann united poetry and music.

The final offering on the program will be "Seven Early Songs" by Alban Berg. These were written between 1905 and 1908 to poems of seven different romantic poets. Although they show the influence of the composers whom the young Berg admired, they bear the characteristics of his later music in their lyricism and clarity of form.

Take two years off this summer.

With the Army ROTC Two-Year Program.

Army ROTC usually takes four years of college. But you can do it in two.

If, for example, you couldn't take Army ROTC during your first two years of college.

Or if you just didn't want to take Army ROTC before. But now you recognize the benefits.

You start the Two-Year Program by going to our six-week Basic Camp the summer following your sophomore year.

Camp—a little classroom work; some challenging physical training—replaces the Basic Course you would have taken during your first two years of college. You're well-paid for this six-week catch-up.

Then, after camp, you complete your Advanced Course during your junior and senior years.

Maybe you'll decide that the chance to get real management experience earlier than most people will be worth a lot later on.

Maybe you can use the $100 per month subsistence allowance you will get for up to 10 months of each school year.

Maybe qualifying for two careers simultaneously—military or civilian—is insurance against job uncertainties.

Or, maybe the opportunity for an Army ROTC scholarship is exciting.

The Army ROTC Two-Year Program is another chance for a better career, through Army ROTC.

Talk over the Two-Year Program with the Professor of Military Science at your school. Or use this coupon. There's no obligation.

Army ROTC. The more you look at it, the better it looks.

Hurricane Field-Study In Virginia

Discovering at first hand the extent to which people and the environment have recovered from the ravages of a devastating hurricane five years ago is the aim of an unusual six-weeks field-study project to be conducted at Sweet Briar College this summer, June 11 to July 20.

Open to about 50 undergraduate men and women from colleges throughout the country, the course will be offered for one unit (or three semester hours) of credit.

Called "The Aftermath of Camille," this study will concentrate on the upper Tye River Valley in Nelson county, Virginia, which siffered extensive property damage and loss of life in the swift passage of the great storm in August, 1969. The area is bounded on three sides by the Blue Ridge Mountains.

Under the direction of Dr. Langley Wood, Coordinator of Environmental Studies at Sweet Briar, students will work in research teams with faculty members from each of several disciplines. They will probe Camille's temporary and permanent effects on the social, political, psychological, and economic life of the people in the area, and on the plant and animal life of its natural environment.

Students will live at the College, which is close to the area to be studied, with access to its library and laboratory resources and the recreational facilities of its 3,000-acre campus.

Interested students should consult the chairmen of their major departments or write directly to Dr. Wood at Box Z, Sweet Briar, Virginia 24595.

Outward Bound Winter Openings

Outward Bound is a course in survival in the out-of-doors. The next land winter course will be offered from March 1-21 and is open for students 16-1/2 to 22 years of age.

The course is co-ed; and the syllabus includes cross-country skiing, a 3-day solo, two expeditions on snow shoes, snow caving . . .

If you don't know about Outward Bound, for further information call Perry Gates (207) 594-5548 Hurricane Island, Outward Bound School, Rockland, Maine, or contact Janice Gamache, Human Potential Center, 545-0873/75. Undergraduate credit is negotiable.

Women JV's Dominate Gym Meet

By MDC STAFF

On Wednesday evening the women's junior varsity squad took a pleasant but unbelievable journey to Salem State College and whipped both Salem and Northeastern University. Coach Virginia Evans, for the most part, used many inexperienced performers and rally gave them a good opportunity to display their talents. In addition to the team dominating all events, they completed the evening by pushing the school van uphill on Rte. 202 when it had run out of gas.

There were many improvements in the UMass personnel. The largest change in performance came on the uneven bars where all performers presented completed routines. Alicia Goode did very well for herself and finished in the fifth spot. Marion Kulick, much to her own amazement, did her best routine and finished third. Gail McCarthy struggled to take second place and Thanne Poth swung her best routine this year to capture first place.

On vaulting, the UMass women also did well. Gail McCarthy led all vaulters with an uncommon hecht vault. Marion Kulick sprung her way to second place, while Alicia Goode performed a good vault to place third. The balance beam event was somewhat crude as all performers had their problems. Heidi Armstrong kept the best composure and earned first place. Marion Kulick showed some improvements in her performance and finished in second place. Freshman Gail McCarthy showed promise and claimed third place to complete a UMass sweep.

Floor exercise held some surprises as Marion Kulick bounced, danced, and tumbled to a first place victory. Candy Gross, to spite competing on Valentine's Day, did a clean routine and took the second place spot. Heidi Armstrong was fourth and Gail McCarthy placed sixth.

In the all-around standings Marion Kulick led all performers and totalled 26.7 points. This was a good performance for her and established her potential for future competitions.

Pictured above is Margie Combs and to the right, Jeannine Burger of the women's gymnastics team. This Saturday, the varsity team opens its home schedule with a dual meet at 2 p.m. in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym. UMass will host a very talented young bunch of Canadians for what promises to be one of the most exciting meets this year. The Montreal Silhouettes team is composed of some members of the Canadian National team and always gives our team a rough workout. Please note the change in starting time to 2 p.m. Admission to students is free. (Photo by Gib Fullerton and UMass photo center)

Close Decisions Sink Swimmers

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

The luck of St. Valentine just wasn't on the side of Minutemen Swimmers Wednesday when they paid a visit to the Jumbos of Tufts University. A series of real close decisions that didn't land in their favor caused UMass to yield 60/53.

What sort of close calls kept the Minutemen from the victory they'd been anticipating? An example was very evident to all who watched the 50 Freestyle. Dick Blaisdell (UMass) finished with a time of 23.4 (his best time to date). Yanofasky (Tufts) was timed at 23.6. It was close and hard to tell in that split second finish. The Judges decided in favor of Tufts giving Blaisdell second place.

The same thing happened to Minuteman Tom McGinn in the 200 Breaststroke. The decision fell to Jumbo Liebenson (second) giving McGinn third.

Those extra points really make all the difference in competition as close as this was.

Both UMass Relay Teams were victorious. The Invididual Relay of George Kwiecien, Bob Okolita, Duncan Loomas, and Pete Ouellette finished in 4:13. The Freestyle Relay of Blaisdell, Ouellette, Ron Boucher, and Mark Dagnese swam it in 3:37.

Dagnese also racked up a double win in the 200 IM (time 2:12) and the 200 Backstroke (time 2:15).

Blaisdell gained a first in the 100 Freestyle with his best time of 52.3.

In the Diving Competition, a Minutemen seasonal high point, found Paul Lelito first and Jeff Crouse third in the optional one meter diving. Hardy (Tufts) won first in the required diving with Minutemen Crouse, second and Earl McCallister third.

Additional second places were scored by Spencer Sullivan—1,000 Distance Freestyle and Kwiecien—200 Backstroke.

Third place points were accumulated by Boucher—200 and 100 Freestyles and Loomas 100 IM and 500 Distance Frestyle (his first time swimming it this season).

Coach Tom Manfredi felt "this was the best overall team performance of the season; just about everyone swam their best times".

This Saturday, February 17th, is "The Meet" of the semester for the UMass Swimmers. URI pays us a visit at Boyden Pool time 2:00 p.m. This should be the victory the Minutemen have been trying for all season, an exciting meet to watch. (UMass placed 5th in the Yankee Conference and URI 6th).

UVM to Apply For Div I

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP)-The University of Vermont Athletic Council said Thursday the school trustees would be asked to apply for Division I status for the school in hockey in the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference.

English Prof. Robert W. Cochran, council chairman, said the difficulty of scheduling top Division II as well as Division I teams was "a significant factor in the committee's ultimate decision."

Vermont currently is the only undefeated, untied team in Division II play this season with 10 straight division victories and a 16-6 overall record. Division I teams are rated higher than Division II teams.

In Division II play in the past four years Vermont has a 51-11-1 record. In games against Division I opponents this season, Vermont defeated RPI 6-1, Northeastern 6-2 and Clarkson 4-2.

Cochran said the financial stability of the hockey program also was a consideration. He said if the change is approved, a fourth grant-in-aid will be added to the hockey program.

Heavyweight Boxing Wide Open Again

By DEAN TUCKER

Heavyweight boxing is suddenly a wide open thing again. There have been more surprises in the game recently than a tot finds on Christmas morning.

Of course, there is the deposing of Joe Frazier by George Foreman who did the trick in two short, but vicious, rounds.

Then there is the somewhat surprising defeat of Ron Lyle, much touted ex-con who was expected to turn in a better performance against the forever-punching Gerry Quarry, but did not.

And oddly enough ex-champion Muhammad Ali did not put European Heavyweight Champ Jo Bugner "in heaven by seven" as ne had predicted with his usual pre-fight humility.

What does this mean?

Probably that George Foreman will be around a long time, eventually to receive his come-uppance from possibly, Ron Lyle, or more likely Jo Bugner. It will probably be Bugner, because he is a younger man with a lot of rounds ahead of him to practice for his inevitable meeting with Foreman.

But Foreman will not be lounging while he waits for more youngsters to reach his level of pugilistic prowess.

Ali is old, Frazier is mid-aged and Quarry is too. Lyle is twenty-seven, not young for the heavyweight ring. And they all want a shot at it.

Frazier, when he is granted a rematch, will be a better man against Foreman. He made a lot of simple mistakes in his costly loss. He did not take advantage of his knockdowns to rest, he jumped up with his usual courage and rushed back into the stiff arm lefts that Foreman threw. He should have backed off, bought time and rested. Foreman is young and tenacious, he can go the distance with his energy. Frazier did not understand this well enough.

Quarry and Ali are two aging men fighting the battle that gets all athletes: age. Quarry evidently trained hard for Lyle and it paid off. Ali trained very hard for Bugner and it is his realization of being thirty-one and having to take every bout seriously that helped him beat Bugner. Had Ali been haphazard in his training, as he has been accused of in the past against opponents of varying statures, he too might have surprised the world by sitting down when he predicted a victory.

An encouraging sign for Ali fans was his strength in late rounds. He dominated from round six to the end. He is regaining his timing for fifteen rounds that he claimed was lost during the draft trial layoff. His hands were as quick as ever. If his legs hold out he might get on top again. But it is unlikely.

Quarry and Lyle are long shots. Lyle needs a lot of fights to be ready for the likes of Foreman, Frazier, or Ali, but he may not have the time. If he is ready in two years with fight sense he may not have the strength to carry him through. Quarry is on his last fling, he will got out swinging, but he will never be champ, he just doesn't have it.

Bugner may be the man in a few years. He has been in the ring fifty-two rounds with Muhammad Ali now, and that means he has a lot of experience with the best in ten years, anyway. Three years will be prime time for Bugner and the world may see him wearing the belt then.

Roundballers NIT Hopes Hinge At Rhody

By MARTY KELLEY

The Big Apple-Well, it's boiled down to this...If all goes well in Kingston, there may be a weather forecast for New York for the Minutemen of Massachusetts...This is the clincher...The climax...The Last Picture Show...The all-expense paid trip to New York...The rest of the NIT story will be simply academic...

Yes, a win over the Rams of Rhode Island Saturday night at Keaney Gymnasium should lift the Minutemen smack into the NIT...Is it early to prognosticate? Hell, no. Vermont at the Cage on Tuesday will simply be warmup for the most crucial road trip in UMass Basketball History...And this is the same team that wouldn't choke at the Palestra. They certainly won't fail on the Conference road. And what about Fordham and Northeastern? Northeastern-out of its class literally and Fordham-Senior Night at the Cage...Good Lord...And everyone's eligible to drink then...

But UMass is 2-2 at Keaney the last four years and lost a chance for the Beanpot there last year. Al Skinner was dealt four personals via some shoddy officiating and the Minutemen succumbed. But here's a different brand of Minutemen, more excited (and why not with a six game win streak and a 13-6 overall mark) and have more depth to play with than last years's 14-12 club...

Now...Do you remember when Jack and his darlings were 4 and 4 and for the first time in five years, were facing under .500? To keep their heads above water the Minutemen had to play Penn at the Palestra...Mercy. And since the scourge of Philadelphia, Massachusetts has been a changed team...And only Providence and Syracuse (just barely) were able to provide blemishes.

And you know that first NIT team of '70 was 5-5 at one time with Erving...This year's edition being 4-4 at one juncture has now Erving to boast but look at the package prize you have with the likes of McLaughlin, Murphy, Skinner, Peters, Burke, Endicott, Pitino, Austin (not listed in order of importance)...Tommy Toast is starting to deal...And then you have Chuck who gives the team as much moral support as the Band...Chicken and all...The band has to be underrated...They're tough in the clutch.

And speaking about being tough in the clutch...That's the order of the night for the Minutemen at Rhody. With the NCAA post season tourney now expanded to 32 instead of 26 teams, the NIT Committee, facing financial problems, is just itching to invite the UMies and their rowdy road crew...But they won't if we stop the adrenalin at Kinston...

The Rams are no picnic. They'll be more than ready. Steve Rowell, the second leading scorer in the Conference, is perhaps the loop's steadiest shooter. He was true from 30 feet against Erving two years ago sending a game eventually won by the Redmen into overtime.

Abdu Bakar, hurt in an automobile action, might be ready for pivot duty. He's tough and his counterpart in the corner, Robbie Young is cocky as hell...But he can deal if enough people look at him...There won't be a seat to be had at Keaney Saturday night.

The Rams will be beaten badly in the backcourt. They're sloppier than the Hatch Specials in that department. Don Barao returns but the rest of the cast and crew transferred from some phony academic institution that game 15 credits for Basketball 303...Alright, enough humor...If I dare call it that...The Rhode Island story precedes that 38th Annual NIT, and Jack Leaman, you can't look over your shoulder now...

Shoulder or no shoulder, it's what's up front that counts...The NIT may be imminent but the Ram game is your morning's shaving cream...It's that close at hand.

When it's over, someone's gonna get cut...But if you're planning a weekend beer fest in New York like I, please hold your breath until late Saturday night...

Pucksters Take The Road Return Vs. UVM Monday

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

The holiday weekend will be anything but a holiday for the Minutemen pucksters, who will not only travel to Maine for a weekend series against Bowdoin and Colby, but will have to come back and face the class of Division II, the Catamounts of Vermont (10-0-0 in Division II) Monday night at the Springfield Civic Center.

There's no explanation needed when UMass and UVM get together, the contest is always a seat-squirmer and usually goes down to the wire. The Cats are at their season's peak, coming off of a tremendous 4-2 victory over Division I power Clarkson (4th in the East). It was the first time Clarkson had ever been defeated by a Division II club.

Vermont's Tom Eckerson (best goals against average in Division II) has been playing outstanding hockey in the UVM net, especially considering the likes of the competition (Harvard, BU, Clarkson, RPI) but Chuck Rheault has been something working his magic in the UMie net since being installed as a starter.

The Minutemen will be out to avenge an early season heartbreaker in which they come out on the short-end to the tune of 6-4 as Vermont scored two goals in the last 70 seconds to chalk up the victory.

The defending Division II champs have to come back from Maine in good shape before they even get to UVM.

Friday afternoon the pucksters will be in Brunswick, Maine where they'll face off at 4:00 against a strong Bowdoin team which is also in the thick of the playoff battle in the division (7-3-1). Led by co-captain Dick Donovan (12 goals and 21 assists) the Brunswicks have continued their great hockey tradition which culminated last year when they had the best record (16-2).

After the game, it's upstream a bit to Waterville, for a tussle with Colby, a team that has had it's problems and shouldn't be too much trouble for the Minutemen, unless they show what they haven't shown all year—some scoring punch.

So, three key Division II games for the Minutemen, chance to move up (or down) within the division and secure home-ice advantages for the upcoming playoffs. But traveling can take a lot out of a team, and any hockey outfit has to be in the best of shape and spirits to face a team of the likes of UVM.

The Minutemen have played some titillating hockey of late, with an upset over UNH barely slipping away from their grasps Monday night at Durham as guys like Steve Nims, and Billy Harris along with #4 Pat Keenan have provided the exciting script going into the big one (UVM) things are looking pretty good for the pucksters of the big state school in small town Amherst.

There'll be one hell of a game Monday night, and there should be a big crowd (8000?) to greet the Minutemen when they make their appearance on the ice for the opening face-off. That's Monday night, Springfield Civic Center, 8:00 P.M.

See ya there.

Wilkes/Army Greet Matmen In Pa.

By JOHN BOCK

The NCAA has undergone some soul searching the last few years as they have attempted to keep the colleges who are classified as the "Haves" from destroying the "Havenots". Now this is all well and good for football, basketball, and some of the other glamour sports, but for wrestling it doesn't always work out that way.

Take for instance Wilkes College, a small private school in Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania. They couldn't play some of the better high schools in Massachusetts in basketball, so consequently they are a member of the NCAA College Division for their athletic teams. Their wrestling team on the other hand, ruined the U.S. Naval Academy in a dual match in January, 26-15. Navy is the defending EIWA Champion and placed seventh in the nation last year.

Needless to say that did wonders for the Colonels rankings as they now occupy third place in the NCAA Small College Poll and are fourth in the ECAC's Top Ten. They boast two Small College All-Americans on the team, both third place winners at the 1972 NCAA College Division Nationals. Bob Roberts at 126 and Mike Lee at 150 are the boys to beat this year and both had big wins over two of Navy's better kids.

The Colonels play host to the Minutemen of UMass tomorrow evening and host the West Point Cadets in an afternoon match. It will be Wilkes vs. Army at 1:00 P.M., UMass vs. Army at 3:00 P.M. and then UMass as the feature bout of the evening when they wrestle Wilkes at 8:00.

Army is not having one of its better seasons this year as the Cadets are currently 6-8-1 losing to such powerhouses as Cal Poly, Clarion State, South Dakota State, and Minnesota. Army took a swing through the Mid-West and came back 1-4. They have managed to eke out a win over Springfield 21-18, winning six out of ten bouts. The Cadets have Jim McArdle at 126, and Doug Ward at 150 who have been enjoying exceptional seasons this year.

So it is anything but a pleasure trip for the Minutemen as they take to the road for the next to last time. They will go without the services of Carl Dambman who is trying to get down to 190 for the New Englands and the Nationals (hopefully). John Connolly has rejoined the lineup at 190 and George Ireland is back at Heavyweight.

Reassuring veterans Amato (118), Reynolds (126), McGlaughlin (134), Rome (142), Blom (150), Benson (158), and Cadwallader (167) will be ready for the triangular. At 177 Freshman John Lastella is tentively slated to wrestle.

It is competition like this that UMass needs all of the time so that every wrestler has a chance to wrestle tough bouts all year instead of just at tournament time. The outcome of this weekend will decide whether or not Wilkes will reappear on the schedule in the future, or whether some other tough school will be willing to schedule UMass for a dual.

Tracksters Ready For Yan-Con

By WALT POWERS

Sprinter Tony Pendleton laughed confidently and waved his hand, "This team goes for the big ones. You never hear about us in the regular season, but when it comes time for the conference and New Englands, we leave the rest behind. Sweeping the dash at U.N.H. was an omen. We'll do it again at U.N.H. and win the conference."

That's the kind of morale the UMass trackmen bring to the conference championship meet tomorrow, in Durham N.H. UMass won it at Maine last year, and this team is stronger in almost every respect. Surprisingly, UConn is heavily favored.

"Like us," said Coach Ken O'Brien, "UConn is much improved. Unlike us, they are extremely strong in the field events, and they have few weaknesses in any event. It will take an outstanding effort from each member of the team, as well as some help from the other teams, if we hope to repeat. It's a tough conference, with B.U. and UMaine looking very strong. If these teams can neutralize UConn in the field I think we can win it on the track."

The field has always been a weakness for UMass, but they should get some important scoring from sophomores Carmen Letizzia and Ed McAleney in the shot put. Kalekeni "Ken" Banda, a native of Malawi, joins two other strong sophomores, Pete Ryan and Mike Geraghty, in the long jumps.

It's a strong field in the sprints and hurdles, and the winners of these events will be the ones who get hot at the right time. Hurdler Jim Hennessey has been hot all season, and John Mounger and Curt Stegerwald have the potential. No team lacks a strong dash man, but UMass has four. Dennis Busa and Tom Beland are primarily 220' men, but the battle between the Pendleton brothers, Tony and Marshall, could be a conference highlight.

For Co-Captain Steve Levine it looks good in the 600, but again he'll have to work for it. UMass will rely on veteran John Maloney and freshman Peter Byron in the thousand yard run.

The distance events are probably UMass's strongest. Bill Gillin, Randy Thomas, and Paul Catano will run the mile. And Doug O'Connell and Tom Maguire will run the deuce. All of them could double.

The relays could win a close meet. Freshman John McClellan leads off in the mile relay, followed by Dennis Busa and Tom Beland. Steve Levine will anchor. Weeden Wetmore leads off in the two mile relay, followed by John Maloney, Peter Byron, and Devin Croft.

Face it, UMass has a tough assignment. B.U. and UMaine are in it, too, and they figure to be tough. This team has come through before, though. They've built up a competitive edge in the past two weeks, and without a home track, they'll be out to prove themselves. A record of one and four may not look impressive, but watch out! This team could explode.

Rape Crisis Committee Formed

By BILL BALLOU

A Sunday night meeting of fifteen area residents resulted in the formation of the Amherst Rape Crisis Committee which will attempt to respond to the alleged area rape problem.

The meeting, held in North Amherst's North Congregational Church, and chaired by Ms. Kaymarion of Everywoman's Center, agreed on four areas in which the Committee hopes to make contact with various local agencies to encourage them to respond to the problem.

The four areas are:

—Contact with the Amherst police in order to encourage them to maintain stepped up patrols of the Puffton Village area and, if possible, to increase patrolling in Puffton.

—Contact with the Student Senate, and the Senate Transit Service on establishing late night bus service between the UMass campus and Puffton Village.

—Contact with the management of Puffton Village in an effort to improve individual apartment security and the overall security situation at Puffton.

—An attempt to establish more clearly the extent of the rape problem at UMass and in Amherst as a whole. This would include as much statistical data as could be collected from local agencies that already deal with rapes.

Despite the fact that the meeting was organized by Puffton resident John Adams to discuss the alleged rape problem on a town-wide scale, most of the discussion centered around Puffton Village and security problems there.

One resident of Puffton, a woman, complained of slow maintenance services on a broken door and lock, saying that she had been forced to put up with the situation for several weeks.

Another Puffton resident complained of windows with no locks and a front door lock that could be opened by the same key that fit into her next door neighbor's lock.

Several Puffton residents complained of poor lighting, one saying "the lighting's so bad in some places that you can hardly drive your car through, let alone see anyone who might be hiding."

Clifford Hagberg, manager of Puffton Village, was not available for comment yesterday, but his son, Clifford Hagberg Jr., who works on maintenance at Puffton, denied charges that windows did not have locks and that keys were interchangeable. He did say that "we have had a problem with lighting" but that it was caused "by cars driving over lawns and knocking down light posts."

Hagberg also said that at the time of the rape scare in the Puffton 4 section of Puffton Village, "no one came into the office to complain about locks" and that at the first request for a lock change the Puffer Construction Company was instructed to replace the locks on every single woman's apartment in Puffton 4.

One non-Puffton resident warned that by concentrating on Puffton, the committee might have a "problem in establishing too narrow a base. It's a town problem."

The committee also made plans to print up a questionnaire that would be distributed to residents of Puffton concerning security problems.

The next meeting of the Rape Crisis Committee was tentatively scheduled for Sunday evening, February, 25, but no particulars were decided upon. The time and place of that meeting will be announced sometime during the week.

The scheduled meeting would follow a Sunday afternoon meeting in Northampton, sponsored by the Valley Women's Center, to plan for a major Rape Conference which would be held within a month of the planning meeting. The planning meeting is scheduled for 2 P.M. Sunday at the Valley Women's Center in Northampton.

Peacekeeping Body to Act On Cease-fire Violations

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)—The chairman of the international peace-keeping body for Vietnam declared Monday the warring parties have failed to make their cease-fire work in the 23 days since they signed it. But he said his organization will move ahead anyway to begin policing it.

Ambassador Michel Gauvin of Canada, chairman of the International Commission of Control and Supervision, said the cease-fire failure as well as the delay of the central Joint Military Commission in becoming fully operative, has presented the ICCS with serious problems in meeting its obligations."

"In spite of the unsatisfactory conditions which exist as a result of the parties' to the Paris agreement having failed up to now to abide by the agreement," he continued, "the ICCS . . . has decided to proceed to the deployment of its teams at the subregional level, to the points of entry and to have demilitarized zone."

U.S. Requests Investigation

Gauvin reported that the International Commission of Control and Supervision decided to send a team into the field Tuesday to investigate, at the request of the United States, the shooting down of an unarmed American helicopter on a peacekeeping mission last Friday near An Loc, 60 miles north of Saigon. Five crewmen were wounded, one critically, and the United States blamed the Viet Cong.

Gauvin said the commission also will start deploying teams of 14 of 26 sites on Wednesday. They listed these as Phy Bai, Tam Ky, and Chu Lai in the northern sector; Kontum, Phy Cat, Tuy An, Dalat and Bao Loc in the central part of South Vietnam, and Xuan Loc, Ben Cat, Cu Chi, Giong Trom, Vi Thanh and Quan Long in the southern half.

Gauvin said the deployment is expected to be completed before the deadline of Feb. 26 as stipulated in the Paris agreement.

Safety Important

Maj. Gen. Duncan McAlpine, Canadian chairman of the commission's military committee, said safety was the paramount consideration in selecting only 14 sites at present.

"It goes without saying that we would not want to go to places like Quang Tri and Gio Linh," said McAlpine. "These places are still very much in a state of contestation. Obviously, also we've got to be very careful about how we approach the western delta."

Quang Tri and Gio Linh are just below the demilitarized zone, an area of South Vietnam where the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong have held considerable territory since they occupied most of the province in an offensive last spring.

The Mekong Delta lies south of Saigon. Some of its isolated villages are traditional Viet Cong strongholds.

Casualties Totalled

The Saigon command claimed that cease-fire violations have soared past the 4,000 mark and reported these total Vietnamese casualties since the cease-fire officially went into effect on Jan. 28.

North Vietnamese and Viet Cong—7,186 killed, 195 captured.

South Vietnamese military—1,259 killed, 5,837 wounded, 922 missing.

Civilian—103 killed, 373 wounded, 497 abducted.

Day Of Decision Arrives

By CINDY GONET

By tonight at 8 p.m., the race for Amherst town offices will be all over. Voter registrations have reached a new high with 11,428 eligible to cast ballots. Last year at this time, 7,875 voters were registered.

The contention for Town Meeting seats could prove to be most interesting compared to last year as the percentage of voters from the seven precincts has shifted.

In Precinct Four, for example, ten incumbents have filed for reelection. The apportionment of the precinct has dropped the number of positions to be filled to eight. Increased voter registration, especially due to students, has given Precincts Two, Three, and Seven an increase of 21 Town Meeting Members.

Incumbent Merle Howes, and challenger, George Scheurer are the contenders for the office of Selectman. Eric Walgren is campaigning as write-in candidate.

Howes has put emphasis on his six years of experience on the Board, his knowledge of the working of town government and his commitment to "reasonable and controlled growth".

Scheurer has campaigned strongly for better rent conditions for tenants, less traffic congestion, opposition to "Amherst Fields", a 4,000 person capacity housing complex, and a greater consideration of ecological questions.

On the School Committee, Nathaniel Reed, Frederic Cheyette, Harold Gatslick and Marylou Theilman are battling for the two available seats.

Running unopposed are Raymond Werbe, incumbent, of the Amherst Redevelopment Authority; William Field, Town Moderator; and C. Clifton Winn, Elector under the Oliver Smith Will. The Will is a charitable organization from which a trust fund is managed and allocated.

The Library Board of Trustees, expanded by state legislation, has Edgar E. Lindsey and Mary O. (Polly) Longsworth running for the two two-year terms. Robert McClung is running for a two year term, and former Selectman H. Hills Skillings for a one-year term.

POLLS OPEN AT NOON and close at 8 p.m. Polling places are:

Precinct I: Parish Hall, North Amherst.
Precinct II: Fire Station, rear entrance.
Precinct III: Odd Fellows Hall.
Precinct IV: Masonic Building.
Precinct V: Old Junior High Gymnasium, Lessey Street.
Precinct VI: Munson Memorial Library Building, South Amherst.
Precinct VIII: Amherst Auction Galleries.

Newswoman Sees Change In Journalism

By MARK VOGLER

A woman bureau chief for Newsweek Magazine told an audience of 60 women in the Campus Center Auditorium Monday night that "the tide is changing for the better for women seeking careers in journalism."

Ms. Bernice Buresh, the Boston Bureau Chief for the weekly news magazine, was the guest speaker for the University's Careers for Women group.

"Strange things are happening in journalism," Ms. Buresh said. "We're getting away from the hard breaking news and going more to the sophisticated reporting, based on quality of life.

"And because of this, women are becoming sort of the journalists of the hour–they are now more rapidly finding their way into publications. The papers and magazines want reporters who are taking a more humane look at things. And this is the type of work that newswomen have done for years."

Ms. Buresh said that being a woman reporter is a tough thing when you're starting out because "men are agressive and won't let you talk. So you have to start making noise and establish your credentials," she said.

"The significant thing for the trend in journalism is the need for more women and minority people to enter the field. The more we follow this direction, the less we'll fall into the stereotyped pits.

"If we're serious about covering the world, we better jolly well cover it with perception."

Ms. Buresh joined Newsweek in January of 1970 as a correspondent in the magazine's Chicago bureau. In 1973 she assumed her present position.

Prior to joining Newsweek she was a reporter with the Milwaukee Sentinel for six years, specializing in civil rights coverage and demonstrations and riots in cities and campuses.

Collective Bargaining Goal May Cost MTA $100,000

By WILLIAM DENSMORE

The Massachusetts Teachers' Association (MTA) would be willing to spend as much as $100,000 on a drive to gain collective bargaining power for faculty at UMass, according to an MTA spokesman.

Dr. Cyril Solomons, a professional educational consultant from Pennsylvania, said Friday that a figure of $100,000 which has been quoted as the amount the MTA could spend on a UMass organizing effort, is an unbudgeted part of a $1.6 million allocation for "field services" the union uses throughout Massachusetts.

Solomons has been working as a consultant for the MTA in Amherst for a year, supervising union petitioning and organizing activities on the UMass campus.

According to a spokesman for the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) which is using resources, expertise, and funds from the MTA, "the MTA could probably contribute a sum as vast as $100,000 to the organizing of this campus."

Walter B. Denney, a UMass art professor, and MSP spokesman, said that "we're concerned with every single aspect" of what goes on at UMass, but "the central issue is governance."

Denney said that the 300 faculty his union now represents are concerned about tenure, scholarship aid for students and class sizes, and are responding to a "basic threat on the quality of education in Massachusetts."

UMass-Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said Thursday that he would be "as interested as anybody" to know "how the union is going to be a vehicle for getting more scholarship aid or changing criteria for granting tenure."

Bromery said that the effort to unionize faculty here is not a "failure of administration" but just a sign of the times.

"It's more a concern about the times we're in now," Bromery said, adding that "people are feeling insecure now" and are "concerned about their individual and collective future."

Society of Professors spokesman Denney said last Thursday that the MTA is "an extremely well-heeled and well-supplied organization," and that if it was necessary "the MTA could probably contribute a sum as vast as $100,000 to the organizing of this campus."

MTA executive secretary-treasurer William H. Hebert has insisted that there is no "budget" of $100,000 for the UMass drive, but has said that it is a "major effort."

Hebert says that the MTA is moving "far more aggressively into higher education," and already represents faculty at five state colleges.

The MTA claims to represent 50,000 public elementary and secondary school teachers in the state and maintains broad negotiating powers and strong lobbying activity in Boston.

The American Association of University Professors (AAUP) is also seeking collective bargaining power on this campus, either allied or separate from the MSP.

Martin Lapidus, the northeast coordinator for the national AAUP said last Friday that his organization could probably provide funds to make the local affiliate "more than a viable contender" for a collective bargaining position at UMass.

To become sole bargaining agent either union would have to petition for support of 30% of the more than 1,400 faculty and then hold a referendum election under the direction of the state Labor Relations Board.

SW Resource Center To Open Next Week

By MDC STAFF

A place to come and rap, read a magazine, meet people, see a counselor, get into a project of your own. This and more, as the new Southwest Community Resource Center opens, providing the southwest community with personnel from Room To Move, Outreach, Counseling Center, Mental Health, CCEBS, CASIAC, Career Planning and Placement, and other agencies. The place–Hampden Dining Commons (turn right after you walk in). Times starting: Feb. 26th, 9 a.m.-8 p.m., Monday; Thursday, Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

For too long now Southwest students have had to trek to the further reaches of the campus if they wanted counseling of some sort or another. Too often the agencies they visit are not familiar enough with the unique urban-like-environment, that is Southwest. To overcome these problems, S.W.I.P. Conference of last year urged the creation of a center which would decentralize the human services of the University and provide Southwest with a "place" of their own. To this end, Rene Carew, the coordinator of the Center, has been working (and thanks to the commitment and energy of many people, has met with considerable success).

"This center will be an informal, easily accessible place where students can seek information and help, as well as a place open for them to initiate projects, contact others who have similar interests," said Ms. Carew as she added a last touch of yellow paint to one of the room dividers in the Resource Center. "If we are truly trying to humanize this city we live in, it seems imperative that students have an opportunity to relate to the human services on their own territory–Southwest," Ms. Carew added. "Above all it is intended that this be a COMMUNITY center that will open to the needs of this community. The energy that flows into the Center from the community will flow right back out again in the form of programs, special evenings, art exhibits or the hundreds of other possibilities that exist."

Apart from the Center's readiness to respond to the community, there will be counseling available in specific areas of student and staff concern. Whether it be financial, career, emotional, drug, academic, or other difficulties, people will be available to help. In addition, gay counseling, counseling for couples, placement for community volunteers and problem pregnancies, are services the Resource Center is equipped to provide.

Ronald Goldman, the assistant coordinator, emphasized that confidentiality was an absolute rule and no person need fear any failure on that point.

Both students and staff are invited to come in and help the Southwest Community Resource Center grow. Also watch for the weekly schedule which will appear in the Collegian.

Walgren Denies Sex In S.U.B.

By JERRY LAZAR

Eric Walgren, a write-in candidate for Amherst selectperson, has denied rumors that he publicly performed sexual intercourse in the Student Union Ballroom during the spring 1970 student strike.

Eric, who was a part-time cangraduate student in the Art Dept. at the time, says he was a "nude participant in a Happening sponsored by the Strike Committee." He claims he danced nude with a woman who was also nude, and only "momentarily embraced" the woman.

Eric says he was charged with "lewd and lascivious" conduct and fined $500. Walgren was also a member of the Strike Steering Committee and an activist in the anti-war movement.

The other two candidates for the office are incumbent Merle Howes and George Scheurer.

Candy Counter Innovations Planned

By KATHY FRASER

Open for only three weeks, the Penny Candy Shop in the Student Union Lobby has been so well received by students that plans for expansion, as well as the addition of a popcorn machine and pretzel machine, are being considered.

Bernard Wilkes, Supervisor of Retail Operations in the Campus Center, stated that a popcorn machine, installed in the counter so that popcorn could be sold during movies in the Student Union Ballroom, is being planned. Another possibility is a pretzel machine to sell hot pretzels and mustard, such as those sold on the Boston Common, Wilkes added.

When spring arrives, a cart will be purchased, loaded with candy and snacks, and a student hired to push it around the sidewalks on campus selling candy.

Several problems have been encountered, a major one being that the Penny Candy Shop is inadequately stocked and many items are frequently sold out.

This problem should be soon solved as the demand for candy is established and correct amounts of the 140 items can be ordered, said Wilkes. The demand has been much greater than originally anticipated, so not enough candy had been ordered, he said.

Another complaint from the students has been that service is too slow. A third cash register owned by the Campus Center has been installed and an extra salesgirl has been hired on each shift to help alleviate this problem.

One salesgirl said that the students themselves are too impatient and during especially busy times have started shouting orders when they are in a hurry.

Wilkes stated that time and practice would be the best solution, for the salesgirls will become more experienced in weighing the candy and in the near future more candy will be sold at a penny a piece which will also save time.

Wilkes said he is aware that students have complained that the design of the new Penny Candy Shop does not fit in with the basic design of the Student Union. Of the possible choices, this was the best, Wilkes said, with shake shingles on the roof which match the walls of the lobby, and smooth formica on the outside of the counter.

Items sold at the Penny Candy Shop will be checked with those sold at the newly opened Peoples Co-Op so there will be no duplication of goods.

The idea for developing the Penny Candy Counter began in February, 1972 when figures showed that business in the Student Union dropped almost $3,000 as a result of the students' acceptance of the newly opened Campus Center and the decrease in business from the library construction workers, as the library was nearly completed.

A student survey was taken and a market analysis done, with a Penny Candy Shop found to be the most favorable. The construction of the shop was authorized by the Campus Center Governing Board in November, 1972. Construction was begun in January, 1973 for the work would least disrupt the business and flow of people. It is now the largest college candy shop in New England.

Senate Women's Committee Asks For Night Buses

By SUE SHEPARD

The Student Senate Women's Committee has filed a bill with the Student Senate to fund University bus service at night. The committee favors a transit service's plan of having two buses running nightly on a regular route through campus and out towards Sunderland and Belchertown. At last night's meeting, it was rejected. The "dial-a-bus" idea tentatively proposed by Paul Hamel, treasurer of the Student Senate, would mean phoning a bus for transportation as you would a taxi cab.

The present transportation grant allows the nightly operation of buses, but the Student Senate would have to supply drivers' salaries and fuel at a cost of approximately $20/night. The Women's Committee bill would enable funds to be released to the transit service for this purpose.

The committee defeated committee member Janet Perlman's request for $100 for the newly formed University Women's Caucus and allotted them $25 instead. This group's function is to coordinate existing women's groups on campus. Anyone interested in helping out on the Caucus can get in touch with Julia Fata of CASIAC, or The Everywoman's Center.

Other issues discussed by the Women's Committee were the possibilities of the infirmary performing abortions; establishment of a rape hotline telephone service in the UMass security station; and initiating women's centers for Sylvan and Northeast area residents and commuters. Anyone wishing more information can contact Cathy Corbett, Chairperson of the Women's Committee.

Mansfield Favors Patrick Gray

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana said Monday he is "inclinedtoward" Senate confirmation of L. Patrick Gray III as director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

"I hear he has been political, but no one is perfect," Mansfield told newsmen.

At the same time, Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W. Va., informed the Senate he will vote against Gray's confirmation "primarily because of his political partnership."

Ruling On Residency Doubted

By STEVE SECHE

A member of Governor Sargent's Legal Counsel said Friday that he had "doubts" that the Governor would seek a state Supreme Judicial Court ruling requested by the Amherst Registrars of Voters for the purpose of clarifying voter residency requirements, particularly as they apply "to students and other citizens whose residence is difficult to determine."

The request was made in a letter to the Governor signed by the Amherst Registrars of Voters, dated February 6, 1973, in which they stated "we believe there is great urgency (for such a ruling) regarding the circumstances under which an individual has the right to register in the community of his choice."

Speaking from Boston, Sandy Pratt, of the Governor's Legal Counsel Office, said that after preliminary investigation, he didn't feel that the question met the constitutional requirements for such a ruling by the Court, particularly that it be "an important question of law, and a solemn occasion." While stating that a final decision has not yet been reached, Pratt did say that the question might be referred to the State Attorney General's Office.

It was in the 1971 ruling on voter residency requirements by Attorney General Robert Quimn that was cited in the Registrars' letter as "insufficient, inconsistent, and subject to interpretation, and/or debate at the local level." In that ruling, Quinn stated that students should be allowed to vote in whatever town they attend collect, while leaving the precise guidelines for such voter registration open to interpretation by each individual town/city within the Commonwealth.

The result, said Ms. Emma-Jean Cole, President of the Amherst League of Women Voters, has been that "many people have expressed great confusion" about what the laws surrounding residency requirements for voters actually are, and that this confusion has been "most severe" in areas such as Amherst, with large student voting populations.

Ms. Cole said she felt there was a "grey area of opinion" in the 1971 ruling of Attorney General Quinn which was responsible for much of the confusion. As a result, the Amherst League of Women Voters sent a letter to the Governor requesting judicial action on the matter, and asked the Registrars of Voters to do likewise, to emphasize the urgency with which the League views the matter.

At the same time, Ms. Cole said, the League of Women Voters is supporting, on a statewide level, legislation introduced by State Representative John Bussinger (Dem.-Brookline) that would make provisions for uniform procedures in the registration of voters.

Both Ms. Cole and Ms. Matusko denied that their intentions were to halt student voting in Amherst. "We have always been very flexible when it came to registering students in Amherst," Ms. Matusko said. "It has been our feeling that it is unfair to ask residency requirements of students that you don't ask of construction workers or college professors."

Clarity On Military Credit Sought

By DON BISHOP

With the question of ROTC credit due to come before the Faculty Senate on Thursday of this week, the impending loss of university credit for service in the U.S. military is a related issue, that will be affected by any new decision on ROTC.

While at the present time veterans, upon request, are being given 2 credits for between 6 months to one year of military service and 4 credits for 1 year and over, the University Admissions and Records Board has decided to terminate this credit as of September 1, 1973, based on the present non-accreditation of the ROTC program.

According to Assistant Registrar William Loder, veteran's service credit was originally granted on October 19, 1971 by the Admissions and Records Board.

The Board agreed at that time that military service of between 6 months to one year, including the completion of basic or recruit training, would be seen as meeting the requirement in Military Science at the freshman level.

For military service of one year or over, including the completion of basic training, the veteran would be seen as having satisfied the Military Science requirements at both the freshman and sophomore levels and he would be waived, without credit, from the phys ed requirement.

The decision to grant credit for veterans was based on a memorandum from Loder to the Admissions and Records Board. He prepared his memo for the establishment of this credit upon the recommendation of the American Council of Education, in its Guide to the Evaluation of the Educational Experience in the Armed Services.

Loder asked for a clarification of the official policy towards veterans credit after the Board of Trustees' decision last spring to remove ROTC credit, upon which the credit for military service had been based.

The Admissions and Records Board, as a result of the loss of ROTC credit, decided last December to cancel the credit for veterans. Only the phys ed waiver, for a year or more of service, will be retained after September 1st.

However, if the Trustees reverse their decision of last April, Loder feels certain that the Admissions and Records Board will reverse theirs and restore credit for military service.

The 2500 veterans on campus will continue to be eligible for service credit until next September. Those who have already received the credit will not have it rescinded.

Not all eligible veterans have applied for this credit, but Loder estimated that he had seen a "very substantial number" of those who are here.

Credit for specific courses taken in the military service will not be affected by the Board's decision. Loder's office will continue to evaluate these on an individual basis.

In an interview last week, Col. Paul Fisher, head of the Division of Military and Air Science stressed the fact that neither he nor anyone else involved with the ROTC program had wanted to see veterans lose their service credit, but he felt it was justified due to the basing of the service credit on ROTC accreditation.

The Admissions and Records Board, which is composed primarily of administrators, is allowed to rule on what Loder termed "minor, local academic policy" subject to the approval of the Chancellor, without having to go through the Board of Trustees.

Newly Released POW's Plan For Future

By PETER ARNETT
AP Special Correspondent

CLARK AIR BASE, Philippines (AP)—The 19 U.S. prisoners of war remaining at Clark Field rushed through processing Monday and began laying plans for a future they didn't have the day before.

Officials reported the prisoners, who were released Sunday, are in such good health that some could fly to the United States on Tuesday or Wednesday morning at the latest.

Navy Lt. James W. Bailey, 30, of Kosciusko, Miss., was the first man of the 20 in Hanoi's second prisoner release to fly home. He left Monday to be reunited with his ailing father. Operation Homecoming spokesmen said all 20 men were in good condition.

Rapid Processing

"Their health is so good that in some cases we have had to assign two escorts per returnee," a spokesman said. "The returnees were going through their processing faster than one escort could keep up with."

Most of the remaining 19 turned out Monday night for a tour of the Clark Base Exchange and a chance to spend some of the back pay that has been piling up for at least five years.

When a reporter who talked with the former prisoners while they shopped asked Air Force Capt. James R. Shively, 30, of Spokane, Wash., what he thought of longer hair styles, Shively said:

Surprised by Styles

"It's kind of funny. Every time we would get pictures we would compare them with the last ones we had gotten. And as the years went by, the hair got progressively longer."

Reporters also were permitted a 15-minute barracks interview with six of the POWs, and most spoke of plans to splice together the broken ends of their lives.

They were barely 24 hours out of the Hanoi Hilton, home for all of them for at least five years. They sat a little self-consciously in a comfortably furnished room.

Dreams Into Reality

As reporters asked quiet questions, the men told how they would translate their prison dreams into reality. "I'm going back to my wife and having 16 kids," said Air Force Capt. Kevin J. McManus, 30, of Babylon, N.Y. He spent only four days with his wife Mary Jane before he was shot down in mid-1967.

For Bachelor Air Force Capt. Michael C. Lane of Charlotte, N.C., life from now on will be a search for the ideal wife.

"She has to have a nice figure, not necessarily Hollywood but with a cute face," Lane said. "Preferably blonde, a girl that enjoys athletics, a bit of intelligence, socially adept."

The slim, smiling 31-year-old Lane said he drew the picture of his ideal wife in the lonely years he spent in prison, from Dec. 2, 1966, until Sunday.

Air Force Capt. Herbert B. Ringsdorf, 33, from Elba, Ala., is rediscovering the commonplace things he had forgotten entirely in his years of detention after his plane was shot down in November 1966.

"The smell of perfume, the taste of food I haven't had for years, they are the most exciting things," he said. "And the nurses in miniskirts."

"Resurrection"

For Maj. Jay R. Jensen of Sandy, Utah, "after six years in hell, this is resurrection." Speaking quickly and intently, the 41-year-old Jensen said: "We didn't expect nurses on the plane. We were surprised that everyone was so glad to see us."

Jensen's wife divorced him three years ago while he was in the Hanoi Hilton, so his first free days will be spent on the ski slopes of Utah with his mother, father, brothers and sisters.

SEES SON FOR FIRST TIME–Air Force Capt. Hayden J. Lockhart, Jr., shakes hands with his son, Jamie, 7, whom he is seeing for the first time as wife, Jill, looks on during arrival at Travis Air Force Base, Calif., today. Lockhart was captured in March, 1965, and his son was born in May, 1965. (AP)

Kissinger Briefs Tanaka On Trip

By KENSEI YOSHIDA
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — Henry A. Kissinger filled in Japan's leaders Monday on his talks in Hanoi and Peking, dined at a geisha house and prepared to head for home to report.

Much interest centered on the talks President Nixon's national security adviser had Saturday in Peking with Chairman Mao Tse-tung. Nothing was made public here on the subject but Nixon's director of communications, Herbert Klein, indicated an announcement would be made on Kissinger's return to the United States.

He is due in Washington at 3:30 p.m. EST Tuesday.

Talks With Tanaka

Foreign Minister Masayoshi Ohira, who joined Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka for an hour and 40 minutes of talks with Kissinger, said the U.S. advisor confided in the Japanese the gist of his talks with Mao. But Ohira said he had been asked not to make any disclosure.

Ohira told newsmen only that the talks covered a wide spectrum of subjects, including Vietnam reconstruction, the international monetary situation and China's relations with the United States and Japan.

Advance in Relations

Sources close to the American delegation said there had been an important advance in Chinese-American relations.

Speculation concerns the possibility that President Nixon might withdraw the 8,000 American troops now on Taiwan, the Chinese island which is headquarters for the Nationalist Chinese government recognized by the United States. These troops largely have been supporting the U.S. role in Vietnam and since the cease-fire are no longer essential.

There also is talk of the United States being allowed to open a trade office in China. "It was a very useful meeting," Ohira said, "as it gave us valuable insights" into how Japan might proceed with its Asian diplomacy.

Welcome Gesture

The Japanese welcomed Nixon's gesture of sending Kssinger to brief them, especially since Tanaka's government has felt ignored by Washington in recent months and now also faces mounting opposition criticism for letting itself be forced into permitting the yen's exchange rate to float upward by U.S. devaluation of the dollar.

Soviet Air Crash Kills 77

By IVA DRAPALOVA

PRAGUE (AP) — A three-jet Soviet airliner burst into flames and broke apart while attempting to land at Prague International Airport Monday. Western airline sources at the airport reported 77 of the 99 persons aboard perished.

The 22 survivors included 14 of the 87 passengers and 8 of the 12 crew members, informants said. About half the survivors needed only first-aid treatment.

The official Czechoslovak news agency gave no official casualty figures but confirmed that the plane had crashed "during a landing maneuver" and that "some of the crew and passengers survived."

The casualties were believed mostly Russians and other East Europeans. Sources in Moscow said some Cubans were among the passengers.

The Tupolev 154 jet was Aeroflot's regular morning flight from Moscow to Prague.

Cause of the crash was not known.

It was the second disaster in five months to strike Aeroflot, the Soviet state airline. A crash near Moscow last Oct. 13 claimed 176 lives, making it the worst recorded civil air disaster in history.

The TU154, equipped with three fanjet engines, can carry up to 164 passengers and 3 pilots and a navigator.

Judge Separates Lesbians; Lets Them Keep Children

SEATTLE, Wash. (AP) — Two mothers, both self-avowed lesbians and fundamentalist Christians, have been awarded custody of their children–on the condition that they no longer live together.

"You can continue the relationship, even care for each other's children," said Superior Court Judge James A. Noe, "but live separately."

So Sandra Schuster and her two sons and Madeline Isaacson and her four children and their dog spent the last weekend moving out of the five-bedroom house they have occupied for almost a year while awaiting the outcome of their divorces and a custody fight.

Children Center of Controversy

There was more of a dispute over custody of the Schuster children, according to Nancy Kaplan, a court-appointed social worker.

"But I really couldn't separate the two cases, since they are so closely tied together," the social worker said.

Indeed, close ties were cited as the primary reason for the unusual custody award. The social worker described their living arrangement as "a most happy, well-organized, creative family."

And a court-appointed psychiatrist in the case, Dr. S. Harvard Kaufman, said his investigation had established that "the children certainly are getting good physical and emotional care...They show no identification problems."

No Reason for Change"

"I see no reason for change of custody at this time," Kaufman continued, "especially since the reasons offered by the fathers give nothing to take the place of the healthy mothering the children have been exposed to, and since the children themselves want to remain as they are."

Noe refused to discuss the case beyond saying that he considered each mother the better parent, that it was in the best interest of the children for the mothers to live separately and that he had set no time limit for them to fine new homes.

Decision Last December

Noe made his decision in the case last December, and the two women have now relocated their families about a block apart.

The two women say they met in church after both had been married about nine years.

"We felt so much closer to each other in our religious beliefs than we did to our husbands," Ms. Schuster said.

Both women are members of the Pentecostal religion.

Labor May Support Nixon

By NEIL GILBRIDE
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP)-President Nixon courted AFL-CIO leaders in a 40-minute visit Monday and it paid off with a strong hint of labor support for his tough new approach to stem U.S. foreign trade losses.

"Whether we go along depends on the details," cautioned 78-year-old AFL-CIO President George Meany in discussing Nixon's yet-to-be-announced trade legislation. But Meany said of Nixon's approach, "I think the whole idea has a whole lot of merit."

Thanks Labor For Support

Nixon thanked the labor leaders for supporting his efforts to achieve "peace with honor" in Vietnam, commiserated with them over the effect of rising food prices on workers and explained he moved quickly to devalue the dollar last week because there was not time to wait for Congress to act, according to Meany and other informants in the closed meeting.

"He presented, from the viewpoint of a trade unionist, a very practical approach to trade" that would involve asking Congress for the power to use a series of options to bargain with other nations, Meany said.

Meany said he told Nixon that "any nation that closes the door on us, on our products, we should turn around and close the door on them" as a bargaining lever, and that Nixon appeared to be moving in that direction.

Nixon told reporters later in the day that the meeting with the labor bosses was "very constructive."

In addition to economic issues, Nixon said he expressed his appreciation during the meeting for the support "most of the leaders" of organized labor had given "our programs of national defense and to achieve peace with honor..."

Meany said afterwards at a news conference: "I think he brought the war to an honorable conclusion."

Meany said there were some things on which the AFL-CIO disagrees with Nixon, including proposals for a lower federal minimum wage for teen-agers and his budget cuts for some social programs.

News Shield Law Urged

NEW YORK (AP) — The editor of the Detroit News says the Supreme Court's decision last June on the confidentiality of newsmen's sources necessitates the enactment of a "highly qualified shield laws."

Martin S. Hayden, who also is vice president of the newspaper, told a journalism conference Sunday that in general his newspaper believes that state and federal legislatures "should keep their noses out of our business."

"We were against the fair newspaper act on account of its being a special economic privilege for publishers," he said. "We did not agree with some publishers who thought newspapers should be free from the wage and price control act and we don't favor post office subsidies for newspapers."

But Hayden said the Supreme Court's ruling last June compelling New York Times reporter Earl Caldwell to disclose confidential information had made him belive in "the necessity of a federal shield law."

Marcos May Give Foes Amnesty

By STAN SWINTON
Associated Press Writer

MANILA (AP) — President Ferdinand E. Marcos announced Monday he is studying a possible general amnesty for three dissident groups dividing Philippine unity–armed Moslem secessionists in the south, pro-Communist guerrillas in the north and those accused of plotting against the government and his life.

"My objective is to unite the country, not to exacerbate divisions," the 55-year-old World War II guerrilla fighter told The Associated Press in a 70-minute interview.

Selective Amnesty in January

Marcos decreed a selective amnesty in January for Moslem rebels in eight provinces and nine cities in southern Mindanao. Philippine officials have charged that neighboring Malaysian Sabah, a Borneo Moslem state, is using financial aid from an unnamed Arab nation to help the rebels in an effort to create a separate Moslem nation. Outside of Mindanao, the Philippines is predominantly Christian.

Plot to Kill Marcos

Speaking in conciliatory tones, Marcos said: "My feeling is that if we are going to give amnesty to the armed Communist rebels and to the Moslem secessionists, it would necessarily require a study of amnesty for those who have plotted against the government, even if the plot did involve my life."

U.S. Senate investigators have told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in Washington that Marcos' declaration of martial law Sept. 22 followed discovery of a right-wing plot to kill him.

August McCormick Lehman, Jr., 23, of Nashville, Tenn., now in jail here, has signed a confession that he was part of a plot to kill Marcos.

Vice-President Involved

U.S. Senate investigators have said they learned from high Philippine sources that those behind the plot were Vice President Fernando Lopez and Sergio Osmena, Jr., son of a former Philippine president who ran against Marcos in the 1969 presidential election. Members of their families also have been implicated.

After discovery of the plot and the declaration of martial law, more than 8,000 persons with widely varying political views were jailed. This included a number of journalists. All but one daily newspaper was closed. Three major English-language Manila dailies now are publishing.

Treasury Asks For Devaluation

By JAY PERKINS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Treasury Department asked Congress Monday to approve what already has occurred by devaluing the dollar.

The department announced it has requested legislation raising the price of gold from $38 per ounce to $42.22. The effect of the move would be to devalue the dollar by the 10 per cent announced, and put into effect, last week.

Only Congress has the power to set the price on U.S. gold. Last week's devaluation, even though dependent on an eventual change in the price of gold, was achieved simply by exchanging the dollar in foreign markets as if it were devalued.

New Rates of Exchange

Numerous countries since have established new rates for currency exchange and others have let their currency float.

The department's request for legislation to set permanently the dollar's value at the new level is expected to sail through both branches of Congress in the next few weeks.

Several key Democrats said last week that the devaluation was inevitable. And Rep. Wright Patman, D-Tex., chairman of the House Banking Committee, said he was ready to begin hearings as soon as the treasury requested the legislation.

Other Bills to be Considered

The devaluation is only one of several bills Congress is expected to consider this session in an effort to turn around the nation's balance of trade deficit. Nixon also has outlined in general terms various trade legislation that could include a selective surcharge on imports from countries which refuse to cooperate with the U.S. plans for solving its trade problems.

And several Democrats, notably Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., and Sen. J. W. Fulbright, D-Ark., have called for cutbacks in overseas military spending as a means of reducing the payment deficit.

The U.S. devaluation is the second in 14 months. Its immediate effect was to raise the price of foreign imports into the United States and lower the price of American goods shipped to other countries, thus giving the U.S. a better trading advantage.

General Petain's Remains Stolen

ILE D'YEU, France (AP) — Grave robbers stole the remains of Marshal Philippe Petain, French hero of World War II, from the tomb on this bleak Atlantic coast island Sunday night.

The action, discovered Monday, is bound to raise a political storm during the final weeks of the campaign for national legislative elections March 4 and 11.

Right-wing groups have long demanded that Petain's body be moved from the island where he died in prison in 1951 to the national military cemetery at Douamount, near Verdun, the scene of Petain's historic victory over the Germans in 1917.

Still Condemned

But Petain is still the object of condemnation by other groups in France for his actions in signing the armistice with the invading Nazis in 1940 and heading the collaborationist Vichy government.

There was no immediate indication what motivated a group of men to rob the tomb. They had to shift a massive concrete cover on the grave, extract a coffin weighing around 1,750 pounds and move it away from the isolated cemetery. The coffin was oak, around an inner lining of zinc enclosing the marshal's embalmed body.

Yacht Gone

Police were searching the Ile d'Yeu but it was thought likely the coffin had already been moved off the island. Residents said a yacht which had been anchored there for several days disappeared during the night.

Heavy extra guards were placed around the Douamount cemetery, where lie 15,000 French soldiers who died in the Verdun holocaust. When still a national hero and in honorable retirement in 1938, Petain said his "dearest wish" was to be buried there.

Bircher Says Wallace Shooting A Plot

By MARK VOGLER

NORTHAMPTON—The attempted assassination of Alabama Gov. George Wallace was the result of a "master conspiracy", and the suppression of that information was a "conspiracy on the part of the national news media", a former undercover operative of the Milwaukee Police Department said Saturday at the People's Institute.

According to Timothy R. Heinan, an active member of the John Birch Society, the Wallace shooting is linked to the same sources responsible for the Kennedy and Martin Luther King assassinations.

"The shooting of Gov. Wallace was achieved by a pro Mao-Leninist terror group united in a cooperative effort with other communist groups financially backed by certain people in high positions of society who want to use these terror organizations for their own power," Heinan said.

Heinan, when later asked in a press conference to explain the "master conspiracy", would not be specific but indicated that the Commission on Foreign Relations could be involved along with several United States congressman and various government officials.

He contented that the organization had its headquarters in New York and was supposed to have existed for over 200 years, being an international force.

Heinan, 25 and a graduate from Marquette University, disputes the charge that Arthur Bremer was a "lone psychotic" who acted on his own accord to shoot Gov. Wallace.

"I couldn't find anybody in Milwaukee who knew him who used the word "loner" to describe him—except a bunch of newsmen," he said.

While a student at Marquette, Heinan worked two years for the Milwaukee Police Department, infiltrating such Communist revolutionary groups as the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS), the Radical Student Union, the Black Panthers and the Weathermen.

It was in an SDS meeting three years ago that he claims to have identified Bremer who he said was "naive and didn't understand the New Left Movement very well."

"Bremer seemed to have a strong desire for attention; and it was perhaps that desire which led to his role in the assassination plot. But he had a deep interest to become involved with the SDS," Heinan said.

He said that Bremer's name popped into his mind last year when the news of Wallace's shooting broke. On May 15 Alan Stang from the American Opinion magazine contacted Heinan, and the two began putting together information which they contended gave proof that Wallace's attempted assassination was a Communist Conspiracy.

In light of Bremer's unemployment during the period he was working on Wallace's campaign staff, Heinan commented: "I'd say Arthur Bremer was being financed. If not, I'd second Alan Stang's theory that he was Secretary of the Treasury."

Heinan used the case of a "mystery man" for proof to support his payoff argument. He said that many people interviewed concurred on identical descriptions of a conspicuous man that Bremer was observed to have frequently met with. The man was later found dead due to an overdose of drugs in the trunk of a car.

According to Heinan, Bremer didn't have credit cards, had about $5.50 in his bank account, and was known by the campaign staff to go without food.

"Yet, Arthur Bremer was also observed to have done some extravagant things which would certainly involve a little money," Heinan said.

Heinan added that Bremer was overheard on one occasion making a number of statements of how he wished to engage in more violent activities. Bremer was also seen holding a Communist paper which contained articles critical of Wallace.

He referred to Bremer's trial as a "circus". "It was very interesting to note what was and what was not introduced as testimony and who and who didn't appear as witnesses," he said.

Heinan argued that Bremer's employer, mother and girl friend should have been asked to testify "instead of the court session centering around this obvious phoney doing his insane act."

He claimed that Bremer had pretended to go insane when he got himself into trouble.

September 14 of last year, Heinan claimed that 70 men of the Washington Press Corps called a special Press conference for the unveiling of the "conspiracy information". A representative of CBS News was also on hand.

Heinan now charges that on that day the national news media conspired to suppress the information. "I would think that it would be just as important as stories on what color shirt Bremer wore and what he ate for breakfast," he said.

"But nothing was put across. A. P. had a small blurp. But no news stories of any significance. A representative of Walter Cronkite's office said that it was in the opinion of CBS that the story was not newsworthy."

Oil Rationing May Not Hit Texas Hard

By GARY GARRISON
Associated Press Writer

BROWNSVILLE, Tex. (AP)—Gasoline rationing would not affect Texas as adversely as other areas, a petroleum industry executive said Monday.

C. Howard Hardesty Jr., executive vice president of Continental Oil Co., made the remark prior to speaking on "The Energy Crisis" at the annual meeting of the Texas Daily Newspaper Association.

Others speaking of the energy crisis today were F. E. Hoglund of the Exxon Co., Houston and James E. Russell, an independent oil operator from Abilene.

Hardesty said that as much of the current problem involves transportation and delivery, Texas will not be as likely to suffer from gasoline rationing, which, he said, could be enforced in some areas between now and summer.

Saying he is discouraged about the situation, Hardesty told Texas newspaper publishers and executives: "We got into our present predicament by failing to act intelligently in the 1960s."

THE SCANDAL OF SECRECY

John W. Gardner, Chairman
Common Cause
Former Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare

One of the weird and nonsensical facts about our government — at all levels — is that much of the public's business is done in the deepest, darkest secrecy. Citizens assume that only questions of national security and some aspects of criminal justice are dealt with in secret. Little do they know! Most of the time our public officials act as though the way they conduct our business is none of our business.

In 1972 roughly one-third of the Senate Public Works Committee meetings were held in secret. The figure for the Senate Agriculture Committee was 59 percent, for the House Appropriations Committee over 90 percent. The House Ways and Means Committee, which drafts the laws governing every federal tax dollar you and I pay, is notoriously secretive. Security is so tight that even the staff assistant of a Congressman who is on the Committee can't attend the closed meetings. What are they hiding?

All sessions of congressional committees — and records of all votes taken at such sessions — should normally be open to the public. Committees should be allowed to close a meeting only for considerations of national security or invasion of personal privacy, and the procedure for closing it should be carefully protected against abuse.

In the Executive Branch, virtually everyone associated with national security acknowledges that the system of classifying documents to preserve secrecy has been badly abused — all too often for the purpose of concealing bureaucratic error. And the zeal for secrecy extends to every government agency under the control of the Executive Branch. Regulatory agencies often meet behind closed doors, omit public hearings, and suppress reports the public should see.

Of course, the secrecy involved is only secret-from-the-public. The special interest lobbyists know very well what goes on in those hush-hush meetings. Quite often they're right in there with the decision makers. The only one who has splinters in his nose from bumping against closed doors is John Q. Public.

Now there is a resolution before the Senate — sponsored by Senators Humphrey (D., Minn.) and Roth (R., Del.) (plus 11 other sponsors) which would open all Senate committee meetings. A bill (S 260) recently introduced in the Senate by Lawton Chiles of Florida and in the House (HR 4) by Dante Fascell, also of Florida, would open all Legislative and Executive Branch meetings except those dealing with national security or involving personal privacy.

Information is power, and secrecy is the most convenient means of keeping that power out of the hands of the people. What the people don't know, they can't object to.

It's time to change all that. And you can help. Write your two Senators and your Congressman. Tell them you want them to open up the system. Or join Common Cause (2100 M Street NW, Washington, D.C. 20037) and ally yourself with 200,000 other members in getting these changes made. We're going to give this nation back to its citizens. PBS To Crusade For 'ZOOM'

By CRAIG AMMERMAN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Public broadcasting has launched a "Children's Crusade" to build a constituency strong enough to save the program Zoom, billed as America's only television show written and performed entirely by children.

The crusade was due to begin nationwide on Monday following a 10-day appeal in New England. The results in this six-state area thus far are 30,000 cards and letters and donations exceeding $200,000.

Zoom, which is completing its second year on most of the 230 television stations in the Public Broadcasting System (PBS) is facing financial collapse due to a cutback in funds from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. The cutback has left Zoom's sponsors $1.8 million shy of the funds necessary to produce a full 52-show season this year.

"We know we are going to have to go to the corporations and foundations for that kind of money," said John Kerr, who is in charge of fund raising at WBGH in Boston, the station which produces Zoom.

But first, before help is sought, Kerr says public broadcasting is going to the people it serves--children aged 6 to 12 and their parents--in an appeal for grass roots support. He said PBS stations across the country would begin broadcasting appeals to save Zoom this week.

"We're not going to go hat in hand," Kerr said. "We're going to try to get tangible evidence of our public's support."

If the initial support shown in New England for Zoom is characteristic of its appeal across the country, the program's sponsors can make a strong show in their effort for money.

Ten days ago, WGBH put out a "Zoom Alarm" during its broadcast day, saying the program was in danger and asking for support. Through last Friday, Kerr said 30,000 photographs and letters from New England children have arrived.

So has $221,000 in contributions, he said. But that money will not be used entirely for Zoom, Kerr said.

"All the stations in the Public Broadcasting System are asking for support for all their shows, and the money that is coming in will be used for all the productions, not for one particular show," Kerr said.

Zoom uses Boston-area children between the ages of 9 and 12 as performers for the show. All material that is used is submitted by children.

It ranges from corny jokes--"This is my nose. How do you spell it? I-T silly."--to home movies showing children at work or play in various sections of the country.

The performers spend 22 weeks on the show and then are replaced, with partial replacements for the seven-member cast being made very 11 weeks.

"The main requirement for Zoomers is flexibility and an ability to get along with other children," said Cheryl Bibbs, the program's talent coordinator.

The children, who get their parts at auditions, spend 13 hours a week at the studio. Miss Bibbs said the show might take up some time the children would otherwise use for studying, but said "we think it helps them in school. They become more interested in school because their artistic and special abilities are brought out by participating."

Zoom is shown daily during the week, running 30 minutes per program, and is described by Miss Bibbs as being "educational, but not in the sense of teaching."

The "Zoomers", as the show's stars are known, produce a play each week and often give excerpts from other productions, all of which are written by their peers across the country and mailed in.

Nixon Facing Funds Showdown

WASHINGTON (AP)—The House Agriculture Committee moved rapidly Monday toward a showdown with President Nixon over impounding funds appropriated for rural programs.

It held a quick holiday hearing on a bill to require the President to turn loose about $120 million appropriated by Congress for rural water development grants. The grants would supplement loans through the Farmers Home Administration.

Another hearing was scheduled for Tuesday to hear the administration's side of the story, with indications the committee would act later this week, and probably favorably, on the bill.

Monday's witnesses supported the legislation, claiming many small rural communities could not proceed with their programs unless they received grants of half the projected costs.

Vote Today

Amherst town elections are being held today. This is an opportunity for the 3000 students who are registered voters in Amherst to gain proportional representation in town government.

For too long, students have depended upon the mercy and decision-making of a town government that is not representative of their interests. Students have considered the problems they face as insolveable and themselves as transients. As a result students have participated little in Amherst town politics.

In this election, there are many issues which will affect students' lives.

One issue is whether Amherst is to have a rent-control board. Later it will be decided who will be the representatives on such a board. By voting in today's election students can insure the establishment of such a board and proper representation on that board.

A second issue in the election is that of town growth. By voting, students can help determine how Amherst should grow, and whether Amherst should allow more apartment complex building, where the apartments should be located, if Amherst should remain a relatively isolated community or become a bedroom community of Springfield.

Students have too long lived under the misapprehension that they are not located in Amherst long enough to worry about local problems, but they must remember that the problems they face today are the same ones that future students will face. By voting today, students can help solve these problems.

After The War

President Nixon's inability, as shown by several of his recent statements, to understand why the American people, and his critics in particular, have not expressed joy and admiration over the Vietnam peace settlement demonstrates two things.

First, it shows that Nixon cannot comprehend why many Americans feel that the Vietnam war was not only a political and military catastrophe but a moral crime of major proportions as well. Thus while Nixon extricated the United States from Vietnam he did so because of national and international political expediency and not because he believed the war to be fundamentally wrong.

Secondly, it shows that Nixon is ignorant of the fact that the war has shattered the fabric of American life. Not all the effects of the Vietnam war on this country are immediately obvious or readily acknowledged, but it has ripped divisions in this country which may never heal. A whole generation of Americans is growing up with a deep and justified distrust of its government. A distrust of this kind can be fatal to the viability of an already crippled political process. Furthermore, many Americans will never again be able to view their country with the pride and satisfaction they once did.

Deep within them, many Americans realized that the United States sacrificed more than 46,000 of its own men for the sake of "peace with honor". It also sacrificed its belief in its own moral goodness. Vietnam has stunned and shaken the American psyche as has no other event since the Civil War and its effects, like those of the Civil War, will leave their imprint on American life for decades to come. It is doubtful that America can become a healthy nation again without deliberately and consciously recognizing what it did in Vietnam, and one of Nixon's greatest failings as a President is his inability and unwillingness to lead America toward this recognition.

Meanwhile, as B52s continue to reign destruction on Laos and Cambodia, there will be no dancing in the streets, no victory parties, no joyous celebrations. Masked by the euphoria surrounding the returning POWs, America will maintain an uneasy silence, asking itself what happened, what it means, and what is to be done.

March 1-A Good Day

While March 1 is being hailed as a day of emancipation by many because they will be able to drink legally, it is silly to think that anyone would seriously interpret this new law as a crowning emblem of adulthood.

In the first place New York State has allowed eighteen year olds to drink for decades. Vermont allows eighteen year olds to drink. Maine allows nineteen year olds to drink. Many southern states have laws which allow the use of beer and wine by eighteen year olds. Eighteen year olds in the military can drink. The fact is, that anyone, with easily obtainable false proof, could drink in Massachusetts bars all along. Remembering high school days, it was a matter of a half hour's searching to find someone to buy beer, wine, or whatever if you wanted it.

When prohibition began in New York City there were 15,000 saloons and bars. When prohibition ended in New York there were 32,000 speakeasies. There is a speakeasy of sorts operating in the area.

But if all the illegality of false ID's, and speakeasies scares an eighteen year old it is still very easy to cross the border and drink in one of our sister states. And then make that long drive back, drowsy if not drunk.

The point is that no law is going to stop people from drinking if they want. This is particularly true of young people, who seem to have a knack for not only doing what they want because they are young, but often overdoing it. An illegal drink in a bar might be someone's subtle way of saying, "screw the establishment and it's laws that try to regulate my free thinking." Some laws must accommodate the will of the people; this is that type of law. And we will go through this whole deal again, with marijuana, before too long.

The fact that alcohol can be abused is a serious one to consider of course. While for the most part alcoholism is a self-destructive disease, it cannot be forgotten that some alcoholics manage to contribute greatly to the world, and although they are alcoholics still function in society.

(Isn't that right Mr. Fitzgerald, and Mr. Faulkner?)

So while it is perfectly possible that someone taking their first legal drink on March first will end up in the gutter, disgusted with themselves and beyond help, it is also possible that through rum-soaked eyeballs they will see the world in a way that no one else sees it, and leave a record of their views for the world to enjoy. But these are extremes and not really indicative of the average person who will handle alcohol in an average manner.

As far as peer pressure forcing dry people to drink, the only way to eliminate the pressure is to eliminate the peers, which is of course a ludicrous proposition. There is as much pressure in dormitories as there is in bars, and whether one is eighteen or twenty-five, the pressure is always there. Whether or not an eighteen year old can think independently is a matter of individual consideration. A law that will protect the susceptible minority who will abuse the new privilege is unfair to the majority who will assume the responsibility without any difficulty at all.

If one really expects to control the morality of people with laws it would seem that laws to control the disgusting rape of our land with neon hamburger stands and shopping center cultures, and wars that make us watch our brothers die for nothing would be the priority. There are probably many people drunk right now because they are absolutely sickened by the way our society is run and how it looks. And they have become so sick that the cocoon of a cocktail or two is where they like the world best. And whether or not they get it in a bar legally at eighteen or from a speakeasy at forty, the unhappiness that makes them want to drink is there, always, and it won't go away by making them wait three more years to drink in a bar. And it won't go away until some genius devises a way to make our world a happier place.

March 1-A Bad Day

March is being hailed as a day of great emancipation by many young people because the lawful drinking age will be lowered to eighteen. To many this seems to be the crowning emblem of adulthood and initiation into a nether world. To an alarming number of people, this event is viewed as more important than the passage of the comprehensive Age of Majority bill being advanced by Senator Olver and others.

The Drinking Age Law is a very bad law, although I doubt that this view is widely held.

It is bad law, in my opinion, becuase it associates the use of a chemical (alcohol) for social, somatic or symptomatic purposes with the age of the body employing it. This legal association suggests that mere age somehow supplies either sound judgment or acquired safeguards against the chemicals less desirable properties. Unfortunately, age has no more to do with the safe employment of alcohol than it does with marijuana, heroin, quaaludes, amphetamines or contraceptives.

Alcohol, like any other chemical substance that can be ingested, has specific properties that have a specific predictable pathology in the human body. As with more ordinary foods, each human body copes with the chemical in its own particular way. Some people cannot cope with alcohol physiologically or psychologically, and others cannot digest carrots or some other food without ill effect.

With alcohol, however, the properties are such that very dramatic and devastating problems can occur for which the most immediate apparent relief is more alcohol (which, in turn, exacerbates the problems). This is one of the many typical variants of alcohol addition. The syndrome is simply that alcohol causes physiological problems for which it is also a symptomatic relief. Part of the relief supplied by alcohol is, obviously, the denial of the problem induced by the narco-euphoria of the alcohol. "What you can't feel, doesn't hurt".

Other problems related to the use of alcohol are social, emotional and psychological probably for the same physiological effects. People who suffer from alcohol lose interest in other activities and tend to become preoccupied with alcohol, its acquisition and ingestion.

In the modern social order there is a considerable pressure upon people to drink either because others are drinking or do drink or because its a time or place to drink. If the chemical substance were an innocuous food, such as perhaps milk, the reasoning would not be totally imperfect. Somehow it seems to me that there is no time nor place nor person that commands me to ingest any substance that will alter my behaviour or judgment. It is simply a matter that I have the right and power to decide without outside influence. Whether you are 18 or 21 or 30 or 45 the option to ingest a substance with the awareness of its probable as well as potential effects belongs to you alone.

Three drinks of practically anything will make you legally unable to drive if taken in one hour. Four or five drinks will have the same legal result over two or three hours because the body dissipates alcohol more slowly than that. This is one measure of how the chemical, alcohol, impairs judgment.

On the other hand, alcohol is a viable social chemical with properties ultimately pleasing to many people. As the damage alcohol can cause has nothing to do with age so the pleasure may accrue to any user. The point is that alcohol has properties which affect people's behaviour. Whether to use it or not is a question for the individual who will be affected. The beneficial and the adverse effects impinge upon the individual using the chemical. Only that person can or should decide whether to use it.

I suggest that before using a new chemical to alter your behaviour, perception or judgment whether for good or for ill that you try to be clear in your mind about what you wish to do. That requires some thoughtful decision-making. It is important to understand that age has nothing to do with drinking except in law. I became an alcoholic in college partly because I didn't think it could happen and partly because I thought that the law somehow made it impossible when I became "old enough to drink." It was a pretty dismal voyage between college and the ten years later that it took for me to understand what had happened. You don't cure alcoholism, as you probably know. You can arrest the illness and you can set to work recovering.

The last impression I wish to create is that there is anything wrong with drinking. It is a perfectly healthy, acceptable activity for some, even most people to enjoy safely. But it is not for everybody and the decision doesn't belong to the public or the law. Its a personal decision.

I hope that everyone who will soon enjoy their first legal drink will, in fact, enjoy it. Once alcohol starts to use you, if that should ever happen, get help.

Rumored And Reported Rapes

To The Editor:

I am becoming very concerned about a recent rash of rumored and reported rapes and assaults, especially in the North Amherst area. The time is coming for those of us who share this concern to pool our ideas and energy to try and find some solution to this problem.

A few suggestions to come to mind. For one thing, the problem of transportation is basic to this issue. Many of us do not own cars and are limited to busses, walking or hitchhiking for transportation. When the Student Senate busses stop running at 5:30 or 6:00 p.m., our options for getting around town are further limited. It does not seem unreasonable that a society that apparently deplores rape and assault might be expected to try to supply some form of safe transportation so that women would not have to choose some less predictable method of travel. If such an organization as the Student Senate or the Town of Amherst will not see their way clear to provide safe public transportation, perhaps we need to work out a system among ourselves. Are there people at this university and in the Amherst area who are serious enough about stopping rape to offer to pick up women who are on campus after an evening of studying, a class, a lecture or a show and drive them home safely? Can we work out some sort of pooling of transportation resources? Or maybe all we need to do is to increase our awareness of the transportation problem. Women hitchhikers have been advised to protect themselves by taking ridgs only from other women. This would be fine except that, in my experience, women drivers just don't pick up any hitchhikers, male or female, with any consistency. Maybe these women who do drive cars will have to be more conscious of the plight of their hitchhiking sister. If we can't help each other, who will help us?

It is generally accepted that for every incident of rape or assault that is reported to the police there are a number that go unreported. Failing to report rape or assault can only contribute to a rise in the number of incidents. As long as that information remains underground, measures against such offenses will not be taken. It is very difficult for a woman to go to the police to report rape especially as such a report must be taken almost immediately after the incident in order to obtain evidence of the rape or assault. This is also a time of high emotionality and extreme confusion for the victim. It would be valuable for a group of concerned citizens to arrange a support group for a 24-hour rape report and assistance for any victims. This could be a telephone, manned or womanned, by people willing to help rape victims in terms of getting them to the police for the necessary testimony as well as help them in their mental and emotional stress. This will take a good deal of pooling of efforts, of course. As a starting point, let me say that anyone needing this kind of help can call me at 549-3626 anytime during the night. This is nowhere near being a sufficient measure but I feel it is a start.

Choosing A Pres.

To The Editor:

Within a few weeks, the student body will be called upon to decide an issue of paramount importance to the future of student government on this campus. A referendum will soon appear before the student body concerning the election procedure to be followed in the choosing of the SGA President. Three choices will be offered:

1) We can choose to follow the present procedure of allowing the Student Senate to elect its own SGA President.

2) We can choose to turn the vote over to ourselves, making the election of the SGA President the responsibility of the student body.

3) We can choose to divide the vote, by means of an electoral system, between the Student Senate and the Area Governments.

I wholeheartedly support the second proposal, that of turning the voting responsibility over to the student body. Proponents of either of the other two choices might argue that it is too much to expect the student body to become sufficiently aware of the candidates and the issues behind the campaigns. They will point to previous referenda and the low turnout which they generated. Nevertheless, I contend that election by the student body would force students to become more aware of the issues before the Student Senate that affect them. In my opinion, such concern would bring back to the Senate some of the contact with students that it has gradually lost as a result of increasing numbers on campus, and increasingly complicated student government procedures.

Regardless of which bill you support, I urge you to vote on the referendum. The required turnout of 25% of the student body presents an issue in itself. Does the student body care enough to choose how it is to be governed? Has the activism and concern of the '60s disappeared?

Part of the Student Senate's problems have arisen out of apathy on the part of the student body as a whole. Campaigns for Student Senate have seldom produced more than the adequate number of contestants to fulfill the positions. This has resulted in a lack of choice for the student body, and thus in an increasingly poor quality of representation. The conflict and debate so necessary for democratic institutions to survive has decreased tremendously. It is up to you and I to halt this decline, this growing sense of removal from sources of government. Voting on the referendum is just one step in this direction, yet it is a beginning.

Good Police Work

To The Editor:

One of the more difficult aspects of being a police officer is that when you are most effective in authentically protecting your community you are unnoticed. This fact makes it very hard to receive recognition for good work. The apprehension of a suspect in the Puffton Village rape and assault case is an example of good police work-the product of long hours and careful attention to detail. It was also performed under awkward pressures. A young special police officer was largely responsible for the arrest and Mr. Doleva, as well as his co-officers, deserve credit for relaxing much of the tension and anxiety that had developed. As with any other profession the quality and performance is not constant. Certainly in this case it was a good and responsible job by the Amherst Police Department.

A Busy Body

To The Editors:

If it is true as the Collegian reported last week that the arrest of the alleged rapist "accounts for all alleged rapes reported in Amherst this year", we can only say that while we suspect that there are busybodies in Amherst, this certainly is the busiest body of them all. Does anyone really believe such a thing?

People We Cannot Forget

To The Editor:

There are at least 35,000 people in the political prisons of South Vietnam. This is about 2% of the population. In the campaign to eliminate and/or pacify any signs of resistance or Communism. Thieu's police are imprisoning hundreds of people at a time. Many are students who have participated in peace-related activities. Many are young women and their children, whose relatives, suspected of anti-government or neutralist leanings, are unavailable for arrest. Many more are old and very sick. More than many have not been told the reason for arrest, and have not had contact with their families for years.

Methods of liquidation of suspects include: 1) the use of contagious disease, 2) decreasing already substandard rations (supplementing rice with plastic grains), and 3) dispersing and torturing those who resist or protest prisoner treatment.

Hundreds of prisoners are put in "tiger cages", stone compartments 5 by 9 feet with 3 prisoners in each (friends of mine are making a replica of such a cage for showing and "test occupations" at UMass.). I urge everyone who has been against the Vietnam war, or who would not want to starve or die of untreated sickness, or who even feels neutral about the situation, to read the material listed below.

I do not claim to be an authority, but from what I have read, I believe that as many Americans as possible should have the chance to decide for themselves what they feel. Our government is supporting these prisons. The imprisoned Vietnamese are like so many of us here. They are students, they are pacifists, children, old women and men. They are being subjected to some of the most inhuman treatment in the world. Please learn more about the plight of people we cannot forget.

Caring For The Forgotten

To The Editor:

Today, medical care for the mentally ill is undergoing a vast change. People are being taken care of throughout patient clinics and other services that keep the patient in the community and responsive to his daily life. Treatment involves teaching people to deal with their problems rather than having them removed. But what about the people who were put away before today's ideas became practice?

Many live and have lived in Northampton State Hospital. These people need the extra help and patience to help them adjust to life again. Many have been in the hospital for several years and the world they knew has changed. The Northampton Volunteers help these people bridge the years and blend into today's life style. You don't need to be a psych major, over 21 or have a UMass ID to get in. All you need is to care for someone who has been forgotten.

This Thursday night, the staff is having a special open house and orientation for new members. A bus will leave Hasbrouck Lab at 6:30 p.m. and Patterson House in Southwest at 6:35 P.M. All are welcome to come to the program and no one will be expected to show up the following week if they choose not to.

Love That Greasy Spoon

To The Editor:

On February 8, Room 802 in the Campus Center was empty. Do you know why? The people of UMass love the dining commons. They don't want transferrability of meal tickets. They don't want quality food. They don't mind dirty silverware. They don't even mind the rip-off price they pay for meal tickets.

The Food Service's Sub Committee met on February 8th and no one came-no one! No one on this "concerned" campus could be bothered to take the time to improve the eating conditions they are so quick to condemn.

We hope that this has been a misunderstanding that can be cleared up easily by you showing your concern tonight at 7 p.m. in Room 177 of the Campus Center.
